"For all of the claims under 'Bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs,' 1871 and prior years, $284,750.22.

"For all of the claims under 'Bounty act of July 28, 1866,' 1880 and prior years, $51,218.56.

"For all of the claims under 'Pay, etc., of the Army,' 1884 and prior years, $14,052.37.

"For all of the claims under 'Commutation of rations of prisoners of war in rebel States, and to sailors on furlough prior to July 1, 1884,' $19,093.19.

"For all of the claims under 'Horses and other property lost in the military service prior to July 1, 1884,' $114,163.65."

Mr. BURNES. I wish to call especial attention of the Committee and of the country to the fact that neither the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives nor the House itself was in default with regard to the presentation or passage of a proper bill for the purposes stated. In proof of it I have had that record read, in order that every gentleman might see how earnestly the House, at least, endeavored to provide for every important interest alluded to in this debate. That bill was passed through the House in ample time to have been fully enacted and made a law.

Sir, I have no word of censure to utter against any gentleman on the other side of the House as to his course on that occasion, because we all united in the tendering of this important measure to the Senate for the benefit of the soldiers; for the purpose of enabling the courts to continue their sessions throughout the year 1887; for the purpose of paying these post-office obligations; providing for the postal service and the extension of the free delivery, including the issue of the legal-tender notes of small denominations, to which my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] had given valuable assistance and close attention. All these things, I say, were provided for in that bill which was sent in due season elsewhere.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. BURNES. Not now, but in a moment. This bill, when it left this House left it freighted with the hopes and expectations of every member that it at least would be enacted into a law. Not one item in that bill was ever objected to by any gentleman either in the conference or upon this floor. Each and every item had the sanction of every one. But notwithstanding all this it was never even considered at the other end of this Capitol, and of course failed to become a law.

It is significant in this connection that the general appropriation bill providing for the executive, legislative, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1888 passed the House after the general deficiency bill had gone through and had been sent to the Senate. It seems there was time enough for that bill to become a law, perhaps because it provided for the payment of our own salaries and those of others. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is it not true these bills, near the close of the short session, were dumped all together upon the Senate, so that it was possible to examine only the most important? Was it not obliged to leave this or some other bill unexamined?

Mr. BURNES. I beg to say to my friend from Maine the usual practice in the Senate is supposed to be to commence the consideration of appropriations in the committee of that body just so soon as the estimates are received, and they come to each House at the same time, so that when the House bills come to them the whole matter will have been studied and understood, so that the work of the committee after the receipt of the bills will be brief and easy. Besides, the Senate committee have the advantage of the work, reports, and debates in the House, which are generally very complete and exhaustive on all important subjects.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But is it not true that they can not all be examined at the same time?

Mr. BURNES. I have already answered the gentleman, I think, but I will simply answer his interrogatory in the affirmative.

A word more. I am not making a general defense of the policy pursued in these matters, although I am prepared to do so on any proper and necessary occasion. While I blame no one here or elsewhere, yet I must state some facts of which the country seems to be ignorant. Now, while there was time to pass the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill, and to have it approved by the President, yet it seems there was neither time to complete nor to have approved the general deficiency bill, nor the special bill we sent to the Senate. While there was not time to pass those bills, it seems there was time enough to take one special item out of the general deficiency bill which failed, and pass it in the shape of a joint resolution through both Houses and send it to the President for his approval. This bill, read in your hearing a moment ago, could not be passed, we are told, but one of the other provisions contained in the bill which failed could be taken out, returned to the House, and sent to the President in time to become the law.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What item does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BURNES. To the appropriation of $25,000 to pay the expenses of certain Senate committees which were incurred in the discharge of some public or outside duty.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What committees?

Mr. BURNES. Committees of the Senate.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Did not this bill go to the Senate as late as the 1st of March, and did not Congress adjourn on the 4th of March?

Mr. BURNES. I believe Congress did adjourn on the 4th of March. The record will show when the bill went to the Senate. It went there before the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill did.

When this bill, with all these appropriations for the postal service, for the benefit of the soldiers, to relieve the courts, went to the Senate, its consideration was objected to by the Senator from Vermont, and yet when a joint resolution containing a provision taken from the deficiency bill then pending, and appropriating $25,000 for the payment of the expenses of certain committees of that body, was presented in the Senate, the Senator from Vermont, after demanding its reading, interposed no objection to its consideration and it became a law.

I do not care about saying anything unkind, and I will not say anything unkind of any one. I see no need of any unpleasantness in this matter. I know we all here did our duty. If the committee did not report the bills to the House in time, my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is as much to blame as any one of us, because we are often indebted to him for his activity and the intelligence and respectability which he lends to the subcommittee on the deficiency bill. [Laughter.] Neither he nor my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] ever fails us.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I would like, with the permission of my friend from Missouri, to make a few remarks on this subject.

Mr. BURNES. I will yield to my colleague on the committee with pleasure.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not appreciate that it is the duty of any man to sit silent here after a bill is brought in at such a late day in the session that it can not be fully considered and passed and receive the Executive approval, and then have a gentleman of the distinguished character and ability of my friend from Missouri lecture this side of the House for any failure on its part in that respect.

The record shows, Mr. Chairman, that this deficiency bill was passed by the House of Representatives on the 1st day of last March, just three days before the adjournment of Congress, having been in the hands and under the control of a majority of this House up to that late hour. It passed the House and was sent over to the other end of the Capitol to be considered. It was reported to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations of that body. I take it that no gentleman will deny the right and duty of the Senate Committee on Appropriations to investigate the items of that bill, which had been held back until the dying hours of the Forty-ninth Congress. That committee considered and reported the bill back to the Senate on the 3d day of March, thus doing in two days' time what it took our Committee on Appropriations practically the three months of the session to accomplish. The Senate then passed the bill on the morning of the 4th of March, the day of adjournment. It will be borne in mind that we were working day and night at the last of the Congress. Then commenced the various conferences upon the appropriation bills.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it will not do for a claim to come from the other side of the House that they can strip that bill of matters of controversy, and force upon the country only those things in the bill about which no controversy could possibly arise, and thus eliminate the elements of the bill which did not meet the approval of the majority of this Chamber.

I say, sir, that if criticism must come, let it come against that custom which has prevailed here of holding appropriation bills back and back, and holding them back again, until it is impossible for the other branch of the National Legislature to give them consideration. It will not do to sustain such a policy as that, and then have the Republican members on this floor arraigned because they do not accept an omnibus proposition which dropped a great many other features of the bill. I do not think that is a proper presentation of the case before this House or the country.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that these appropriation bills might all be brought into this Chamber sooner than they are; and although I am a member of that committee, I say it, and challenge contradiction of any member thereof. If members of the Appropriations Committee would put the industry and energy and work into the appropriation bills early in the session that we have to do towards the close of it, full discussion, investigation, and light might be brought to each and all of these bills, and every member of this body enabled to give intelligent votes upon them. As it is, I submit that this is a proper occasion to condemn the custom which prevails in bringing these bills in at a late hour, and we might as well "talk out in meeting" upon that question now. I care not for what is known as the courtesy of the committee. As a member of that committee, I denounce the custom here and now; and it is due to the members of this body that it should be corrected.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In a few moments. I am reflecting, sir, upon no individual member. Far be it from me to reflect upon my friend from Missouri, who has charge of the present bill—a gentleman for whom I entertain the highest respect and the warmest friendship. But we are all responsible; and I was glad to see the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] introduce an amendment to the rules to bring this matter to the front and compel speedy action.

They say you can not mandamus a committee. Well, if you can not mandamus a committee then I would damn the committee [laughter] with public sentiment and let the committee stand in default, if it must be, before the judgment of their colleagues and the criticisms of the country.

I now yield for a question to my friend from Maine.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Inasmuch as my friend from Iowa seems to be talking out in meeting, I would ask him to inform the House what is the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations in holding these bills back until near the close of the session and then dumping them upon the House.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I discuss facts, and I do not enter into the methods or motives of men. Let the facts be known to the country, and the intelligence of the American people will not fail to supply the motives.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I did not know but that, as my friend from Iowa had started in upon the subject, he was going to give us the whole apocalypse of the question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No; my friend from Maine will always be swift enough to determine for himself the motives that influence members upon this floor.

Mr. BURNES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. I have no disposition to split hairs with gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee as to the question upon whose shoulders the grave responsibility of the defeat of this measure in the last Congress should properly rest. But before the House shall pass upon the question of ordering by a proposed rule some sort of limitation upon the action of the Committee on Appropriations, I beg to call its attention to a few items which concern the Western section of this country particularly. Some $800,000, perhaps less, say half a million, was estimated as the anticipated expense of the postal service in the trans-Missouri country. There have been constructed in the States of Kansas and Nebraska in the past year enough miles of railway to have absorbed this half million or $800,000—about 3,000 miles of railway. To-day members from that section are being appealed to by letter and petition from citizens of that country for some sort of adequate mail accommodations. The Government can not let the contracts for the railroads, or at least can not supply the money when the contracts shall be let. It has no money to carry on the offices, to provide the clerk-hire, the rent, the fuel, and other expenses of carrying on this branch of the business of the Government.

Something like a half a million of dollars, by the failure of this bill, was taken from the pockets of men whose claims had been adjudicated by the auditing officers of the Government, and something like $300,-

000 to $500,000 was taken from the exchequer of the Department of Justice, and so witnesses were compelled to pay their own expenses and traverse that country or the acceptance of the service of the writ was refused, and justice, so far as the administration of it was concerned, languished there.

Mr. BURNES. I wish to suggest to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] that there was nothing in the bill with regard to the transportation of the mails.

Mr. LAIRD. I understand there was nothing in the bill for transportation of the mails, but there was for postal-clerk hire.

If I remember aright it was very near the close of that session when the gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee brought in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. It was on the 1st of March——

Mr. BURNES. It was on the 3d day of February.

Mr. LAIRD. The bill was reported on the 3d day of February, and passed this House on the 1st of March.

Mr. BURNES. The record shows that that bill was reported on the 3d day of February, and it was subject to any motion of the gentleman from Nebraska to call it up. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. LAIRD. The committee had it under its control. It was whispered about that it would be necessary to suspend the rules to pass the great appropriation bill of the Government. There was an attempt to gag it down the throats of the House under a suspension of the rules. Every gentleman remembers that it was whispered about that, in order to get that appropriation bill, containing a million and a half dollars, appropriated in violation of the rules, it would have to be crammed down our throats in that way; and that was the reason why it was not passed sooner, because you had to give it consideration under the rules.

Mr. REED. Perhaps it is easier for a member who did not belong to the Committee on Appropriations to make the appropriate remarks upon this occasion. The candor of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], which just now enabled him to inform the gentleman from Nebraska that any member could undertake charge of this bill when before the House, has not permitted him to state what was the actual condition of affairs connected with this deficiency bill which passed the House under a suspension of the rules.

A general deficiency bill had been passed by the House, and was in conference between the Senate and the House. There were disputes with regard to important matters—disputes which the gentleman from Missouri and his colleagues were unwilling to settle. They were equally unwilling to go before the country with the large number of items which are in this bill unsettled, unless they could make in the presence of the country an apparent movement to settle them. That gentleman having delayed day after day to come to any conclusion in the conference committee on these subjects, and being unwilling to face the country with the rejection of the bills, adopted this arrangement for passing those things which he and his colleagues agreed to and avoiding the things which members in the other branch of the Legislature wished to pass; he adopted this arrangement under the stress of the last days of the session; in other words, instead of being an attempt to pay soldiers what was due to them, it was an attempt to avoid the appearance of being unwilling to pay them. It was an arrangement to avoid a difficulty, instead of a disposition to appropriate for the honest debts of the Government; and enough has been brought out here to-day to enable us to call upon this House to be on the watch hereafter, to see that the legitimate appropriations which are due to pay the debts of the Government shall not be kept away from the creditors of the Government.

The fact has been brought out here that a Democratic House changed the law whereby appropriations were made in advance, so that upon the decisions of the Auditors and their judgments rendered in favor of payment, under the law of the land these claims could be paid, and to-day we are all of us in receipt of letters from men whose claims have been adjudicated months ago, claims which, although they were adjudicated only months ago, were due years and years ago, and have not yet been paid because the Committee on Appropriations have not provided the proper appropriations to enable the Government officers to pay these debts as fast as they are ascertained to be due. And this in the face of abundant money in the Treasury; this in the face of a surplus which we seem to be unable to find out what to do with. I should not allude to this matter if it was merely ancient history, for I am satisfied that the country cares very little about things which are a year old; but it is because of the opportunity to give a warning for the future that I take this occasion to express to the House the actual situation of affairs. A bill had been passed; it was in the conference committee. Gentlemen on the other side were unwilling to pass upon these matters, and sought to avoid it by presenting us, in the last days of the session, with many items which there was no opportunity for the other branch of Congress to consider; yet now they present themselves to the country as the original and urgent movers, and our side as those who were obstructionists, and who prevented these honest debts from being paid. I must say that this seems to me to exceed even the regular courage of the gentleman from Missouri. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has eight minutes of his time remaining. To whom does he yield?

Mr. BURNES. I will first occupy five minutes myself.

Mr. Chairman, I trust it is not necessary at this day that the question of candor between the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and myself should be considered. I have never impugned his candor; he seems to impugn mine. Now, I simply place my assertion against his, and I say that, with all his prophetic vision, with all his wondrous judgment, with all his immense power, he has not divined aright the motives which actuated me or those who served with me on the Appropriations Committee. This for that, and that may settle it. But, sir, if it be necessary to antagonize candor with candor, or the want of it with the want of it, I would ask the gentleman from Maine who it was that repealed the law with regard to the payment of these claims due to soldiers? Was it a Democratic or a Republican Congress? How did that law get changed? Even the Republicans of the country saw that, under a law which authorized a clerk in a Department to audit these claims, innumerable frauds would spring up, and they repealed that law in the Forty-third Congress, in 1874. This for that also.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman desires to be accurate, I am sure?

Mr. BURNES. I do, sir.

Mr. CANNON. The permanent appropriation that had been made for the payment of these claims was repealed, and the practice changed in the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. REED. I relied upon the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who is generally accurate.

Mr. BURNES. My friend from Illinois is mistaken. The repeal was made in the Forty-third Congress. But, no matter about that.

Mr. REED. It is a very serious matter.

Mr. BURNES. But even this I do not impute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] as indicating a want of candor, because the House knows that he is the soul of candor, especially on political propositions. [Laughter.] I attribute it to him rather as a mere act of forgetfulness. It was so easy to assume that this had been done by a Democratic House that it was thought well to consider that it was so done, and so, in that way, without consulting the record, the gentleman has involved himself in this little difficulty.

I now yield my remaining three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, for the purposes of this discussion I will not inquire which side of the House had to do with the repeal of the law which permitted appropriations in advance, in bulk, for the payment of these claims by the auditing officers without review by Congress. The repeal of that law was a right step to take, and the Republican majority, if it originated the change, are to be commended. It had come to be a matter of criticism and scandal that the Government was paying money out of the Treasury in this way and making the auditing officers of the Department practically the legislators of the country instead of the two Houses of Congress.

As to this deficiency bill, I would like to take away the mask and present the real, or other side of the case.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] tells us that a number of soldiers' claims were not paid in consequence of the difficulty in securing an agreement between the two Houses in the conference. That may be true, but, as one of the members of that House, I desire to commend the conferees on the part of the House for their stubborn refusal to permit the carrying through Congress, on the back of the claims of soldiers, of two immense claims, one being the Choctaw claim, amounting to nearly $3,000,000, and the other the Pacific railroads claims, of about two millions; and, if I may be allowed to speak of the reasons why this deficiency bill failed, I could state it was because those two claims were insisted on by the Senate, which caused such delay in its passage through that body as to make its enrollment impossible before the final adjournment.

I want to say a word in addition. I am quite accustomed to this constant scolding which the Committee on Appropriations receives. As one of the members of that committee I have come to be absolutely patient and submissive in this particular. But I feel it my duty here to-day to say that there never has been any member of either side of the House on any Committee on Appropriations on which I have served who has been guilty of an improper motive in retarding appropriation bills; nor have I known any occasion when those bills ever were retarded through a motive other than that which was proper and honorable.

More than once there have come to my notice criticisms directed against some member of the Committee on Appropriations as having used these appropriation bills as a means of preventing legislation on revenue subjects. I wish to say that the rules of the House gave precedence, and still do so, to revenue measures over appropriation bills; so that, in order to have secured consideration of any revenue measure at any time, it was only necessary that a majority vote should bring into operation the rules of the House on the subject. I look this matter right in the face. The reason why revenue measures have not been considered heretofore has been because those which have been reported did not command the support of the majority of the House. That was the sole reason. Do not place the blame on the Committee on Appropriations. It may be attributed to some of the individuals who have occupied places on that committee.

I have felt it proper, Mr. Chairman, to make this statement. I have made it once or twice before; but as this subject is again under discussion I want to say deliberately that at no time, so far as I know, was there ever an improper motive in connection with the management of the business of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent to have read the fifth section of an act approved June 20, 1874, this provision being known as the "covering in act," of which Mr. Garfield was the author.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri having expired, he asks unanimous consent that this section of the law be read. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, and of each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to permanent specific appropriations, appropriations for rivers and harbors, light-houses, fortifications, public buildings, or the pay of the Navy and Marine corps; but the appropriations named in this proviso shall continue available until otherwise ordered by Congress, and this provision shall not apply to any unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the act approved December 21, 1871, for expenses that may be incurred under articles 1 to 9 of the treaty with Great Britain concluded May 8, 1871, which balance the act approved March 3, 1873, authorized to be expended to enable the President to fulfill the stipulations contained in the twentieth, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth articles of said treaty: And provided further, That this section shall not operate to prevent the fulfillment of contracts existing at the date of the passage of this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the beginning of each session, report to Congress, with his annual estimates, any balances of appropriations for specific objects affected by this section that may need to be reappropriated.

Mr. REED. That did not prevent any Congress from making the proper appropriations, and the next Congress, which was Democratic, did not do so.

Mr. BURNES. Under that law the Treasury Department certified these balances for appropriation and repudiated what seemed to have been sanctioned merely as a practice of the Department up to that time. Under the lead of that distinguished man, then a member from Ohio, Mr. Garfield, whose name is associated with this provision (for he brought in the measure), that law was passed to remedy the difficulty. Under that law these estimates, since the passage of that law, have been made and these claims reported to us.

Mr. CANNON. According to my recollection, I am satisfied that the law which the gentleman has had read did not repeal the permanent appropriation which had been made prior to that time for the payment of this particular class of claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman what has been the construction of the Treasury Department from the time of the passage of that act as illustrated in sending in estimates?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that, according to my recollection, estimates are sent in, and these appropriations are required to be made by virtue of legislation had during the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. BURNES. My friend from Illinois will allow me to say that if this is not the law under which we get these estimates and make these appropriations, it is his duty or the duty of the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to show us what law we have with regard to that matter. I say that the law has been so recognized by every Republican and Democratic administration from that day to this. I challenge gentlemen to prove the contrary by citing some other provision of law.

Mr. CANNON. That is the gentleman's assertion.

Mr. BURNES. From a Republican administration the estimates came in under that law at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, a Democratic Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I say again I am satisfied the gentleman is mistaken. But suppose that to be true, does the gentleman approve of the law?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir; I approve of it from the center of my heart.

Mr. CANNON. Right there, then, we have at least an issue. I do not approve it touching this class of claims.

Mr. BURNES. I am satisfied the name of General Garfield is not as influential on the other side as it used to be.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman abounds in general statements. He seeks now to cover the weakness of his position by invoking the memory of Garfield. Garfield was but a man after all, but an eminent one. I admired him when he was a member of this House and voted for him for President. Possibly I can not now commend him that he is dead as strongly as the gentleman from Missouri, yet I stood by him much more closely when he was living than did the gentleman from Missouri. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, but allow me to finish this first. I state again my recollection, as I have not examined it for some time, that the legislation making permanent appropriation to pay soldiers of the late war, providing for the payment of such claims as were audited, was repealed by the Forty-fourth Congress. I may be mistaken about that, but I believe——

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me to complete my sentence before I yield. I may be mistaken; I have been mistaken frequently. I am not mistaken in one thing, however, and that is, from that time to this I have time and again sought to have that law re-enacted or enacted anew, if that will suit the gentleman better, making a permanent appropriation for the payment of this class of claims as they are audited. Whether the gentleman is right or I am right I stand here to-day and will stand here and so will this side of the House—I think I can speak for it in this instance—throughout the balance of this Congress ready to change the existing law so as to give each creditor of the class referred to the money promptly which the Democratic auditing officers of the Treasury, officers belonging to the gentleman's own party, find to be due to him. But the gentleman from Missouri says he will not unite with me in such legislation. Therefore the question as to who is to blame for the repeal cuts no figure. The only question is, shall these claimants be paid peaceably?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is it not true that not one of these accounts has been thrown out of the Appropriations Committee in the last three Congresses?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is not that true?

Mr. CANNON. No; it is not true. During the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] had charge of a similar deficiency bill, and in preparation of the same he ran his pencil through one-half of this class of claims. When I made an effort and moved an amendment in the Committee of the Whole House to provide for them, he opposed it; hour after hour and day after day he fought against putting them into the bill. He was sustained by his side of the House and the appropriation was not made for them during that session.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Have they not been appropriated for since?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; they were appropriated for the next session, but not for over a year after they were audited, and twenty years after they were in fact due.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is what I wish to bring to the attention of the House; that if fraud has been committed, the present system works delay and does not expose that fraud. That is what I wish to get before the House.

Mr. BURNES rose.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to the gentleman such time as he wishes, holding the floor myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois as having the floor for one hour.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri as much time as he wishes.

Mr. BURNES. I rise for the purpose of correcting a statement of my esteemed friend from Illinois, and I am quite sure he wishes to be accurate in what he says.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BURNES. I assert, and it is assertion against assertion, the record shows that since I have been on the committee more than $100,000 of improper claims in the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations have been detected and rejected.

Mr. CANNON. This class of claims?

Mr. BURNES. Claims for horses lost in the service.

Mr. CANNON. For horses claimed to have been lost in the service?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, under that title——

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman does not want a wrong impression to go to the country.

Mr. BURNES. I do not.

Mr. CANNON. And he and I can not afford to seek to obscure the fact with general statements. I ask him again if every claim that has been certified for horses lost, in fact—lost by individuals—in the class of claims to which he refers, has not been appropriated for?

Mr. BURNES. Every claim certified up for one horse, or perhaps for two horses, lost by soldiers, has been found correct and appropriated for. But the gentleman will understand me: every item of that class audited by the same Department, sent up in the same document, holding a place alongside of meritorious claims, has not been paid.

Mr. CANNON. But those items were not for horses, in fact?

Mr. BURNES. No, they were not for horses.

Mr. CANNON. That is just it.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman from Illinois remembers the cases, I am sure. They aggregated nearly $100,000, and were certified to Congress along with individual claims of soldiers for horses lost in the service, and under the general title of "horses and other property lost in the military service." Upon investigation and examination of the papers in the cases it was developed that the allowances were in fact to certain insurance companies for steamboats destroyed while in the service of the Government. The insurance companies having made good the losses to the owners, sought to hold the Government liable to them for their losses, and obtained a settlement by the accounting officers of the Treasury to that effect.

The Committee on Appropriations and the House did not regard these claims as just, notwithstanding the Treasury settlement, and refused to appropriate for them. Mr. Maynard, recently Second Comptroller of the Treasury, re-examined these cases and reported against them during the last Congress in House, Executive Document 210, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, thus justifying the action of the committee and the House in refusing the appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Resuming the floor for a moment only, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that it is true, whether right or wrong, that the Committee on Appropriations has failed to recommend—and I want to be entirely frank about this—some items that have been certified from the Treasury Department for transportation. But it is not true, according to my recollection, that they have failed in the end to recommend appropriations for every item claimed of the class of which I have been speaking.

Now, sir, having said that much, I want to add one thing in reply to what was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. He said that the true matter at issue, which caused the failure of the deficiency bill at the close of the last Congress, was the matter touching certain claims known, one of them as the "Choctaw claim," and the other as the "Pacific railway claims." I believe these items were in controversy in the conference. I believe the Senate receded upon both items, at least I did not find them in the conference report as it was written up. But let that be as it may, the gentleman can stand, if he chooses, upon that ground. Let us examine the question.

What was the Choctaw claim? This Congress, or another Congress, the one before the last, a Democratic House and a Republican Senate, passed a bill allowing the Choctaw Nation to go into the courts of the United States—the Court of Claims—and establish a claim they had presented, if they could, a claim that had been due for nearly two generations, as they alleged.

The Choctaw Nation did go into the Court of Claims; an appeal was prosecuted from the findings of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court, after a full hearing, ordered judgment to be rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Choctaw Nation for something over $2,000,000. That finding stands as an unpaid judgment of the Court of Claims, approved and directed by the Supreme Court of the United States, to this day. It has been unpaid and bears interest.

Now, then, it is true that the House committee refused to allow an item appropriating for that judgment. The Treasury full of money; the Democratic party and its Executive not knowing how to get rid of it, as they say; yet here is a claim in this condition of affairs bearing interest—a judgment of the highest court of the land—which is not included in the appropriation bill.

I yield now to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add only a word to the subject under discussion. The House has not been considering the bill we are about to pass, but we have been talking for nearly two hours about the bill we ought to have passed last year and are all sorry we did not pass.

Various reasons are given here why that bill did not pass, and therefore I shall not depart from the thread of the discussion to assign any reasons why this bill should pass. It is in substance the same, as has been said, which was agreed upon by the conference committee in the closing hours of the last Congress.

Gentlemen on this side of the House tell the new Congress that this bill and other bills failed to pass in the last Congress because of the fault of the Senate. Other gentlemen say that it was the fault of the Committee on Appropriations in this House. We have heard and will hear again this sort of talk time and again during the session as a substitute for some resolute plan and policy of settling the problem of the surplus advocated by a united Democratic majority. Gentlemen who have in vain urged upon their fellow-Democrats, upon the majority of this House, a proposition which uniformly failed to command a majority of the governing body here, raise every now and then a vigorous cry against the great Pennsylvanian [Mr. RANDALL], and proclaim him as terrible as an army with banners, and more potent than forty, or even eighty, Democratic majority in this House. They have commenced again their habit of holding him up as an excuse for not passing a revenue bill. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has, in a sentence, disposed of that pretext when he says that by a majority vote of this House at any day, in either preceding Congress, the majority could have taken up a measure for the lessening of surplus revenue. The labor and business interests of this country will no longer excuse the majority for doing nothing by their own helplessness and discord.

Why, Mr. Speaker, while these gentlemen were talking I recurred to a list of the appropriation bills of last session and their stages of progression through this House. I do not mean to inflict it on the members here by reading it. It is a significant fact that while there were in the last short session of the Forty-ninth Congress but forty-eight working days there were on the Calendar a dozen appropriation bills at one time—that this Democratic House, with 40 majority, for twenty-three days out of the forty-eight did not consider or attempt to consider a single one of the appropriation bills in the last short session.

This Fiftieth Congress is now here. We have now reached the 11th of January. More than thirty days of this Congress have passed, and no bill of a public nature has been passed; no business has been done by this House or by the Democratic majority in this body. The bottom trouble in this House in the last Congress, in the one before that, and it seems that it will be the same in the coming history of this House—the bottom trouble is with the Democratic majority, which is inert and helpless, rather than with any committee, and the leaders seek to hide the incapacity of the Democratic House for affirmative legislation by specially berating the Appropriations Committee. It is the same old scape-goat for the same old sin of business incapacity.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I am frank to say that former appropriation bills and all appropriation bills ought to be more rapidly put before the House; but in fact in the last session for twenty-three days the House refused to consider a single appropriation bill; and now more than thirty days have passed of this Congress, and nothing has been done. To find a scape-goat may be pleasant to the feelings of members and individual constituencies, but the burden is really on the majority of this House itself by reason of its incapacity to speedily and orderly consider the business.

What was the cause last year of these bills being piled on the Calendar? It was not only that they came in too slow, but even more that this House considered them all too slow, so that six of the appropriation bills were passed in the last hours of the session, most of them under a suspension of the rules, some of them enrolled at a late hour on the very last day.

My distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] on the 3d of March introduced a bill which was read late in the night-time, within a few hours of adjournment. I then predicted on this floor, and there was no credit due me for the prophecy, that that bill could not possibly pass; and it did die because it came in on the last day, and of course could not have any consideration by the Senators, already overwhelmed with our belated appropriation bills which this Democratic House had dumped on their heads.

When we take up in this Congress this appropriation bill we find that the contested items of the Choctaw claim and the Pacific railroads claim—and I, as one member on this side of the House, along with many of my fellows, strenuously opposed then and oppose now these Pacific railway claims—we find that those items are omitted.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] errs, therefore, when he says these claims delayed the passage of the deficiency bill. Those were not the things which prevented the passage of the bill by the Senate. It was the long delay of the Appropriations Committee, added to the chronic, and, it seems to me, the characteristic delay of a Democratic majority, and when, on the morning of the 4th of March, our conference committee, of which I was a member, had agreed upon a bill which omitted these very items, the last circumstance of delay was that the President of this nation had departed from the custom of all who had gone before him, and had notified Congress and the conferences that he was too high to follow the path trodden by Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Grant, for in advance he refused to come to the Capitol, and when he did surrender, it was too late for the clerk to enroll and for the President to sign the bill. It was the combined delay of the Democratic Appropriations Committee of the Democratic majority in this House, and again in control here, and, as the final capstone, the delay of the President himself, ill judged and too slowly retrieved at mid day on March 4, 1887, which caused all this confusion in the Departments, now loudly complained of by the failure of this deficiency bill for 1887, now about to pass in 1888. Now, let us take up this bill, so that the Departments and courts crippled for a whole year, so that the soldiers and other claimants here provided for may get the money long due them. Let us do this and talk no more about it.

Mr. BURNES. I now call for the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read the following:

ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Silver certificates and legal-tender notes: For printing and finishing additional silver certificates and legal-tender notes of the denominations of one and two dollars, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, to be expended as follows: Under the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, for compensation of employés, $6,000; for plate-printing, $28,000; for materials and miscellaneous expenses, $12,000; under the office of the Treasurer of the United States, for materials needed in sealing and separating United States securities, $500; for salaries for additional pressmen, feeders, and separators, $3,300; in all, $49,800; and the number of plate-printers and printers' assistants may, on the passage of this act, be increased to the number provided for in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. BURNES. On information received directly from the Treasury Department and from the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, I am instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4 strike out all after "dollars," in line 11, down to and including line 15, and in lieu thereof insert:

"And the number of plate-printers and plate-printers' assistants may, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be increased to two hundred and two hundred and thirty, respectively."

Mr. BURNES. I wish to say only with regard to this proposition, that the necessity for engraving larger amounts than usual of internal-revenue certificates has made it necessary to give the Bureau of Printing and Engraving an additional force; increasing it from one hundred and eighty-seven and one hundred and eighty-eight to the numbers stated, two hundred and two hundred and thirty.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to add, also, that the estimates by this bureau were given in full in the original act.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] cited a law which I would like to have him explain as to its bearings. I made the statement that the Democratic House of the Forty-fourth Congress was responsible for the change which was made. It is true that I made that statement upon the authority of the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Missouri in reply has read a statute which he says prevents the line of action that I suggested ought to be continued. I shall quote from that statute a single sentence, omitting the provisos, which have no bearing upon this question. I expressed my opinion with regard to it as soon as I heard it read; but it was met with some incredulity on the part of the gentleman from Missouri, and it is possible his incredulity may be well founded.

But upon examination of the statute I am utterly unable to see how it can prevent Congress from doing what I have suggested. The language of the statute is that "from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, and of each year thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury." Now, how it is possible for that provision to prevent this House from appropriating a sum to be applied to the payment of these debts as they are adjudicated by the officers of the Government I am unable to see. We appropriate in every Congress sums to be expended in payment for printing, the amount of which can not be accurately calculated in advance, and so for many other purposes of the Government. How this law prevents such action on the part of Congress I am quite unable to see, and I hope the gentleman will explain it, because if I have stated the law incorrectly, no matter how good authority I may have had, it is my duty to withdraw the statement.

Mr. BURNES. As a matter of course, Mr. Chairman, it is competent for Congress to do that which the gentleman suggests, but it is scarcely profitable for him and myself now to discuss this question of law further than we have discussed it. I simply speak from experience and observation when I say that under this law the Treasury Department has been making these estimates for special annual appropriations. I know of no other law under which, in either the Forty-fourth or the Forty-fifth Congress, such estimates were made, and I apprehend that the gentleman will find it has been under the construction put upon this statute, which we need not now discuss. If the construction is wrong, then the gentleman is right. If the construction is right, then I am right; but I think we had probably better examine this law question "off horseback."

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, it is of very little consequence, of course, whether I have made an error upon a given subject or not, but it is of some consequence whether I have stated to the House what is not so, having the means of information. Now, it seems to me, and I submit to the House, that this act was intended for a particular purpose, which I will state. I speak solely from the language of the act, because it was passed before my time here. I think the purpose was to prevent the use by the officers of the Government of unexpended balances of appropriations actually made, and to cause the appropriation of a year to be confined to the year. If, under that use of unexpended balances, the Treasury Department was in the habit of paying claims like these, and they were cut off from that righteous and proper work—for there can be no more proper and righteous act than to pay the debts of the Government, ascertained by the proper tribunals—if, I say, the Department officials were cut off by this act from using unexpended balances for that purpose, it then became the duty of the first Congress under which this act was in operation to provide for the changed condition of things; in other words, to make direct, estimated appropriations for paying the debts of the Government upon precisely the same basis and in the same manner that estimates and appropriations are made to pay the approaching contingent printing expenses of the Government. If that be so, the situation remains precisely where I said it was, and the argument which I addressed to the House loses none of its force.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, strike out all after "dollars," in line 11, down to and including line 15, and insert "and the number of plate printers and plate printers' assistants may, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be increased to two hundred and two hundred and thirty, respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mail depredations and post-office inspectors: For fees to United States marshals, attorneys, and the necessary incidental expenses connected therewith, $1,104.50, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886.

Mr. VANDEVER. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"For defraying expenses and accrued deficiencies in the mail service at post-offices in Southern California, as the Postmaster-General may direct, for the year ending June 30, 1887, $100,000."

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment, that it is not the subject of any estimate and does not come before us in any regular way. We do not know officially that there is any such deficiency. It does not so appear, nor does it appear that there is any law for this service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER] on the point of order.

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Chairman, I fail to see the point of order suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, but I desire to say that I regard this case as somewhat exceptional. It is a proposition to provide for a deficiency which exists in the postal service in certain portions of Southern California, where the population has been pouring in at such an unprecedented rate that since the last regular appropriation for postal service there the work has quadrupled in every one of the leading post-offices, and to-day the receipts from those offices are four times in excess of the expenditures. In Los Angeles, in Santiago, in Pasadena, in San Luis Obispo, in half a dozen of the larger places in Southern California the inadequacy of the postal service constitutes to-day an almost insufferable grievance. If you go any day to any one of those post-offices you will find long lines of persons standing from morning until night waiting their turn to receive their mail matter, and sometimes, after remaining there for hours, they are turned away with the statement that there is still a large amount of mail matter that has not been distributed.

To some extent that has been the case for years, so that down to the close of the fiscal year 1887 the postmasters of those post-offices were obliged to pay out of their own salaries for competent assistants, and the people of the locality were obliged to supplement the allowances made in the regular appropriation bills for that service by moneys subscribed to pay the cost of additional clerk-hire. The gas bills, the water bills, and other necessary expenses of those offices have gone unliquidated to this day, and the Postmaster-General informs me that he has no fund at his disposal to pay them. Nor has he any fund at his disposal under the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, that will enable him to meet these necessary expenses, and it is with his assent and approval that I make this proposition in the House to-day. There has been no opportunity of presenting this matter to the committee. In fact, as to the post-office at Santiago, when the new postmaster came into office there he found a large mass of mail matter that had accumulated and come over to him from the previous postmaster. In order to get rid of this vast accumulation of mail matter he loaded it upon wagons; and four wagon-loads of it were hauled to the dump in the bay, this course being necessary in order to make room in the office for the handling of the current mails.

This is the condition of the public service in that portion of the country. I trust, therefore, that the gentleman from Missouri will not object to the insertion of the provision I have submitted inasmuch as it proposes to cover the expenses which have already been necessarily incurred, and to permit the Postmaster-General in his discretion to apply the remedy. Of course it will be necessary to present this subject in the regular appropriation bill or in the deficiency bill which may be presented hereafter; but this is an appropriate time for calling the attention of this House to the inefficency of the postal service in that region. The present condition of affairs in these post-offices in Southern California is not due, I am free to say, to any fault of the Post-Office Department, but is owing to the failure of Congress to foresee the increased appropriations which would be required by reason of the great influx of population into that country, which is almost phenomenal, as any gentleman who has recently visited Southern California can not fail to appreciate. I think there are gentlemen on this floor who from their own personal observation can corroborate the statements I now make. I therefore ask the gentleman from Missouri to consent to the insertion of this amendment in the present bill, so as to provide for a great public necessity and give to the people of Southern California the postal conveniences to which they are entitled.

Mr. CASWELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES].

Mr. CASWELL. I hope the gentleman will allow me a moment to make an explanation.

Mr. BURNES. I yield to the gentleman, reserving the point of order.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to corroborate by my testimony the statements which have been made by the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER]. Just previous to the beginning of this session I visited the portion of country to which he has referred and witnessed the condition of things which he has detailed. In the city of San Diego I was obliged to wait five days for the distribution of mail matter which I should have received on the day of its arrival. I found the citizens of that place were contributing $5 and $10 a month each in order to assist in supplying the needed clerk-hire for transacting the business of that post-office. Such was the condition of affairs coming under my direct observation that I felt compelled as a disinterested party to write to the Postmaster-General informing him of the immense amount of mail matter which was piled in the middle of the floor at that office awaiting distribution, and not distributed promptly because of the insufficient clerical force. I was informed by the postmaster that he expended every dollar of his salary in hiring clerks to distribute the mail matter, and that the office was then earning at the rate of $37,000 a year; yet he was allowed only the trifling sum of $2,300 for clerk-hire.

There is no necessity for such a state of things; and if this House understood the true situation of affairs, not only in San Diego, but in Pasadena, Los Angeles, and at other points in Southern California, an appropriation would be immediately made in this urgency deficiency bill to give those offices the force which the public business requires. I am informed that fifty thousand people have recently gone into the southern portion of California, so that post-offices which were previously well supplied with clerical force are now inundated with the influx of mail matter which follows this immigration. There is an urgent demand that we should make an appropriation to supply the necessary service for these offices.

Mr. STRUBLE. With the indulgence of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], I would like to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is pending.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to be heard on the same basis of courtesy which has been extended to other gentlemen.

Mr. BURNES. Reserving the point of order, I have no objection to the gentleman proceeding.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Chairman, from the town and vicinity in which I live have gone to Southern California during the last year about twenty of our prominent citizens, and within the last thirty days I have received from a number of them a telegram, and from a representative man among them two letters, presenting to me the state of the postal business at one place, Pasadena, and appealing to me to confer with the gentleman from California in front of me [Mr. VANDEVER], in order to effect, if possible, by application to the Post-Office Department, an arrangement whereby the inconveniences which the public now suffer at that office may be remedied by an order of the Department.

It seems to me, sir, it ought not to be expected that the citizens of any community in this country should put their hands in their pockets in order to assist in paying necessary expenses pertaining to the administration of the Post-Office Department in any part of the country; the Government with its immense surplus is amply able to pay such and to relieve an existing emergency. There are thousands of people congregating in these cities—many as permanent residents, others for temporary sojourn—and why should not the Congress of the United States, upon such a presentation as has been made to-day, recognize the emergency of the situation and deal fairly and liberally with that section of country? They are certainly entitled to send and receive mail promptly and without such delays as they are now suffering, or any individual contribution to such unusual expense as may be necessary to facilitate ordinary mail conveniences. I hope my friend from Missouri will not insist upon his point of order, but allow the House, upon the statements of fact made by the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] to vote upon the proposition which the gentleman from California has submitted.

Mr. BURNES. I would not insist on the point of order if it were not so clearly apparent that it would be impossible for us to remedy the grievances complained of without assistance from the Post-Office Department, without official estimates and information, and without due consideration of the subject in the committee. I trust, therefore, I shall be excused for insisting on the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to yield to me for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. BURNES. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations this question: whether the point is made that this amendment is subject to the point of order simply because it has not been submitted to the committee, and if so, under what rule is it made?

Mr. BURNES. I will answer my esteemed friend from New Jersey that we have a general law providing for the regulation of this entire service, and this amendment, if adopted, would have the effect to extend the existing method of appropriating money under that law. It is not in order because it is not in accordance with the present law, but, on the contrary, is in direct conflict with it, and in making new law——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order, as the amendment is not a deficiency within the legislative meaning of that term. There is no estimate for it, nor any law contemplating such action. The amendment is therefore ruled out.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to call attention of the House to the fact we find in the appropriation bill of last year some provisions which were under consideration by the last House not included in this bill. For instance, there was an item of $50,000 for fees and expenses of marshals, with a proviso, which I do not find in this bill. Why is it left out of the present bill? What necessity was there for that appropriation then which does not exist now? I inquire as a matter of information simply.

Mr. BURNES. I will answer the gentleman from Arkansas. Since that bill was under consideration by the last House the Department has sent in new estimates, including only those which experience has demonstrated to be now necessary to carry out the law and provide for the exigencies of the public service. We have, of course, followed the estimates and recommendations of the Department in that regard.

Mr. ROGERS. What provision is there in this bill as a substitute for the one contained in the bill of last year, and to which I have referred?

Mr. BURNES. There is no provision made in this bill, because there was no estimate or recommendation under that head.

Mr. ROGERS. Do I understand the estimates upon which this bill is based take the place of the estimates upon which the previous bill was made up?

Mr. BURNES. This bill was intended to cover every important item in the other bill under the estimates of the Department. It only omits such items which, by the lapse of time or for other reasons satisfactory to the Department, have not been estimated for.

Mr. ROGERS. That is not sufficiently explicit. This bill does not touch the subject at all of the appropriation to which I have referred, of $50,000 for fees and expenses of marshals, included in the bill of the last House. Now, why is that omitted while other provisions of the bill last year are included? Why should that be omitted while forty other provisions of the last bill are included? Why does this bill strike that out and leave the others in?

Mr. BURNES. According to the estimates of the Treasury Department it did not seem to be required, and therefore was omitted.

Mr. ROGERS. I think you are mistaken as to that.

Mr. BURNES. We are advised there is money enough in the hands of the United States marshals for all purposes, and it only requires the marshaling of the assets they have on hand to pay everything which may be due. Some marshals have too much, others too little, and when matters come to be adjusted no deficiency will exist for which appropriation is needed. Therefore, perhaps, no estimate has been made at this session and no provision has been included in this bill. It has been nearly a year since the bill was under consideration in the last House, and since then settlements have been made.

I will read, for the information of the gentleman from Missouri, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury inclosing the estimates and recommendations upon which the present bill is founded:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 21, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith revised estimates of deficiencies in appropriations required by the various Departments of the Government to complete the service of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and of prior years, for which no provision was made by the Forty-ninth Congress, amounting to $5,580,978.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. ROGERS. Where did you get the basis for the item in the former bill?

Mr. BURNES. From the estimate submitted during the last year.

Mr. ROGERS. Why do you strike it out of this bill when it was included in the last bill?

Mr. BURNES. Because no estimate came for it to us this year, and we naturally inferred that in adjusting the estimates and allowances to the various marshals the sums found due by the Government in 1886 had been satisfied and paid.

Mr. RANDALL. Since then, the Department having repossessed itself of balances on hand, had been able to pay what was due. As no appropriation was required on this account, of course the Department submitted no estimate to the committee for any.

Mr. BURNES. And as no estimate or recommendation was made by the Department, we have not included any appropriation in this bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman from Missouri why it is that this bill does not include many items embraced in the bill of last year? Does it not omit one-half of the items embraced in the bill of a year ago?

Mr. BURNES. No, I think not.

Mr. ROGERS. I have one observation to make, with the permission of my friend from Missouri. We had the same explanation made to us last year about this marshaling of assets. I took occasion then to go to the Treasury Department and make some inquiries.

I undertake to say, as a matter of fact, if you could go out and institute suits to recover balances in the hands of defaulting marshals you would not get much. I take it we are not to look to recover amounts due by defaulting marshals for the purpose of providing for the expenses of the Government. I know from practical experience of them that defaulting marshals and their securities are wholly worthless, and that the Government will never recover from them anything while the sun rises and sets. So I do not think the gentleman's explanation is of the slightest value or use in the discussion of this question.

What I wish to know, if possible, is whether the Committee on Appropriations has received any information from the Department of Justice or the Treasury Department, which has not been embraced in this report, to show why the provision of the last bill was not included in the present bill. If it was necessary then, and has not been provided for since, it occurs to me this same item should go into the present bill. In my judgment we have not sufficiently explicit information upon which to act.

Mr. RANDALL. The Department not having sent in an estimate for that item at the present session of Congress, and not having made any recommendation in that behalf, as it has done in other instances, the committee have naturally concluded it was not required.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the gentleman is mistaken. Of course I have not had the opportunity, not seeing the bill until this morning, to compare the items embraced, but from a cursory examination, hastily made, I think the gentleman will find many items in this bill not included in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. Therefore I made the inquiry why one is included and another is left out. Unless they have some information extraneous to this report, I am not prepared, under the circumstances, to pass the matter, as it occurs to me we should have some reasonable explanation why certain provisions are omitted from this bill while others included in the last bill are again included in this.

That no part of any appropriation made for judicial expenses of the United States shall be paid or in any way allowed to any civil officer who has neglected or shall neglect to make his emolument return under section 833, Revised Statutes, in such manner as the Attorney-General shall direct; and the Attorney-General is hereby forbidden to approve for payment any account of such officer for fees and earnings, unless he is satisfied that the officer has faithfully accounted in his emolument return for all official earnings of whatever form or character that he thinks should be included in the return, and that for making dockets and indexes, taxing costs, and all other services on the trial, argument, or hearing of a question of personal privilege wherein a decision is rendered the fee shall be $3.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon this provision that it is new legislation, not only in reference to several existing provisions of law, but it is in violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. BURNES. I ask my friend from Massachusetts to reserve the point of order until the proviso is perfected.

Mr. COLLINS. Very well.

Mr. BURNES. In lines 16 and 17 of this provision I am instructed to move to strike out the words "he thinks," and insert in lieu thereof "the Attorney-General may determine."

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the adoption of the amendment alters the essence of the proviso or so changes it as to modify the objection I have already made to it. The statute provides very plainly what the attorneys, marshals, commissioners, and other civil officers shall do and how they shall make their returns to the Department; and these various statutes have been interpreted by every court in the Union.

Now, this proposed provision not only does not relate to any statutes now in force, but it proposes to change them fundamentally; and in addition to changing the statutes it vests in the Attorney-General the power in his discretion or caprice, if you will, to determine what the law is.

The most dangerous power, I believe, that can be vested in any executive officer of the Govenment is to permit him to determine not only what is the law, but what are the facts. It is not that these officers, according to this provision, shall be obliged to make returns according to law, but if this be adopted they are obliged to make them in such manner as the Attorney-General shall direct; and not only that, but the Attorney-General shall determine other questions bearing upon the execution of their duties before their returns can be received according to law. His direction is to be according to his caprice, his judgment, or his understanding, and not as the law directs.

Now, this may be a very good provision, but if it be good to incorporate it into the statute as a change of law, it should be done in a proper way—deliberately, carefully considered—every element, both as to law and to fact, taken into consideration. That has not been done here, and if this provision be not in violation of the rules of this House, forbidding the interjection of any legislation changing existing law in an appropriation bill, then the rule is meaningless and is absolutely without avail.

Mr. KERR. Let me ask if the same objection will not apply to the last clause in the fourteenth line on page 5?

Mr. RYAN. It is too late to make that point now as we have passed beyond it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is too late to go back to that provision. It could only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURNES. I can only offer in opposition to the position taken by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts the statement that this appropriates certain money for the payment of certain Government officers; and the provision which he calls in question is simply a limitation put upon the appropriation. I am certainly apprised of the fact that the point has been sometimes in the past determined here that it was competent for the House or Committee of the Whole to put a limitation upon an appropriation of money, because it was a proper thing that the Congress which provided the appropriation should also say how it should be expended even if it involved a repeal of an existing statute.

The necessity for this proviso has been made manifest to the Attorney-General, and this provision was sent to the committee by him. He says that great losses of public money are occurring because of the want of such a provision of law, and that if this proviso is incorporated into the bill it would compel the clerks of courts to account for certain moneys they received.

One thing more only. I do not wish to argue the merits of the question at all. My friend from Massachusetts alludes to the action or possible action of the Attorney-General as likely to be capricious, or, at least, that this places it within his power to have officers conform to his own will. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that is the trouble in this case exactly that is designed to be remedied here.

But it is not applicable to the Attorney-General, but in many cases to the judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States. These fees which are claimed by the clerks as private fees, and which are not accounted for, are in many cases going to clerks who bear the most intimate relations, either by blood or marriage, with the judges themselves. Hence the necessity for it. I do not care particularly, however, myself.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this is not merely a limitation of this appropriation, but if the committee will suffer me to call its attention a little closer to the language, I assert that it is a repeal of existing law and is not confined to this appropriation under the deficiency bill. If it becomes a part of this bill and passes into law it becomes a permanent provision of law.

It starts out by saying that no part of any appropriation made for judicial expenses—no matter when made, now or hereafter—shall be applicable to pay men who have earned their fees according to law, if the Attorney-General does not think it ought to be done. Now, if that is not a permanent change of law I must confess I do not understand the meaning of English words. I shall not undertake to argue the merits of the question. There may be, or there may not be, merit in the change; but the Judiciary Committee is the one to take up and ascertain the mischiefs to be remedied and the statute to be applied, if it be necessary to apply any. This is not the way to make law here, and the rules of the House prohibit it.

Mr. RYAN. This legislation does not merely operate as a limitation upon the expenditure of the moneys appropriated by this bill. You will observe that the language is:

That no part of any appropriation made for judicial expenses of the United States shall be paid, etc.

It applies to all appropriations now being made or that may be made hereafter. It is, in other words, permanent law, and goes into the statute-book as permanent law, and, as has been stated, it repeals provisions of existing law.

The law provides at present what fees shall be returned in the emolument returns of certain officers. This provides that all civil officers shall make the returns provided for in section 833 of the Revised Statutes. Another provision of law, section 834, excepts certain civil officers to a certain extent from the operation of that section, and to that extent this is a repealing proposition. Besides, it clothes the Attorney-General with the power of determining for himself what ought to be contained in an emolument return, regardless of the decision of any court in the United States. No matter what the courts may have decided on the subject, no matter what they have determined ought to be in the emolument return of an officer, still, notwithstanding such decision, this proposition clothes the Attorney-General with the power of overruling the court and determining for himself what ought to be and what ought not to be in that return. It is subject to the caprice of an Attorney-General, who may make it more or who may make it less. He may determine that the emolument return shall contain compensation for certain services or that it may not, and in that way regulate for himself what shall go to make up the maximum of the compensation that an officer shall receive and the amount that he shall return into the Treasury of the United States.

It makes his caprice a law, and his caprice may be one thing one day and another thing another day; but if his digestion will enable him to maintain uniformity in that respect his successor may rule very differently upon it, so that there shall be no permanent rule whatever.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Kansas, whether he fairly states the attitude of the Attorney-General? The Attorney-General places this enactment upon the ground that every dollar of emolument received for any purpose whatever by an officer of the court shall be reported to the Attorney-General.

Mr. RYAN. I will say in reply to the remark by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the courts of the country have already decided what ought to go into an emolument return, and it is the duty of the Attorney-General simply to respect the law. You undertake to legislate here that he shall not respect the law, but be a law unto himself.

Mr. RANDALL. What we want to provide, if we can get an opportunity, is that every dollar which is taken by an officer of the court as an emolument shall be reported to the Government of the United States.

Mr. RYAN. I have no doubt that is the object; and if that is the object, as it certainly is——

Mr. RANDALL. You approve of it?

Mr. RYAN. Yes. I will approve it when it goes before the Judiciary Committee and is properly considered, so that it does not do more than we want to do or less than we want to do. I will favor it if it has that object, and that alone, in view. But if that be the purpose, then there is no question at all about the duty of the Chair in this matter, for then it is admitted this paragraph does repeal existing law.

I want also to call the attention of the Chair to the last clause of the proposition, which provides $3 as compensation for certain services. There is no law to-day for that service, so that here is unquestionably new legislation in violation of the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. By Rule XXI, third section, it is provided:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill, or any amendment thereto.

The Chair holds that though this may be a limitation on the expenditure, nevertheless it is in the nature of new legislation in some respects, and changes existing law very materially in other respects. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The Chair understands the point of order to be made on the whole paragraph.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes; from line 7 to line 20, inclusive.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

That the Clerk of the House be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay to Edwin L. Jewell the salary provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved July 31, 1886, for one assistant index clerk during the session and three months after its close, from December 6, 1886, to January 15, 1887.

Mr. GAY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 of page 36, insert, after the word "to," the words "the heirs of;" so that it will read: "pay to the heirs of Edwin L. Jewell."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

To pay the sum of $71.25 each to J. A. Patterson, John T. Whitaker, W. E. Miller, and John Talbert; $21.75 each to John A. Bayly and A. M. Sprague; $21 to R. W. Simmons; $6.75 each to Russell Barnes and A. R. Hilton; and $4.50 to J. R. Francis, for services performed by them as employés of the Government Printing Office; in all, $367.50.

Mr. BURNES. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move the insertion at this place of a provision which was in the original bill and which was left out in the preparation of this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVERS IMPROVEMENT.

For payment of judgments and awards recovered against the United States for flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, and reported to Congress by the Attorney-General in Senate Executive Document 94, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, as follows: John Glatz, $112.50; Andreas Haesly, $422; Rufus Lane, $200; R. Miller, $5,332; Frederick Malchow, $140; Ludwig Malchow, $300; Gottlieb Doehmel, $1,210; Eric B. Sternau, $682; Mahala Sturtevant, $1,000; Charles Robinson, $344; Patrick Quilty, $100; G. W. Washburn, $900; the Island Park Association and Gabe Bouck, $1,144.72; Peter McCourt, $350; August Porath, $480; John Winchlag, $210; John Behrand, $100; John Leonard, $625; Mary E. Wright, $1,300; William E. Mills, $660; Ed. L. Mathewson, $3,945; George W. Merritt, executor of the last will and testament of Eliza Merritt, deceased, $784; Sedate D. Paddleford, $2,400; John Sturm, $745; John Schroeder, $744; Hansuma S. Bangs, as administratrix of the estate of Alexander Bangs, $1,140; A. S. Trow, $750; George Allanson, substituted for J. D. Harris, $160; Mary W. Stow, $2,764.80; Benjamin F. Moore, $4,542.61; Heman Hodgkin, $2,858.66; Ann White, $742; Joseph Kinsman, $4,963.97; D. D. Trelevan, surviving executor of last will and testament of T. J. Wood, deceased, $1,466.49; Richard B. Charles, $960; William R. Tallmadge, as executor of the last will and testament of William R. Tallmadge and Sarah J. Tallmadge, deceased, $320; Gustavus A. Benson and Henry A. Geisse, trustees of the estate of F. William Geisse, $524; James Whitton, $682; Dennis Ryan, $318; Nicholas Krebsbach, $417.90; Peter Krebsbach, $417.90; Mirton F. Mosher, as administrator of the estate of Jeremiah Mosher, deceased, $1,477.52; L. H. Bishop, Luke W. Bishop, Lucerne Bishop, Lucretia Bishop, Louisa M. Bishop, and Lafayette Bishop, $857; James A. Fisher, $1,260.33; Ezra Peebles, $604.45; J. C. Robbins, $769.55; Cynthia B. Ripley, $232.12; Isaiah B. Rifenbach, $1,149.82; Valentine Mingel, $1,465.88; Alexander W. Stow and Randall A. Stow, $3,000; Marcellus Ayers, $150; Harvey D. St. John, $600; Theodore Herling, $300; Antoinette Herling, $75; W. H. Miller, as administrator of the estate of William Miller, deceased, and I. Newton Miller, $3,379.20; John S. McDonald, $640; Ralph O. Fox and Edward McCaffrey, $107.20; James Rockafellow, $133.38; Catherine Stilwell, $439.45; Frances E. Aldrich, $120.70; George Ennis and Samuel Ennis, $600; Martha J. Rundell, $73.20; Joseph Yates, $300; R. S. Harrington, $125; Henry B. Basing, $50; in all, $100,024.53.

To pay amount of judgment in favor of Charles Sweany for flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, certified by the Attorney-General in House Executive Document No. 207, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, $1,067.09, being in addition to the sum of $114.65 appropriated for costs on appeal to the superior court in the deficiency appropriation act approved August 4, 1886.

To pay the amounts due the several commissioners to ascertain flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, as follows: To Commissioner J. V. Swetting, $1,173.25; to Commissioner J. C. Burdick, $1,440.95; to Commissioner J. C. Thompson, $882.60; to Commissioner G. H. Buckstaff, $332.60; to Commissioner E. M. Wadsworth, $255.15; to Commissioner G. H. Read, $257.30; to Commissioner J. C. Burdick, $1,564; to Commissioner J. V. Swetting, $1,564; to Commissioner B. L. Cornish, $1,485; to Commissioner G. H. Buckstaff, $1,485; in all, $10,539.85.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, it is proper to say that there is an earnest minority of the Committee on Appropriations against this amendment. I need hardly go over the history of these claims, but I shall, as briefly as possible, state the main points which have given them a semblance of equity before the Congress of the United States. The Fox and Wisconsin Improvement Company originally secured a grant of land and proceeded to sell it and realize upon it and to enter on this improvement. Subsequently, from whatever motive I need not inquire, it was for the interest of that corporation to throw the completion of this great work upon the Government of the United States, and the Government has since appropriated, and there has been expended, nearly two millions and a half of money for that improvement.

But when the corporation handed back to the Government the privilege—to speak ironically—of completing this great work, they reserved to themselves the right to the rentals. I am advised that those rentals have not been excessive, but there are some of us here who have always resisted, upon principle, as we think, the payment of damages. The corporation left to the United States the completion of the work, reserving to themselves, in part, the rentals received from those improvements; but they also left to the United States the payment of damages resulting from overflows caused by the improvements. There is, in a moderate degree, merit in the proposition contained in the amendments, for it is proposed now to repeal the act of 1875 under which these claims have been adjudicated, and I hope some gentleman on this floor will tell us, before we are asked to vote for this appropriation, when these claims for damages are to cease, and whether the repealing clause contained in this proposition will protect the United States from any further indebtedness or further claim for damages of this character. After I have heard some gentleman enlighten us upon that subject I may have more to say in connection with these claims.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in response to his question, that since the first appropriation to pay these damages was made, in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, no more awards have been made. I was this morning before the Committee on Appropriations, and I showed there that one hundred and twenty-three cases, aggregating about $375,000, had been rejected by the commission that has the power to award these damages. I hold in my hand a letter which has just been handed to me by Senator SAWYER, a letter from the United States district attorney, dated January 7, 1888, in which he says:

I have just returned from Oshkosh, where we have been taking testimony in those flowage cases. The commissioners have got to a full understanding of these claims, and are fearless in the discharge of their duty, as evidenced by a report which I sent you along about the 1st of December last. Out of 121 awards of "no damages," the claimants in 83 of them, aggregating claims to the amount of $265,115, have not appealed from the awards of the commissioners. Thirty-eight only, aggregating $93,283 claimed, have been appealed. I don't think that in any of these the awards of the commissioners of "no damages" will be disturbed. The other cases pending—and there are quite a large number of them—will be "knocked out," as they ought to be. We have got to the bottom facts of these claims, and are working at them, as usual, day and night, to prevent any unjust claimant from getting "something for nothing;" but you know all about it already.

That is about the gist of the letter.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman that he incorporate in his remarks all of the letter that relates to this question.

Mr. GUENTHER. I will do so. The writer proceeds, as follows:

I think it would be advisable to put that amendment which I sent you on the bill, cutting off claims from and after the passage of the appropriation bill, or what was embraced in the old deficiency bill. January 1, 1888, I made a full report to the Attorney-General of the condition of each and every claim pending and undetermined up to the 1st day of January, 1888, except those that were in the deficiency bill last session, and wrote him quite a lengthy letter in relation thereto, explaining everything. I also called his attention to ex-clerk of the court Smith's account embraced in that bill, which has been paid by the claimants, or those who received their award by the appropriation of August 4, 1886, which you want to see is knocked out from the deficiency bill. I also called Mr. Garland's attention to the urgent necessity of paying the commissioners' bills, not only those which had been heretofore certified up and embraced in the deficiency bill, but also their bills of last year up to January 1, 1888, which I certified up to December 1, 1887, and which they earned during the past year. You know how they have worked, and so do I, having done nothing else during the past year, and then could not keep up with the demands of hungry claimants, who have shared, and will share, the fate, or a great majority of them, at least, of their "no damage" fellows.

The remainder of the letter relates to other matters.

Mr. RANDALL. Only one word further. I desire it understood that so far as I in my representative relation am concerned I vote against the payment of these claims; but I highly approve that portion of the amendment which proposes to "knock out," in the language of the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. GUENTHER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. That is not my language, but the language of the United States district attorney.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, then, I approve highly that part of the amendment which, while providing for these claims, proposes, in the language of a law officer of the Government, to "knock out" everything else of a like character.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I feel it due to myself to say that I share with the honored chairman of our committee [Mr. RANDALL] all possible prejudices against these items of appropriation which have just been read——

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is mistaken; I have no "prejudices."

Mr. BURNES. "Hostility" is the better word. I will not speak of the gentleman's "prejudices," because he is not a man of prejudice; but he has hostility sometimes. I share his hostility to these items of appropriation. I would no more vote for them than I would vote to tear down this Capitol, but for the fact that I believe, as I am advised by my esteemed friend from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] and other gentlemen more familiar with the facts than myself, that this is a most fortunate way out of a very unpleasant and unprofitable difficulty.

By the act of March 3, 1875—and there are many gentlemen probably now on the floor who are not familiar with the history of this transaction—jurisdiction was given to a State court in Wisconsin to appoint commissioners and ad libitum to award damages to everybody who might claim to have suffered injury from the overflow of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers by reason of the construction of some public works, constructed no doubt for the benefit in the main of private individuals. But many gentlemen here who feel an interest in this matter have read that statute, have looked through the records which have come to us from the courts, and remember the fight which was made in this House last year on this question when the distinguished gentleman, General Bragg, then a member from Wisconsin came down that aisle and carried the House with him upon this proposition.

In view of all the circumstances, and with the knowledge that the Senate stands now upon this question as it stood then, that both Houses have been compelled, we may say, to agree to these appropriations, I am willing now to acquiesce, solely for the purpose of wiping out that legislation of 1875, which has involved us in this trouble. I take this position in view of the statements made in the committee by these distinguished gentlemen that if appropriations are made to pay these awards and judgments, the original act being at the same time repealed, we need not fear any further calls upon us to pay damages for those overflows, while, if the law should continue to stand, we may be involved in suits for damages from year to year, which I have heard through the newspapers are likely to amount to $2,000,000.

Mr. GUENTHER. That is a highly exaggerated statement.

Mr. BURNES. That, I am informed by the gentleman from Wisconsin, is a highly exaggerated statement on the part of the papers——

Mr. McMILLIN. If I understand, then, the position of the gentleman from Missouri, he is willing to agree to this proposition to pay $100,000, in order to buy peace on this question.

Mr. BURNES. Substantially to pay $100,000, in order to get rid of obligations which otherwise may cost us something like $2,000,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. And on that ground to pay claims which the Government does not in justice owe?

Mr. BURNES. I can not go quite that far, for the reason——

Mr. McMILLIN. In the discussion last year, as I think the gentleman will remember, he went that far; and I am satisfied he was right in doing so.

Mr. BURNES. It is simply a question of the meaning of words.

I desire to say there is neither equity, nor justice, nor any sort of merit in these claims, but for the fact that they have met the approval of the courts under the law of 1875. In consequence of the action of the courts, I feel that, although there is neither merit nor justice in the broad sense of the term in these claims, there is imposed upon us a legal obligation which, sooner or later, we shall probably have to meet; and I think it better to meet it in this way, and at the same time get rid of the original law, than to take the chances of the claims which may otherwise be presented hereafter.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman will permit me to ask this question: When the act to which he has referred was passed, was it not understood that the final question of payment or non-payment of these claims was reserved for the consideration of Congress, and does not the duty of sifting these claims and deciding upon their justice rest upon us to-day to the same extent as if that act had not been passed?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BURNES. I think not. The law gave the right of appeal to the Government, but not the power to refuse payment of the sums which might be found due. That is our condition. We are helpless.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has any appeal been prosecuted?

Mr. GUENTHER. Appeals have been taken in some cases.

Mr. McMILLIN. To the Supreme Court?

Mr. GUENTHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether any cases have been finally determined upon the appeal; but the appeal, as I understand, is now pending; and there is a reservation here that this provision shall not interfere with the appeal by the Government.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it will be too late for the appeal to do any good after we have allowed these people to obtain the money. If they secure the money while we take an appeal, they no doubt have good reason to be satisfied with the situation.

Mr. GUENTHER. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to what the Attorney-General of the United States says in regard to this matter:

> These awards and judgments are final, and the liability of the United States for the amount of each is established in conformity to law.

That is what your Attorney-General says in a communication to the Senate of the United States, dated February 18, 1887. Now, how can you get around this obligation? If your Attorney-General says the liability of the United States is established, how can an honest Government refuse payment of these awards and judgments?

Mr. McMILLIN. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] that these works were originally constructed for private purposes——

Mr. GUENTHER. That has no bearing on this question of damages.

Mr. McMILLIN. Not satisfied with having the Government build dams for private purposes, individuals have flooded us with claims for damages.

Mr. GUENTHER. These works were not built for private purposes, but to improve the navigation of those two rivers.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no doubt the allegation was that the work was for public purposes; but no man has been discriminating enough to see the public good that has resulted.

Mr. GUENTHER. Oh, yes; I live there, and know something about the public benefit from these improvements.

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] have expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that a court, in pursuance of law, was appointed to adjudicate these claims.

Mr. GUENTHER. By act of Congress?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. They have been adjudicated.

Mr. GUENTHER. By act of Congress?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes, by act of Congress. They stand as the judgment of the court. They are drawing interest. The time for filing any further cases has passed. Where appeals have been taken the Government got the worst of it, and damages were increased, showing the original amounts were thought reasonable. And no more appeals were attempted.

Mr. McMILLIN rose.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now if Tennessee will suppress itself for a moment—— [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Tennessee will take care of itself. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to take care of myself. I appreciate the activity and vigilance of the gentleman from Tennessee as the watch-dog of the Treasury since we sent brother HOLMAN to the Committee on the Public Lands. [Laughter.] I say these claims are only for the amount awarded. Nothing is put in for interest, nothing for cost. The justice of it has been determined, and no power lies in Congress to repudiate that determination. Now what is there to do but pay them?

In addition we put up the bars so that no other claim can hereafter be brought against the Government of a similar character.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa whether that is not too broad a statement.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. To what extent?

Mr. RANDALL. That nobody else can come in after we repeal the act.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No; for we provide a bar should be put up.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes, with great pleasure.

Mr. McMILLIN. If these claims are just, upon what ground can you justify the Government in putting up any bars to prevent their being determined and paid? Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. With great pleasure I will answer the gentleman from Tennessee. Representatives from the State of Wisconsin appeared before our committee and said the rest of these claims, amounting to one hundred and twenty-three, had been condemned by the commission, and in order to guard the Treasury they themselves asked this bar be put up. Now this is a simple matter, and there need be no agitation about it

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred on Mr. BURNES's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 159, noes 83.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I move to add the following, to come in as an additional section:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That on each and every item by which money is appropriated to any individual or individuals named in the foregoing sections of this bill there shall be paid to the several respective payees therein named, interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 4th day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven, to the date of the passage of this bill, and the amount of said interest is hereby appropriated, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BURNES. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BURNES. The law now regulates the rate of interest to be allowed on judgments, but there is no law authorizing interest on claims adjudged by the accounting officers of the Treasury. For that reason it is not in order.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered, as will be seen, proposes to allow interest upon the claims reported in this bill from the 4th of March last. The law regulates the amount of interest which shall be paid on such awards, and that means nothing unless provision is specifically made by statute.

On the general question, sir, as to whether interest is to be paid or not, I have only to say that to a freshman in this school there have been many revelations made to-day in respect to the way the public business was or was not done in the last term of Congress, and there might have been grave question as to which side was responsible for the delay and failure to pass a general deficiency bill. But one thing is certain, and that is, that it was not the fault of the creditors of this Government that they were not paid. If these parties stood in the position of debtors instead of creditors to the United States Government, it would follow them for the amount claimed with interest at 6 per cent. from that time on, even to the extent of taking their property by process of law at the hands of a United States marshal. Now, it seems to me that even-handed justice, to say nothing of honesty, requires that this Government in its sovereignty should do of its own free will just what it requires the citizen to do by the act of the judiciary.

I therefore offer the amendment that to each of the individual payees mentioned in the foregoing sections of this bill there shall be appropriated 6 per cent. interest on the amounts found due them from the 4th day of March, 1887, on which day the bill failed, certainly not by reason of the neglect of the creditors of the country, in order that justice may be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is no existing law as to the payment of interest except in reference to the judgments of the Court of Claims. If that be correct the amendment of the gentleman from New York is not in order, as it establishes interest for other judgments than those rendered by the Court of Claims.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I wish to ask the Chair if that is a constitutional provision or one of law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it to be a provision of law—a rule of the House.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Then, if it is a provision of law, let me ask if the same power that enacted it into a law has not the power to change it? Is it not in the power of Congress to pay interest?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in the power of Congress, but not in this way upon an appropriation bill.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the special deficiency bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. BURNES. I demand the previous question upon the amendments and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any of the amendments?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask a separate vote on the amendment relating to the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers.

There being no separate vote demanded upon the remaining amendments, they were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to detain the House by having the amendment read again. It has just been read in the hearing of the committee, and I only ask a separate vote upon it.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. MILLS (at 4 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 12, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, enumerating certain estimates of deficiencies in appropriations which it is desired shall be included in the deficiency bill now pending before Congress; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Pork Packers' Association of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for legislation to prevent the sale of adulterated lard as pure lard; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of John McFarland, late private Company E, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, praying for an honorable discharge from the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of C. F. Hovey & Co.; Jordan, Marsh & Co., and various others, large importing merchants of Boston, praying that the provisions of section 977 of the bill to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise, etc., which prohibits them from having a right to judicial determination of the tariff classification of rates of duty, be not enacted. The bill has been reported, but the point which these gentlemen suggest is a very grave one, and I therefore move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance, instead of taking the usual course, under such circumstances, of lying on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Rev. O. P. Gifford, D. D., Rev. Joseph Cook, D. D., and 153 other clergymen of various denominations, of Boston, Mass., and vicinity, praying for the passage of the Blair educational bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I present a vote of the Evangelical Alliance, now in session in Boston, passed January 9, 1888, unanimously petitioning the Congress of the United States to pass the Blair bill, providing Federal aid to common schools. This is certified by Rev. George S. Chadbourn, D. D., president of the association, and Rev. N. B. Jones, secretary. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of Anne Lucas, of Washington, D. C., praying for the payment to her of $156 claimed to be due her for services rendered the Government during the war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of John B. Wolff, of Washington, D. C., praying that an investigation be had in the case of the rejected pension claim of Capt. A. W. Hicks, late of the Mississippi ram fleet; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John B. Wolff, of Washington, D. C., praying for the payment to Mrs. M. A. Krechman of a sum claimed to be due her for board and lodging furnished certain Cherokee Indians in the year 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Denver (Colo.) Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a building for Government purposes in the city of Denver; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of H. P. De Graaf, president of the Bowery National Bank; Peck, Martin & Co.; Brick Union India Rubber Company, W. S. Vermilyea, treasurer, and 304 other business men and capitalists of New York City, praying that Congress at this session authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the entire work of improving Harlem River, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT. I present the petition of H. B. Sargent and others, of New Haven, Conn., and the petition of C. Rogers & Bros., of Meriden, Conn., praying that the law prohibiting advertisements on third and fourth class mail matter be abolished.

In presenting these petitions I desire to say that I do not think the law as it now stands prohibits any printing upon third-class matter on the envelope which contains it. I think in that respect the Postmaster-General has not correctly interpreted the law, and that the difficulty which business men have experienced arises, so far as third-class matter is concerned, not from any fault of the law, but from an incorrect interpretation of it by the Postmaster-General.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT presented the petition of B. S. Hinman and others, praying that seeds, plants, bulbs, and scions be classed as third-class mail matter; also, that the limit of weight of these articles be made 8 pounds; also, that money-orders for $5 or less be issued for 3 cents; that postal-notes be abolished, and that fractional paper currency be issued for use in the mails; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of H. C. Miles and others, citizens of Milford, Conn., praying that fractional currency be issued and postal-notes abolished; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 73 citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I present a petition of citizens of Frankfort, Ky., and as it relates to the jurisdiction of Federal courts, I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 24 citizens of Samoth, Massac County, Illinois, praying that Hugh B. Glass, a citizen of that county, be granted an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Altoona, Pa., favoring the erection of a public building in that place; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of W. J. Moberley, late first lieutenant Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, praying to be allowed a sum claimed to be due him on account of unpaid rations and salary; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SABIN presented a resolution adopted by the State Grange of Minnesota, remonstrating against any modification of the present oleomargarine law, and against the repeal of the tax on that article; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of G. B. McMahan and other citizens of Sevier County, Tennessee, praying that increased compensation be allowed fourth-class postmasters; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a petition, numerously signed by citizens of the Eighth Congressional district of Tennessee, and another, numerously signed by citizens of the Fifth Congressional district of Tennessee, asking for the passage of a bill prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia. I move their reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY presented a petition of 69 citizens of the Sixth Congressional district of Arkansas, praying for the passage of the bill to prohibit the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of Fernando I. Moreno, of Key West, Fla., praying to be allowed compensation for certain services he alleges were rendered by him to the Government in 1860; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAMPTON presented the petition of the Woman's Christian State Temperance Union of South Carolina, praying for a submission to the States of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of 52 citizens of Anacostia, D. C., praying for the passage of the bill prohibiting the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of Mrs. Elizabeth G. Elder, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Samuel G. Elder, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 23) to authorize Dallas City to construct a bridge across the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 322) to authorize the Southwest Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad to build a bridge across the Ouachita River, in Arkansas, reported it with amendments.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1227) authorizing the appointment of a superintendent of Indian schools and prescribing his duties, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 358) to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 45) for the relief of Col. James C. Duane, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 498) for the relief of Frank Della Terre and Susan F. Della Terre, heirs of Peter Della Terre, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 180) for the relief of Washington L. Parvin and Henry A. Greene;

A bill (S. 927) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others;

A bill (S. 670) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army; and

A bill (S. 939) for the relief of Robert H. Montgomery.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1003) granting the right of way to the Duluth and Manitoba Railroad Company across the Fort Pembina military reservation, in Dakota Territory, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. VEST. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 274) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point in the county of St. Charles, in the State of Missouri, below the city of St. Charles, to report it favorably with sundry amendments.

I ask for the present consideration of the bill, because there are peculiar reasons why it should be at once acted upon. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the report I now make from the Committee on Commerce. I believe he is interested in the bill, as the company that proposes to construct the bridge is an Iowa company. The company are ready to commence the construction of the bridge, but the whole process of construction by the company is stopped until this matter can be disposed of. For that reason I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was in section 2, line 19, after the word "location," to strike out the words "to the bottom chord of the bridge" and insert "to the lowest point of the superstructure;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall have three or more channel spans, and shall not be of less elevation in any case than 50 feet above high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest point of the superstructure, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than 300 feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river, and not less than 300 feet in length.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 17, after the word "in," to strike out the words "which district and State" and insert the words "whose jurisdiction;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving such plan and map and other information, and upon being satisfied that a bridge built on such plan and with such accessory works and at such locality will conform to the prescribed conditions of this act, to notify the company that he approves the same; and upon receiving such notification the said company may proceed to an erection of said bridge, conforming strictly to the approved plan and location; and should any change be made in the plan of the bridge or said accessory works, during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought into the circuit court of the United States of the eastern district of the State of Missouri, in whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 4, line 10, after the word "privileges," to strike out the word "or" and insert "of;" so as to read:

And said bridge shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-routes in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This completes the amendments reported by the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, at the end of line 10, the word "and" is duplicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The superfluous word will be stricken out.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL B. LUCAS.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution, and moved its reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That there be paid to Daniel B. Lucas, of West Virginia, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, as compensation for expenses incurred in contesting the seat of Hon. CHARLES J. FAULKNER in the United States Senate, $1,000, the same to be in full for all claim for such expenses, and also for any claim to salary as Senator.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1369) for the relief of Joseph B. Hull, commodore United States Navy (retired); which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1370) for the relief of Assistant Engineer Howard D. Potts, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1371) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 1372) granting an increase of pension to Maria Hunter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1373) granting a pension to William B. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1374) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Williams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 1375) for the relief of Gallatin, Bureau, and other counties in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 1376) for the relief of John W. Blake; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1377) for the relief of Henry Pickett, of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. The bill proposes to grant relief to a person who served the United States as a teamster, was exposed to military danger, and received an accident which made him totally blind. I suppose it should go to the Committee on Pensions, and not to the Committee on Claims, as it is a gratuity and not a right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the indorsement on the bill to be "the Committee on Claims." It will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 1378) directing the prosecution of inquiries by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries in respect to the destruction of oysters in the natural oyster-beds lying within the waters and jurisdiction of the United States by star-fish, etc., and making an appropriation for such purpose; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 1379) to increase the pay of chaplains in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1380) to amend sections 1847, 1852, 1857, 1862, and 1885 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1381) for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States of certain swamp and overflowed lands, and to reimburse and indemnify certain States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1382) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine Ferguson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1383) granting a pension to Isabella W. Addudell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1384) granting a pension to Margaret J. Cash; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 1385) granting a pension to Hezekiah Cardwell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1386) to regulate the practice and proceedings in the Patent Office, and to amend existing laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition to accompany the bill, which I ask may be printed and referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Patents. The petition is a very short one, and it will take but a few lines of print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred, with the accompanying petition, to the Committee on Patents, and an order to print the petition will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 1387) authorizing the appointment of James S. Jouett to a first lieutenancy of cavalry in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 1388) for the relief of W. L. Adams, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to introduce several bills, and I wish to have it noted that I introduce all of them by request. I hardly know to what committee they should be referred. They propose to make compensation for depredations committed by Navajo Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such bills have usually been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well.

The bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

A bill (S. 1389) for the relief of José Pablo Madrid, of San Miguel County, New Mexico;

A bill (S. 1390) for the relief of Juan José Nieto, of San Miguel County, New Mexico;

A bill (S. 1391) for the relief of the legal representatives of José de Jesus Lujan, of Mora County, New Mexico;

A bill (S. 1392) for the relief of Apollinario Almanzar, of San Miguel County, New Mexico;

A bill (S. 1393) for the relief of Ignacio Sanchez y Ortiz, of San Miguel County, New Mexico;

A bill (S. 1394) for the relief of the legal representatives of Dolores Butierrez, deceased, of San Miguel County, New Mexico; and

A bill (S. 1395) for the relief of the legal representatives of Augustin Gonzales, deceased, of San Miguel County, New Mexico.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 1396) to extend the provisions of section 4631, Title LVI, Prize, of the Revised Statutes, and of the act of June 8, 1874, in relation to prize-money, to fleet officers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 1397) for the relief of A. L. Shotwell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 1398) to prohibit book-making, pool-selling, or gambling on races within the cities of Washington and Georgetown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1399) for the relief of the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 1400) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John W. Penwarden; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1401) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of D. Thomas Andrews; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1402) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of A. M. Stratton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 1403) granting a pension to Daniel Shack; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 31) for the relief of the personal representative of William R. Brick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 32) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to contract for the improvement of Harlem River navigation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SPANISH-AMERICAN CLAIMS.

Mr. HISCOCK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his judgment it be not inconsistent with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate the names of all persons who recovered judgments before the late Spanish-American Claims Commission provided by the convention with Spain of February 12, 1871; the form of the said judgments, i. e., whether in terms in the name of claimants in each case, or in that of the United States, as against Spain; the amount of each judgment; the respective dates of payment by Spain; the amounts paid to the respective claimants by the Secretary of State, with the dates thereof; the amount reserved in each case, and the duration of such reserve; whether the same was invested in United States or other securities, and the total increment thereon arising from such investment; the ratable proportion of such increment to the amounts reserved from each claimant; and the reasons, if any, why the said increment has not been paid to the respective claimants.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, it was Ordered, That Richard L. Rotchford have leeve to withdraw the papers in his case from the files of the Senate.

JACKSON (MISS.) MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, to which he calls the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER January 10, 1888, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the suppression of the votes of the colored citizens of Jackson, Miss., at the recent municipal election in that city, and into the alleged participation in such suppression by the United States district attorney and by a deputy collector of internal revenue and a deputy United States marshal; and to report the facts to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I offered this resolution partly in consequence of the reception of a telegram from Jackson, Miss., dated January 7, addressed to myself, as follows:

We respectfully ask that a Senate committee be appointed and sent here to investigate the recent occurrences here in reference to our municipal election and the disfranchisement of the colored vote thereat. The facts can be fully proven by the testimony of the best men of both political parties.

I have not asked in the resolution that power be given to the committee to send for persons and papers, because I apprehend it may be found that the facts already upon the records of the Department of Justice will be sufficient for the committee, with such information as they may obtain, without sending for persons and papers. If, however, this should prove not to be the case, I should desire that power be given to the committee to make a complete investigation.

I have asked that the Committee on the Judiciary be requested to make this investigation, because the inquiry will involve the participation in the suppression of the colored vote of a United States district attorney and a deputy United States marshal.

I only desire to briefly bring to the attention of the Senate the information which has come to me which seems to justify and require the inquiry proposed, and I think I can best state that information by causing to be read letters which I have received, and which concisely state the occurrences that call for the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read the letters, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

JACKSON, MISS., December 29, 1887.

DEAR SIR: We are here, in Jackson, Miss., just now going through a revolution somewhat Mexican in its characteristics. The following are the facts: We have had a mayor here, McGill, in office for fourteen years past, who is a Republican, and have had, as nearly every one agrees, a most excellent city government. The city election is held on the first Monday of January next. No opposing candidate had offered, and he was about to be unanimously re-elected, when on Christmas eve a difficulty arose between some young white men and a negro butcher in the city, in which the negro and one of the young white men were almost instantly killed. The opponents of the city administration instantly seized upon this, and called a little meeting for Monday night, which adjourned to Tuesday night, when a much larger meeting was held, at which William Henry, a son-in-law of Governor Lowry, was nominated, resolutions were passed, and a committee of one hundred were appointed who should see that the election was carried. The chairman of this committee was Mr. J. B. Harris, the United States district attorney of the southern district of Mississippi, who made a blood-and-thunder speech, in which he advocated the forcible prevention of the negroes voting, and stated that he was willing to lay down his life to accomplish it, if necessary.

Matters at length became so warm that the colored people, at a meeting held by them, decided not to vote, and issued a notice to that effect. McGill then made the other party a proposition to settle it by the votes of the white voters. This was declined by Henry. Then a subcommittee of the committee of one hundred made a proposition that it be decided by a primary election, at which should be allowed to vote not the registered white voters of the city, but all white men resident in the city eligible to register and vote. This would let in many fraudulent votes, and McGill consequently declined. He afterwards agreed to go into a primary at which the white registered voters only should vote; but this was declined, and the election will be held on Monday next, and, I presume, will be decided entirely on white votes, as I do not think the negroes will attempt to vote, and the Henry party are loud in their declarations that they will not allow them to do so.

The men most prominent in these moves are R. H. Henry, the State printer, John and Ed. Martin, of the New Mississippian, and R. E. Wilson, a brother-in-law of Henry. Wilson is the deputy United States internal-revenue collector for this district. He has been training with the crowd, but has been openly using his best endeavors for a peaceable and quiet election. Mr. Harris, the district attorney, however, has been foremost in fomenting the whole trouble. I send you copies of papers containing the proceedings, "the bloody manifesto," and the notice of the negroes, and will send you more to-morrow.

Yours, respectfully,

JACKSON, MISS., December 31, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I send you by this mail all further literature of the local campaign going on here which I have been able to gather up, consisting of to-day's and yesterday's Advertiser, yesterday's New Mississippian, and three Democratic hand-bills. They are somewhat frightened at what they have been doing, and are now hard at work to make the Democratic party back them up, and seem to be succeeding pretty well. "Private" John Allen addresses them to-night. They were expecting to have a general demonstration to-night, but the inclement weather has prevented. They are getting frightened somewhat at the prospect of being prosecuted by a Democratic Department of Justice, under the fifteenth amendment enforcement act, with which I have been threatening them. I have had the amendment and the act published in the Advertiser, which will be out in the morning. I have also been after the Federal officials who have been engaged in it—J. B. Harris, the district attorney; R. E. Wilson, the collector of internal revenue, and Samuel Livingston, the resident deputy United States marshal. The marshal himself, W. L. Dinkins, does not reside here, has not been here, and knows nothing about it. In my former letter I wrote you that I thought Wilson was training with them to restrain them. On further investigation I find this is not so, but that he is as determined as any one of them. He and Livingston are both of the committee of one hundred.

Now, can not you push them up to noticing the conduct of these officials? Here is a district attorney chairman of a revolutionary conspiracy, the members of which it is his sworn duty to prosecute. Surely the Democratic party, I should think, can not afford to tolerate such actions on the part of their office-holders and continue them in office. There should be some quick removals and some vigorous prosecutions for what has been done, and if the Administration will not do it the country should know it, and I think would find some one who would at the next election.

The negroes are leaving town fast, most of them temporarily, until after the election, some for all time, disgusted at the measures which have been taken. We are going to make a bold fight with the white vote, and with a fair hope of success. If they try any bulldozing on white men you will hear of some one being hurt.

Yours, respectfully,

JACKSON, MISS., January 3, 1888.

DEAR SIR: McGill ran the race through and was defeated by a majority of 93 out of about 360 votes polled. None but whites voted. The registered negro vote is about 340, none of which voted. Of these at least 300 would have voted for McGill, as would at least 75 of the white men who did not vote for him, but who were, as they openly themselves state, whipped in to vote for Henry in one way and another. Oliver Clifton, the editor of the Clarion, who, at the business men's meeting last week, in a speech denounced the proceedings of the Henry faction as revolutionary, yesterday openly announced his intention to vote for McGill, and did so, and was thereupon immediately deposed from the editorship of the paper by Colonel Power, its publisher. Clifton is also clerk of the supreme court, and they are to-day trying to contrive some way to get him out of that position. He is firm and defiant, and has made a noble record for himself. The newspaper reporters are commencing to quietly gather in, and the country will have the full story shortly. The local reporters are all in the Henry faction, and keep the truth well concealed. At the election one negro attempted to vote, but was fired out of the room in short order.

At one of the last of the Henry meetings our circuit judge made a very inflammatory speech. Knowing that the judge would give him no show whatever, McGill will not take any steps to contest, and anything that is done about it will have to be done either in the United States court under the fifteenth amendment act (which they are very much afraid of), or before a Senate committee (the prospect of which they do not relish at all).

I would suggest that you send a committee down here immediately, before things cool.

Yours, respectfully,

——— ———.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield a moment to have a telegram read in this same connection from the Attorney-General to the district attorney, to whom the letter relates?

Mr. CHANDLER. I decline to yield, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore The Senator from New Hampshire declines to yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. In addition, I have a telegram dated January 2, from the same person who wrote the letters, stating:

Henry elected by 93 majority. Only whites voted. One negro offered to vote and was put out.

The letters which have been read distinctly state who were the Federal officers engaged in this business. I repeat their names for distinctness. J. B. Harris, district attorney. He was on the committee of one hundred appointed at the Democratic meeting referred to. He heads a letter, December 29, to McGill, proposing a settlement of the controversy by a primary election in which only whites shall participate. R. E. Wilson is the deputy collector of internal revenue. He was on the committee calling the mayoralty caucus, and was also on the committee which reported the so-called White-Line resolutions of December 27. Samuel Livingston, the deputy United States marshal, was on the committee calling the mayoralty caucus, and was also on the committee on the White-Line resolutions of December 27.

The manifesto which first conveyed to the colored people of Jackson, Miss., the notice that they would not be allowed to vote, I have in my hand. At the head is displayed an engraving [exhibiting] of a couple of pistols, a couple of shotguns, and a powder-flask. It is printed in red ink. I ask the Chief Clerk to read this notice to the negroes of Jackson.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A BLAST FROM THE YOUTH.

THE YOUNG MEN OF JACKSON UTTER THEIR ULTIMATUM.

Monday night at the second meeting of the Young White Men's League of Jackson, which comprises almost every white man of Jackson from nineteen to twenty-nine years of age, unanimously passed the following resolutions, with the order that a thousand copies be printed and distributed as soon as a nomination was made:

"We, the young white men of Jackson, having seen one of our number coldly, cruelly, and hellishly murdered in the dark by a negro bully set on by a negro policeman of this negro-cursed city, do hereby resolve, in solemn and awful earnestness, that the corrupt, Radical, negro government of our city should, must, and shall be wiped out, cost what it may.

"We have earnestly believed in peace and law and order, and we hope now that this government of negro butchers may peacefully yield to defeat, but we want no peace bought at the price of our manhood and of our companion's blood.

"Driven by no sudden passion or blind impulse, but actuated by a firm and deliberate sense of the duty we owe to ourselves and to our race, we hereby warn the negroes that if any one of their race attempts to run for office in the approaching municipal election, he does so at his supremest peril, and we further warn any and all negroes of this city against attempting, at their utmost hazard, by vote or influence to foist on us again this black and damnable machine miscalled a government of our city.

"And we call upon all the young men of our city and surrounding country who do not sanction the fiendish murder of a white boy by a negro bully—upon all who love the white race better than they love negro assassins—upon all who have courage in their hearts or manhood in their souls to bitterly remember the blood of the murdered McWillie Mitchell from now until the election day, and sweep away this infamy of government with its black and brutish hands stained and wet with blood of a brave and noble boy."

Mr. CHANDLER. Following up that manifesto a meeting was called on the 27th of December of the Democracy. The call is headed:

DEMOCRACY!

There will be a meeting at the house of representatives to-night, at 7.30 p. m., for the purpose of nominating a Democratic candidate for mayor, and taking such other action as the situation demands.

R. E. WILSON,
D. P. PORTER,
THOS. P. BARR,
JOHN T. TAPLEY,
S. LIVINGSTON,
L. BRAME,
E. O. RYAN,
FRANK JOHNSTON,

DECEMBER 27, 1887.

Wilson was deputy collector of internal revenue, Livingston the deputy marshal. I have a subsequent call for a meeting in the State house of representatives on December 29, which contains the resolutions passed at the meeting of December 27. This hand-bill is headed "Democratic White-Line resolutions."

DEMOCRATIC WHITE-LINE RESOLUTIONS!

Adopted by the Democratic convention at Jackson, Tuesday night, December 27, 1887.

Mr. Chairman: Your committee on resolutions ask to present the following:

Whereas the Democracy of this city, recognizing the just reproach upon them for so long suffering a Republican administration in the capital city of a Democratic State, and having determined to no longer submit thereto: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Democrats of the city of Jackson, in mass-meeting assembled, That we to-night nominate candidates for mayor and aldermen, and hereby avow our purpose to elect them.

Resolved, That, in general terms, we assert that the present city government has been inefficient, unsatisfactory, and objectionable; and especially has its police department been inefficient in the protection of both life and property, and we refer to the occurrences of the past few days in proof thereof.

Resolved, That the chairman of this meeting appoint a committee of one hundred to see that the ticket is elected.

Resolved, That all citizens of Jackson, without regard to past political affiliations, are invited to co-operate in the election of the candidates nominated by this meeting.

R. E. WILSON,
SAM'L LIVINGSTON,
D. P. PORTER,
JOHN T. TAPLEY,
THOS. P. BARR,
FRANK JOHNSTON,
L. BRAME,
Committee.

Let every Democrat of Jackson attend the Democratic meeting at house of representatives to-night, December 29.

And here is the call for the meeting of Democrats of December 29:

COME OUT, DEMOCRATS.

Hon. John Allen,
Col. S. M. Meek,
Hon. James T. Harrison,
Hon. C. B. Mitchell,
Hon. A. J. McLaurin,
General J. H. Sharp,
Maj. Patrick Henry,

and others will address you at the house of representatives to-night at 8 o'clock. Be present, and hear what these distinguished Democrats have to say about the municipal ticket as nominated by the Democratic convention.

As the result of all these preparations for the suppression of the negro vote, as stated in the letters of my informant which were read by the Secretary, the colored voters of the city decided that it would be unsafe for them to participate in the election, and a meeting was held on the evening of December 28 at which the following resolutions were passed:

A MEETING OF THE COLORED VOTERS.

At a meeting of the colored citizens of Jackson, held in West Jackson on Wednesday evening, December 28, 1887, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the colored people have been reliably informed that the Democratic club or committee of Jackson have invited Democrats from various other places and adjoining counties to be here on election day for the purpose of preventing the colored voters from voting or participating in the city election next Monday, January 2, 1888: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That in the interest of peace and harmony and the protection of life and property, that the colored people refrain from voting or in any way participating in said election.

Resolved further, That the colored candidates for aldermen are hereby withdrawn.

ELIJAH ROBINSON, Chairman.

H. T. RISHER, Secretary.

I also read from the Memphis Avalanche of December 31 the following resolutions, which were passed at the meeting of Democrats on December 29:

Resolved, That this convention having received the assurance that hereafter no negro aldermen or negro policemen will be a part of the city government, and that in the election to be held on Monday next none but white men will vote, negroes having voluntarily agreed to stay away from the polls: Therefore,

Be it resolved, The Democracy of the city of Jackson pledges that, so far as it can govern, the election shall be fairly and peaceably conducted.

I do not desire, Mr. President, to prolong the exhibition of the many incidental reasons proceeding from the newspapers of Jackson, published about this time, which induced the negroes to realize that it would be necessary for them to stay away from the polls. I wish, in addition to what I have stated, only to call the attention of the Senate to the ostensible cause for this decision at the capital city of the Democratic State of Mississippi that there should be no participation in the municipal election of any but white voters, and the reasons why the election should be carried solely by the votes of white men, although the candidate for mayor of the Republicans was a white man, had been mayor for years, and, I think, had been a Confederate soldier.

I find that the Daily Mississippian of the 30th of December thought it advisable to state the reasons why the Democracy of Jackson had seen fit to deliberately predetermine the abstention of the negro voters from the polls at the approaching municipal election. The article is headed:

MURDER OF M'WILLIE MITCHELL—WORK OF A NEGRO DESPERADO.

Set on by a radical negro policeman—How he stole up behind his victim in the dark and severed his throat.

Never before have we seen the white men of Jackson so filled with a stern and fearful indignation as they now are over the dastardly murder of McWillie Mitchell.

The bloody story, as we have learned it, is briefly thus: A large number of young men, including the best there are in Jackson, were enjoying themselves Saturday night marching around blowing tin bugles. As they went down President street they passed the burly negro bully, Bob Whitesides, who was half drunk, and manifested a disposition not to have any white men around him making a fuss, and began cursing the crowd.

McWillie Mitchell took Percy Gambrell's pistol from his (Percy's) overcoat pocket and told the negro if he cursed him he would kill him. They were then near Newman's corner, on President street, and the negro turned and left, going to Hayne's butcher shop.

The white boys thought it was all over, and all started away, the others having turned the corner up Pearl street considerably ahead of Mitchell and Gambrell.

Young Gambrell stopped a moment with his face towards the street, and the negro, who had armed himself with a tremendous butcher-knife, came out and passed rapidly by Percy, at his back, on to where Mitchell was walking slowly along, some 12 feet beyond him.

When Percy heard the negro walking, and turned his head, he was just reaching Mitchell. As Percy rushed towards them the negro grasped Mitchell from behind, pinioning his arms with his own left arm, and with his right began making terrible slashes in his throat.

Percy Gambrell rushed upon them, and grasping the wrist of the negro's right arm, tore them apart. The negro began endeavoring to cut Gambrell, and though his wrist was held, succeeded in making two deep gashes in his right hand.

Mitchell had fallen to his knees, and three shots were fired into the negro in an instant; the first shot straight through his bowels, another through his right lung, and another through his thigh.

The pistol was right against him, and around each bullet hole there was a larger hole burned some distance in the flesh.

Then the negro groaned and made a death struggle, and all three fell together in a bloody heap on the sidewalk, the knife striking into young Mitchell again.

Percy swung onto the arm of the negro, and putting his foot on the wrist got the knife from his death-clutch, while the pistol fell on the sidewalk. Three other negroes, including Julius Allen, one of our Radical negro policemen, surrounded the scene of battle, and seemed about to attack Percy. Finally some whites came upon the scene.

The negro continued to groan, and soon expired without saying anything. Mitchell was lifted to his feet, and with the help of a man at each side partly walked and was partly carried to Ledbetter's drug store, where he soon expired.

It is charged by the enemies of Gambrell that he was the one who did the shooting, but before he died Mitchell stated in the presence of several witnesses that he did the shooting himself, and asked if the negro was dead.

And it is the universal sentiment of the white men (that is, the real white men of Jackson) that if Gambrell did do the shooting, he was justified perfectly and completely in morals as in law.

I leave that statement without further comment, and the Senate can judge whether or not the occurrence thus narrated in the Mississippian as the excuse for this deliberate decision that the Constitution of the United States should be violated in one of its most important provisions at the approaching municipal election was justified.

I submit, Mr. President, that this question, although it affects only for the time being a municipal election in the city of Jackson, is one of national importance. The country this year is to enter upon a Presidential election, an election which is to decide the Presidency and also the complexion of the National House of Representatives. In that election at least 12,000,000 voters, representing 60,000,000 of American people, will be entitled to participate. Amongst those voters are probably a million and a half of black men, representing six or seven millions of their own race; and it is an important question whether or not this million and a half of black men are to be allowed to vote or are not to be allowed to vote.

It is a matter that concerns those of our citizens who desire to protect the tariff whether the question is to be settled, so far as the House of Representatives and the Presidency are concerned, by a fair vote of all those who are entitled under the Constitution to vote, or is to be settled with a million and a half of those voters disfranchised in pursuance of this policy which we have seen deliberately adopted in the capital of the State of Mississippi, which State seeks to-day to furnish an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States to aid in passing upon the validity of the constitutional amendments.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, there can be no longer any concealment as to the purpose of the debate that has been commenced here in open session, any more than there can be a misunderstanding of statements made by Senators on this floor as to what they did or did not intend to do in reference to matters that can alone be considered properly in executive session. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has no more concealed his purpose than the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] did when he wrote to a club in his State. He has no more concealed his purpose than the Senator who presides over this body [Mr. INGALLS], and I know he did not intend to conceal anything. If it be allowable to have this kind of debate in open session, then it becomes me, sir, to say that I will vote for Lamar. That is the entirety of it, sir. No man ever made a greater mistake than he who contends that there is a universal purpose to suppress the negro vote in the South. Let the man who will vote for the Democracy of the South do so if he wishes, and he will find that we have a Republican party there that does not subsist on the misrepresentation of others.

Mr. President, if the Senate will agree to-day that this shall be an open debate no man will be more glad of it than I. But we have had open sessions debating every day what was peculiarly executive business. We can have a chance, in my judgment, this day in this session to settle the matter, notwithstanding all the allegations that have been made. But I do want, if there must be asseveration made in open session, that it shall be subject to denial in open session. I have not forgotten that this gentleman was my political foe when he was here; but he was confirmed for a high position in the executive government. I propose that gentlemen who are opposed to his confirmation shall open the doors and let us have a full, free, and fair debate, or that they will make no more speeches which lead up to the confirmation or rejection of Mr. Lamar.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of offering any objection to the proposed investigation. On the contrary, so far as I am concerned, I not only desire but I am extremely anxious that the pending resolution should be passed by those whose views of the constitutional powers of this body are different from my own.

If the proposition were to investigate a mere town election in the State of New Hampshire by the Senate of the United States, I should vigorously oppose it; but I court the fullest investigation of the alleged occurrences at Jackson, Miss.; but I do protest against any prejudgment of the case.

I desire, instead of mere anonymous communications, that the motives and the provocations, the grievances and the surroundings of the people at Jackson, along with their actions, shall be laid bare before the country, and that the verdict of the country may be had upon them.

Mr. President, we must assume, whatever the fact may be, that the real object of this resolution is to ascertain the actual facts of the matter to which it relates, and to have them reported for the information of the Senate. When that is done there may be something before the Senate for discussion which relates in some way to the subject-matter of this resolution. But, sir, in advance of the very report which the resolution calls for, and in the absence of the very facts which the resolution professes to seek to elicit, the discussion of the matter here can serve no other purpose, if, indeed, any other be intended, than to affect other questions and other interests which are not embraced in the resolution.

Therefore, sir, though at the proper time there is much that I may say on this subject, I propose to defer the discussion of it until the coming in of the report which the resolution calls for shall furnish an appropriate occasion for such discussion.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I came in a few moments ago, just as the Secretary was reading anonymous letters which I thought conveyed some sort of criticism, or a suggestion of criticism, on the present Administration with regard to the action of some Federal officers in Jackson, Miss. I supposed at the time that the object of having those letters read was perhaps to present all the facts for the consideration of the Senate, and not for the purpose of presenting a one-sided or distorted view of the case to accomplish partisan purposes. Conceiving that to be the purpose of reading the papers at the desk, I asked permission of the Senator who then occupied the floor to have read at the desk, in connection with those letters which seemed to reflect on the Administration, a telegram sent by the Attorney-General of the United States to the district attorney at Jackson, Miss., which was refused by that Senator. I had no purpose of entering into this discussion, or of undertaking to throw any light upon it other than what this telegram showed.

The suggestion afterwards made by the Senator that there was a Presidential election to come off some time during this year, and the idea that there might be some great public excitement and a necessity for all this talk being thrown in for the purpose of exciting prejudices and blackening the fair name of a State and people, had not occurred to me at the time. But for the purpose of making the record complete, and that the Senate may understand what action was taken by the Administration as soon as the rumor reached the executive officers of the Government, I send to the desk that telegram, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 3, 1888.

I notice in the papers you are mentioned particularly as participating in political meetings recently at Jackson to suppress the colored vote in that city and to prevent colored people from running for office, by violence and intimidation. Report fully to me at once the whole proceeding and your connection with it.

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

J. B. HARRIS, Esq.,
United States District Attorney, Jackson, Miss.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. My only purpose in having the telegram read is that the country and the Senate shall know in connection with the anonymous letters that have been read to the Senate what steps have been taken by the Administration in ascertaining the facts of the case.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have no desire now to enter into a discussion of the matters involved in this resolution. I have up to this time, since I have been a member of this body, endeavored, so far as I could do so, to avoid sectional debate. My first impulse when this resolution was introduced was to let it pass, as I knew it would pass, without any debate on my part. I believe now that I shall not vote against the resolution. I believe I would vote for it, if it were not for an insuperable objection in my mind, and that is, that it embraces matters entirely without the competency or jurisdiction of this body.

If the resolution were confined to an investigation of the conduct of the two Federal officials named in it, I would vote for it; but as it goes beyond that and undertakes to draw within the jurisdiction of this body a municipal election, over which we have no control, I feel that I ought to ask the privilege of the Senate, as I can not vote for it and do not desire to vote against it, that I be excused from voting at all.

I will make only one remark, Mr. President, about the state of facts which are the subject of inquiry. The Senator from New Hampshire seems to be very well satisfied as to the facts which he seeks to elicit by his resolution of inquiry. I do not understand the facts as fully possibly as he seems to, though I understand them somewhat differently.

I do not propose to go into the facts now, except to call the attention of the Senate and the country to one or two important circumstances disclosed by the papers presented by the Senator; and those facts are that for fourteen years a Republican municipal administration has existed in the city of Jackson without difficulty, without protest, except a silent protest, without any violent method being used for the purpose of overturning it; that up to Christmas eve, the election for the mayoralty being set for the first Monday in January, there was no regular party opposition to the Republican ticket, the people acquiescing in its election, or at least being content to make no regular contest about it; that on Christmas eve an occurrence took place which stirred the blood, excited the passions, and caused fears and apprehensions in the community, which resulted in the proceedings about which we are asked to inquire.

I desire the Senate and the country to understand, therefore, that whatever of irregularity, whatever of irritation and passion may have been exhibited was the result of that occurrence. The people were quiet, the Democrats were quiet, the white people were quiet. The white people had submitted to this administration for fourteen years, and whatever transpired which has excited the feelings of Senators took place only after an occurrence which deeply stirred the passions of the people, the murder of a reputable, popular, respectable young man, in the presence of a police officer of the city, who by some it was supposed abetted it, and it is agreed, I believe, on all sides, he took no steps to prevent it. Now, I am not going to say that a brutal murder of any sort justifies any irregular steps in violation of law, if any such has occurred, but I will say that a murder of that sort, perpetrated under the circumstances connected with this one, is well calculated to excite passion and to produce irregular and illegal action.

With these remarks, Mr. President, and asking the Senate to excuse me for not voting on this resolution, because in my opinion it contains matter over which this body has no jurisdiction, I leave further discussion until the facts shall be fully investigated.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, in order to quiet the apprehension of Senators who may hesitate to vote for or against the resolution because they think that the Government of the United States has nothing to do with a municipal election in Jackson, Miss., I will take occasion to read an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which is somewhat in danger in these days and in this year 1888 of being forgotten. The fifteenth amendment is:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

I conceive that it is a proper matter of investigation for the Senate of the United States whenever at any election within any State the right of any man to vote is denied because he is black. Whenever that right shall be denied or the right of any citizen to vote for any cause denied at an election in any city or town of New Hampshire, as the Senator has suggested might be the case, I shall be found ready to vote for investigation, and shall believe in the jurisdiction to investigate. So I hold that this investigation should be made irrespective of the participation in that election of the Federal officers whose names I have given; but that any Senator should hesitate to vote for a resolution to investigate the question whether a district attorney appointed by the United States to enforce law and enforce the Constitution has deliberately engaged in an attempt to violate law and destroy the Constitution is a wonder to me.

Mr. President, I find I have here, bearing upon those aggravating circumstances to which the Senator from Mississippi who last spoke alluded, which are the excuse or the apology or the alleged justification for the determination by the white Democrats of Jackson that the negroes of Jackson should not vote, an account which I desire to read. The paper is the Brandon Republican, published at Brandon, Miss., on the 5th of January, 1888. It is, however, a Democratic paper, and it gives an account of the events which the Senator has set up here as the cause of the singular proceeding which took place on the 2d of January, in Jackson, the capital city of a Democratic State. It is headed:

JACKSON.

Drunkenness, Rowdyism, Fighting, Shooting, Cutting, and Killing—Municipal Election—McGill Defeated for Mayor.

From Christmas eve up to Monday last Jackson was one seething pool of excitement. Though a prohibition town, almost the entire male population got drunk Christmas eve, if reports be true. "Little brown jugs" came in from all directions, for whites and blacks, old and young. Prohibitionists and anti-Prohibitionists. Armed with tin horns, triangles, tamborines, French harps, tin cans, fire-crackers, Roman candles, torpedoes, pistols, and everything else that would make a noise, the young men paraded the streets, yelled like Indians, threw bricks through plate-glass doors and windows, smashed show-cases, threw goods into the muddy streets, and played the devil generally.

McWillie Mitchell, a young man who was universally beloved, and in company with Percy Gambrell, proprietor of the State temperance organ, and a brother of Roderick Dhu Gambrell, deceased, got into a difficulty with a negro named Whiteside, which ended in the death of Mitchell and Whiteside and the severe cutting of Gambrell. Two negroes got into a fight and one was very severely cut. A young man named Nettles, who was drunk, was run over and killed by the cars, and at least twenty fist fights were reported.

The killing of young Mitchell by a colored desperado created intense excitement against the colored population, and also against the city authorities, and as an election for mayor and aldermen was to come off on the 2d of January and there were no candidates in the field against the old mayor and board of aldermen, a meeting was called and a full Democratic ticket nominated, headed by General William Henry for mayor. A committee of one hundred was appointed to carry the election, and that committee adopted some very rash and unfortunate resolutions. When these resolutions were published, the negroes held a meeting, withdrew their candidates for aldermen, and resolved not to attempt to vote. The colored fire company then met, dissolved organization, and offered their property for sale, declaring that they would never go to another fire. On Sunday night a large number of the negroes left the city, and none attempted to vote on Monday. General Henry was elected by a majority of 93 votes, and all the Democratic candidates for aldermen, except Clingham, were elected. The Democratic victory was complete, but we fear it was a dearly bought victory, as the unfortunate resolutions adopted by the committee of one hundred, and published in the city papers, will be used with great effect by our northern Republican enemies. McGill had held the office of mayor a long time, and in some respects made a good officer. General Henry is a young gentleman of sterling qualities, and we believe he will make an acceptable mayor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. VEST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that I may be excused from voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks to be excused from voting on this resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. He is excused.

Mr. WALTHALL. I pray the same courtesy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be excused, if there be no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply want to state that I shall vote against the resolution because I think the Senate has no more to do with that than it has with any other town election. I think from the newspaper extracts read by the Senator from New Hampshire the State of Mississippi has taken care of the matter quite sufficiently, and I do not want to interfere with that State.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CALL (when Mr. PASCO's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PASCO] is paired generally. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired on all party questions with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I suppose, if present, he would vote in the affirmative on this resolution, and I should vote in the negative.

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. Were he here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. My colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] on all political questions, and as this seems to be one I shall not vote.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] having come in, I vote "nay."

Mr. FARWELL (after having voted in the affirmative). My colleague [Mr. CULLOM] has paired me, and I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's vote will be withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 23; as follows:

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, or as soon thereafter as may suit the convenience of the Senate, I shall ask indulgence to call up the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] January 4, in order that I may address a few remarks to it.

COMING OF CHINESE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If none, the order of morning business is closed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 582.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 582) abrogating all treaties heretofore made and now operative between the United States Government and the Chinese Empire in so far as they, or any of them, provide for, recognize, or permit the coming of Chinese to the United States, and in so far as they, or any of them, inhibit the United States from absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States; and repealing all acts of Congress in so far as they, or any of them, recognize or permit the coming of Chinese to the United States; and absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States, excepting only diplomatic, consular, and other officers, and prohibiting the landing of any Chinese therein, excepting only such diplomatic and other officers.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, whatever doubts may have existed heretofore in any unprejudiced American mind in reference to the imperative necessity and absolute propriety of some plain, unambiguous, and positive provision, either by treaty or legislative enactment, whereby all Chinese persons of whatever citizenship, save and except perhaps government officials, should be forever excluded from entering this country, whether here formerly or not, should, by the history of Chinese affairs on the Pacific coast for the past three years, as well also as by the alarming increase of the arrivals of various classes of undesirable immigration at all our principal ports during the same period, be forever dissipated.

African slavery was a curse from the beginning; a dark blot on the Constitution; a detested stain on our statute-book; a constantly threatening cloud in our national firmament for a period of more than half a century. The speculative benefits it promised fed the cupidity and avarice of men. It evoked a social, monetary, and political power that grew strong, aggressive, defiant, and finally involved our nation in civil war. Blood flowed like water, and millions of treasure were consumed. A ghastly sacrifice of a million human lives swelled the awful aggregate of the terrible cost, and slavery and the slave power perished. Nations like individuals should learn wisdom from experience. The sacrifices of one generation should stand as the great historic lessons to guide aright those who succeed. These sacrifices in the past for the preservation of human liberty and free government should be the mute but eloquent instructors of the generations that follow.

Our soil is again polluted with the curse of human slavery. The domestic tranquillity, the public peace, the general welfare are again menaced in a double form, not by our own people through a permissive government, not this time by a domestic, but a foreign foe, who not only seek to occupy this country as the locusts occupied Egypt, but also aim to establish, and who have established within our borders, without our consent, in violation of our fundamental law, in defiance of municipal regulation, in direct antagonism to right, justice, order, and decency, a system of human bondage, more detestable, more degrading, more blighting, and more destructive, morally, socially, physically, and politically, than was ever that of African slavery in its palmiest days.

Professing to proceed under the solemn guaranties of treaty stipulations, these representatives of over 450,000,000 people, with all the sagacity, shrewdness, and perseverance, as well as ability, that characterize their leaders and masters, are gradually and rapidly possessing themselves of this country, bringing with them their systems of laws, their own imperial customs, their own peculiar vices, their own pagan institutions, and the chief corner-stone of all which, as has been and is now being abundantly demonstrated, is the very worst form of human servitude. All their impurities and disgusting criminalities, including all those offenses known to the American criminal calendar, and many others of a nature too depraved and disgusting to find mention in either the moral or political codes of civilized men, they seek to establish here. Already they have established an imperium in imperio in our very midst.

To enable them to carry out their evasions of law, to defeat justice, to establish and perpetuate crime, to destroy innocence, to canonize prostitution, to defy the executive officers of the Government, to deceive and hoodwink courts of justice; in a word, in order to enable them to cheat and swindle the Government in every essential particular, perjury is a crowning virtue, while hypocrisy, deception, and fraud are instrumentalities in constant use.

Yet, notwithstanding all this, we must be told from year to year, in Congress and elsewhere, that we are powerless as a nation to put an end to this prodigious evil, because, forsooth, in order to do this it may to some extent perhaps become necessary to modify our treaty stipulations with China.

Mr. President, rather than to permit this oriental octopus to fasten its disgusting and poisonous tentacles upon us more firmly than they already are, it were better that every line of treaty stipulation with the Chinese Empire that obstructs the way should be swept from the statute-book. All will concede, however, and none have denied, that the proper course to be attempted first in reference to this matter was for this Government to have made an earnest, honest effort to secure, if possible, by friendly negotiation, such modification of existing treaties with China as would forever exclude further Chinese from coming to this country, as well those now here who may voluntarily leave as those who have never been here, with the exceptions before stated. And in view of the concessions heretofore made by that Empire in reference to the restriction of Chinese immigration, it is not a matter of much doubt that this Government, if the proper effort had been made at the proper time—an effort characterized by that earnestness and good faith that its importance demanded—could have secured such modification of existing treaties. At least such modification doubtless could have been secured as would have prevented the return to this country of such as were formerly here, or who may hereafter leave the United States.

But has this been done? What effort has been made by the Administration in power, or those preceding it, for that matter, to secure this end? What steps have been taken by the President or Secretary of State toward negotiations with the Chinese Government having in view such a result? We hear rumors of treaties with Russia having reference to the extradition of political offenders; with England in reference to certain classes of offenders against the laws of the respective countries; we hear of commissions sitting in high council week after week, and month after month, over certain disputed questions relating to our fishery interests; we have a renewal of treaty stipulations with Hawaii covering certain commercial and political matters of some importance, it is true; but in reference to this most herculean of all gigantic evils that is being imposed upon and impressed upon us, from the shores of Asia, this evil, which embraces within it explosives more deadly than dynamite, an evil that depresses labor, corrupts morals, debases youth, makes merchandise of personal freedom and female virtue, mocks at justice, defies law, dwarfs enterprise, obstructs development, chains personal liberty, destroys personal freedom, menaces the public peace, invades domestic tranquillity, endangers the public welfare, converts whole sections of beautiful American cities—the homes of civilized, cultivated, and refined people—into squalid, wretched, crime-smitten, and leprous-spotted habitations of the lowest and most debased classes of the pagan Mongol—in reference to all this, in reference to ridding this country of such an evil, for the purpose of saving it from a deadly assault upon its most vital parts, and securing it from becoming the pest-house and criminal receptacle of pagan and debauched people of a tabooed race, numbering one-half the population of the globe, the Administration, so far as we are advised at present, has made no effort whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The Senator will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business; on which the Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] as entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I hope, by unanimous consent, the pending measure will be laid aside temporarily, so that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] may finish his speech.

Mr. GRAY. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill on which the Senator from Oregon is addressing it. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MITCHELL. Nor is this all, Mr. President. During the proceedings of the last Congress, when the question of the adoption of some measure looking to the absolute exclusion of Chinese was pending here, it was given out in Administration circles that negotiations were pending, and that there was a strong probability that a treaty would be consummated between the two Governments which would exclude absolutely the coming of Chinese in the future, with certain exceptions, to which we all agree; but as at present informed, not only no such treaty has been consummated, but no effort apparently to secure one has been made. In other words, the Eastern idea has prevailed; and engrossed with minor affairs, it seems the Administration has not yet awakened to the importance of the subject or the magnitude, in a national point of view, of the questions involved.

The advance, Mr. President, being made by the Mongolian armies of Asia on and over American States and Territories, cities, towns, and hamlets, although not yet perhaps sufficiently large to justify the assertion of the existence of present multitudinous invasion, is nevertheless, when critically viewed, of a character to excite the deepest apprehension as to the future. When, fifteen years ago, the subject of the propriety of restricting Chinese immigration was first seriously brought to the attention of Congress by Senators and Representatives from the Pacific coast, there was only here and there a nomadic Chinaman to be found in any city or town east of the Rocky Mountains.

Then this species of objectionable foreign immigration was located mostly in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and in the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Arizona; but how is it to-day? Gradually and almost imperceptibly, like the coming of a cold wave or the rising of the tide, they have crossed the Great American Desert, the Rocky Mountains, the Missouri and the Mississippi Rivers, and the Alleghany Mountains, and to-day there is scarcely a city, town, or hamlet, either large or small, not excepting the capital of the nation, in which there are not more or less, and in many of them a very considerable number of Chinese persons, employed in part in competition not only with honest white labor, but also with the thieves and outlaws of these various places in the practice of all the different artifices and devices so well understood and so successfully practiced by the criminal portion of this peculiar and objectionable race.

There are to-day in the city of New York alone 2,175 Chinese laundries, to say nothing of the innumerable opium joints, gambling dens, brothels, and other sinks of vice and iniquity in that modern Bedlam, carried on by Chinese. There are nearly as many more in the city of Brooklyn, on the other side of the East River. These people take out of New York and Brooklyn alone annually $1,000,000 in money. There are to-day, according to the best estimates, over 300,000 Chinese, all told, in this country. There are, it is believed, notwithstanding reports to the contrary, as many as 150,000, perhaps more, in the State of California, 30,000 in Oregon, 10,000 in Washington Territory, 5,000 in Montana and Idaho, to say nothing of those scattered over all portions of the country.

INCREASED FACILITIES FOR INVASION.

But the facilities for celerity of invasion have been vastly multiplied within the past year by the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railroad along the entire distance of our northern frontier, and the placing of a subsidized line of British steamers between its western terminus at Vancouver, in British Columbia, and Hong-Kong. At present the only real impediment or restriction in the way of Chinese entering the Canadian provinces in unlimited numbers is a head tax of $50 per capita. This amount is a mere bagatelle to the Chinese slave-dealers, the immensely wealthy Chinese Six Companies of San Francisco, and others equally influential and financially strong in China engaged in the slave-trade. Therefore, even should the head-tax law remain on the statute-book of the Dominion Government, it may be said there would be really no serious restriction upon Chinese immigration to that country; but already the same influences that have established steamer and railway connection between Canada and China and which are looking forward to this great passenger traffic from China over this line in the future, are moving for the repeal of the Canadian head tax. Already the bill for the repeal has passed one branch of the Canadian parliament, and it is likely to pass the other this winter.

And then what will inevitably be the result? Hundreds of thousands of Chinese will, by way of the British line of steamers and the Canadian Pacific Railway, reach British Columbia and other sections of our northern frontier. They will be scattered all along the boundary line, but their ultimate destination will be the United States. Like water from a sieve they will be showered upon us from every conceivable point on Puget Sound, and all along the line from Victoria to Halifax. As against such an invasion as we will be then subjected to, what will restriction acts as construed by our Federal courts amount to? What would they avail in such a case, even should the construction of existing laws given by the judges not prevail finally, and that given by the collector of customs in San Francisco be affirmed as the correct interpretation?

As the means of travel between nations and across empires are improved, as the cost of travel is materially diminished, just in the same ratio is the danger which threatens this country through a superabundance of undesirable immigration increased. If it is true, and history affirms the fact, that long prior to the invention of the steam-engine, centuries before steamships and railways had an existence, nations were invaded, peoples overrun, principalities destroyed, not by any superior intelligence or military skill, but solely by reason of the force of numbers, how much more likely are such things to occur in the present life of nations when through the instrumentality of steam, and electricity, and all the allied powers of scientific achievement, oceans are bridged with palatial homes, distances between the empires, kingdoms, and republics of earth, Christian and pagan, free and despotic, enlightened and barbarous, are annihilated, and all these are brought into immediate physical union; and when the continents of earth and the islands of the seas, the various hemispheres and the different zone belts of the earth, with their strangely complex, diverse, and non-homogeneous and non-assimilating millions, are brought into immediate and dangerous contact!

FORMER CHINESE INVASIONS UNDER TAMERLANE AND OTHER GREAT PAGAN LEADERS.

If the Chinese pagans, led on by the great Mongolian leader, Timur, or Tamerlane, over five long centuries ago, overwhelmed the principalities and peoples along the Tigris, the Euphrates, the Volga, the Ganges, and the Nile, and left a track of desolation through Russia, and Turkey, and Egypt, and India, which required centuries to efface; if the Chinese five hundred years ago proved themselves, under great leaders like Tamerlane, to be conquerors of vast extents of territory, and victorious over innumerable strong and intelligent principalities from the Tigris to Moscow and from Moscow to the shores of the Ganges, what may not with reason be feared from them and their countless millions in the future. Russia has felt the terrible shock of Chinese invasion, and to rally and fully recover from which it required the vigorous assertion of all her energies for centuries after. The present Czar of all the Russias is not unmindful of the great dangers to surrounding nations from vast numbers of Chinese invaders, if he is correctly reported. It is stated he recently declared that "the greatest danger to the western world existed in the Chinese Empire. It only needed," said he, "another Tamerlane to set in motion another invasion, comprising perhaps twenty million of the hardier races of Northern China, to overwhelm Europe, not by their military strength or skill, but by mere force of numbers. If twenty million," said he, "were not enough to do the work, then twenty million more might follow, drawn from a population that is to all intents and purposes numberless."

Those who believe, or who profess to believe, that the Chinese have lost or abandoned their idea of conquest and invasion of adjacent states are wild of the mark. Their attempt within the last year to absorb Corea, although futile so far, is ample evidence to the contrary. It is an open secret that the Chinese representative at Seoul, the Corean capital, within the last few months laid a conspiracy to depose the king, which included in its diabolical plans riots, bloodshed, and, if need be, covert assassination; which involved, moreover, incendiarism as a pretext for starting the riot, which was, when consummated, to be laid at the door of the Corean king. The premises to be fired were those of the ex-regent, the king's father, who has a large and influential following in Corea, but which is arrayed against the king because of their hatred of the present queen, whom it is said the ex-regent hates with a cordiality that is refreshing. Soldiers were sent to be drilled at Kangwha, to be commanded by the Chinese representative, who were to be conveniently near the palace when the riot broke out, and who were to be used ostensibly to put down the riot, but in reality to enable the Chinese to get possession of the person of the king for the purpose of carrying him off in the same manner they did the king's father three years ago, and then in the midst of this anarchy and confusion to declare the king's young brother heir-apparent and appoint the ex-regent regent until his majority, which would have enabled the Chinese to absorb Corea without opposition, or at least with the assent of the governing power, as the ex-regent seems to be in favor of the Chinese programme.

Papers covering this plan were actually drawn up by the Chinese representative at Corea, to be submitted to the head of the Chinese Government, and all that prevented this wicked scheme from being carried into execution was the loyalty of Prince Min Yong, a cousin of the queen, and the alertness and diplomacy of the representatives of the Corean king at Seoul.

WHAT EFFORT HAS BEEN MADE TO SECURE A MODIFICATION OF TREATIES SO AS TO ABSOLUTELY PROHIBIT FURTHER IMMIGRATION—THE TREATY-MAKING POWER AND CONGRESS BOTH DERELICT.

But recurring to the failure of the President and Secretary of State to negotiate a new treaty, it may well be remarked that the whole responsibility of failure upon the part of the United States up to the present time to meet this great question in a manner commensurate with its magnitude and befitting the wisdom and dignity of the Republic and the protection and preservation of all its vast interests does not rest wholly with the treaty-making power. Neither the Congress nor either of the two great political parties of the country can escape a large share of just responsibility upon this important subject.

For the reluctant, careless, dilatory, and absolutely inefficient manner in which the question of Chinese immigration has been treated by Congress there is not to be found, either on the score of comity between nations, upon the grounds of exalted statesmanship, upon the principles of the individual rights of man, personal liberty, or the doctrine of the right of expatriation, either shadow of excuse or semblance of palliation.

The voice of the people of the Pacific coast, who, irrespective of party, creed, or sect, and as the unified voice of many men, are now, and have been for years past, in favor of the absolute exclusion of further Chinese immigration to this country, has been and is stifled and, in a great measure, suppressed in both branches of Congress. It has been smothered in committees; it has been virtually treated with little less than contemptuous scorn; first, by failing by proper, courteous, but emphatic and unmistakable expression by resolution or otherwise, to indicate to the President and Secretary of State the desirability of immediate and earnest efforts upon the part of the Administration to secure by negotiation such modification of our treaties with China as will forever hereafter exclude the coming of Chinese to this country, whether coming for the first time, or seeking to return on the ground of prior residence, or on the false pretense of prior residence; and, second, by omitting, on the failure of the treaty-making power to secure such modification of treaties, to strike at the heart of this great evil with all the incisive force and effect of legislative enactment and Congressional power by the passage of an act of absolute exclusion, and thus to this extent, whatever may be the consequences, abrogate, if necessary, the provisions of existing treaties between the United States and the Chinese Empire which now stand in the way.

That there may be no ground for assuming that the criticisms just suggested are not well founded it may be proper to attract attention to certain historical facts and circumstances. So long as there was any probability that the modification of our treaties with China could or would be secured, it was of course not deemed wise by any one to strike down any treaty stipulation by an act of Congress. Common prudence, wise statesmanship, and justice to all would indicate this much. Although the attention of the President of the United States and the Secretary of State had, prior to February 11, 1886, been frequently attracted, not only to the absolute inefficiency of the present legislation as a means of enforcing treaty stipulations in reference to Chinese immigration, but also to the state of public opinion on the Pacific coast at least, which demanded in earnest and unmistakable terms a modification of our treaties so as to absolutely exclude the coming of Chinese in the future as the only real remedy for this great evil, no effort apparently had been made to secure such treaty modification.

Then it was, in obedience to what was believed, and which fact has since been absolutely demonstrated, was the earnest desire of at least 95 per cent. of the people of the Pacific coast, irrespective of party, I presented to the Senate the absolute exclusion bill now under discussion. Scarcely had this bill been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations when it was given out semi-officially, not only that negotiations had been entered upon by the Executive with the Chinese minister at Washington, with a view of securing a modification of existing treaties, so as to exclude the coming of Chinese in the future, with certain exceptions as to government officials, students, etc., to which no objection would be made by any one, but also that there was every reasonable probability to believe that if Congress would not be too aggressive such modification of our treaties would be secured at an early day.

These assurances, doubtless, induced the Committee on Foreign Relations to hesitate and proceed with moderation. Consequently, on April 29, 1886, that committee, through its chairman, the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], reported a bill to the Senate entitled "A bill supplemental to and amendatory of 'An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese,' approved May 6, 1882, as amended by an act to amend said act, approved July 5, 1884." This bill passed the Senate June 1, 1886, during the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and was sent to the House of Representatives and referred, as the record shows, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of that body, where it was soon cold in the icy sleep of death. In so far, however, as any good it would have accomplished had it become a law, its efficiency in that appropriate tomb is quite as effective as it would have been had it become a part and parcel of the legislation of the country.

This bill, as will be seen by its careful examination in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in re Cheow Heong (112 U. S., 540), and the history of Chinese affairs in the San Francisco Federal courts during the past three years in the matter of hearings on habeas corpus, and of the serious and radical conflict of opinion between these judges and the executive officers of the Government, was a mere inefficient attempt, futile in every particular, and wholly barren of any good, to provide more stringent means of identification of such Chinese persons as were in this country on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who came here prior to August 5, 1882, and who were about to depart subsequent to the date of such bill becoming a law, and who might wish to return. And while that bill did, in its fourth section, provide, as does the existing law, that the return certificate for which it provided should be the only evidence of the right of any Chinese laborer to return to and re-enter the United States, it provided in the ninth section as follows:

> But the provisions of this act shall not preclude a judicial inquiry into, and a determination of, the right of any person to come into the United States.

Here, therefore, was a step backwards, as neither the act of 1882 nor the amendment thereto of 1884 contained any such provision.

Moreover, that piece of legislation did not apply to or affect any Chinese persons whomsoever, excepting only such as might depart from this country after that bill should become a law. The truth is, the Senate bill to which allusion has just been made, so far from giving further security against Chinese immigration was, in fact, an affirmative extension of privileges to Chinese, a modification of existing legislation favorable to the claims of Chinese seeking to return on pretense of prior residence. It in terms did that which most assuredly is not done in terms or by necessary implication by existing law; it recognized the right upon the part of such Chinese to the writ of habeas corpus, while under existing legislation, if such right exists at all, it does not attach by reason of any provision of existing Chinese legislation, but solely from the general statute on the subject of the writ of habeas corpus.

But waiving for the moment, promising to return to it before closing, a discussion of the defects and ambiguities in existing legislation looking solely to the restriction of Chinese immigration within the provisions of the treaty, and the conflict of opinion as to its proper construction waged between the executive officials of the Government and the Federal courts in California with so much earnestness and ability, and with no small degree of acrimony on both sides, leading up to the very verge of collision of authority in the execution of the law, I desire to conclude what may very properly be said in reference to the absolutely careless, indifferent, and neglectful manner in which both the Administration and Congress have dealt with this subject.

The report having been given out, as stated, that the Administration was desirous of securing a modification of existing treaties, so as to exclude the coming of Chinese in the future, as a means of support in that direction, and for the purpose of encouraging and sustaining the Administration in what I believed to be a move in the right direction, and one dictated by a high order of statesmanship, I, on May 12, 1886, presented to the Senate a concurrent resolution, which on my motion was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That resolution was as follows:

> Whereas the experience of the past has fully demonstrated the fact, viewed from whatever standpoint, that further Chinese immigration to the United States is undesirable, and that the best interests of this country, of modern civilization, of the Chinese themselves, the vindication and integrity of free labor, and its just protection from the degrading labor of Asiatic coolyism, the preservation of domestic peace, and the promotion of the general welfare, demand the absolute prohibition in the future of the coming of Chinese to the United States, excepting only duly commissioned diplomats and other government officials, and their necessary body-servants and attendants: Therefore,
> Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring), That it is the sense of the American Congress that it is advisable that negotiations should be entered into with the Chinese Government without delay by the proper executive officers of the United States Government with a view of securing such modification of the existing treaties with China as will either in terms absolutely prohibit, or authorize the United States to absolutely prohibit, in the future the coming of Chinese to any port or place within the United States, excepting only duly accredited diplomatic, consular, and other government officials and their necessary body-servants and attendants, and excepting further only those driven into or seeking any port or place of shelter within the United States by or on account of storm or shipwreck.

That resolution was, by the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body, treated as though it never had been. It was never considered nor acted on by that committee so far as the Senate is advised. The committee gave no sign, either by action on that resolution or in any other manner whatever, that it was favorable to or against the absolute exclusion of Chinese, either by a modification of our treaty or through any other means or instrumentality, although there were on the records of that committee, or, if not actually before that committee, certainly before Congress with the full knowledge of every member of that committee, petitions respectfully and with great earnestness and ability praying for such action, signed by over one hundred thousand men, including many, in fact nearly all, of the most distinguished and leading citizens of this Republic residing in the States and Territories of the Pacific coast; and although there was also before that committee one of the ablest memorials ever draughted in these United States or elsewhere upon the subject of Chinese immigration, specifying fully and in detail its great evils and the dangers it involved to the general peace and public welfare of this country, and unanimously adopted by the ablest and most thoroughly representative convention ever held in the State of California, composed of the leading representative men of that State of both political parties, held at Sacramento on the 11th day of March, 1886, and strongly urging the passage of this very bill. Notwithstanding all this the committee remained silent as the grave on this subject, except as to the bill to which I have attracted attention.

It was in obedience to these respectful and earnest demands that I, as one of the representatives in this body from that section, called upon the distinguished Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate in what I then thought, and still believe, was a dignified, entirely proper, and respectful manner, for some expression of opinion from that committee on this important subject in favor of a modification of our treaties with the Chinese Empire, looking to the strangulation by negotiation of an evil then and now threatening this country, and which, unless it is strangled, will in time, and at no distant day, involve this country in more serious convulsions and misfortunes than did ever that of African slavery.

Why, in the presence of such a demand from one great section of this country, did that distinguished committee remain silent? What objection could there be to either that honorable committee, this Senate, as a co-ordinate branch of the treaty-making power, or of the Congress expressing an opinion one way or the other on this important question? Simple courtesy, it seemed to me, required that a demand of this character, in the form of a memorial from such a representative body and by petitions signed by over one hundred thousand law-abiding citizens, should have received some recognition. If that honorable committee, or a majority of it, held to the opinion that no modification of our existing treaties with China was either necessary or desirable, if the judgment of this important mouthpiece of the Senate upon subjects relating to immigration was opposed to the exclusion of Chinese either by treaty or otherwise, then why not say so, and by an adverse report give this Senate and the House of Representatives an opportunity to either concur in or dissent from such judgment, and thus give the people of the Pacific coast, so vitally interested in this question, so thoroughly aroused in reference to it, to understand precisely where Congress stands upon this subject?

It will not do, Mr. President, to say that a suggestion of this character to the Executive in a respectful and dignified form would be either indelicate or discourteous or in any sense improper. The records of the Senate since its organization are full of precedents. It may have been, probably was, somewhat presumptuous in one not a member of the committee to have suggested it, but the fact that such committee had then no representation from the Pacific coast may, to some extent, palliate the offense. I am glad to know that the experiment has been repeated at the present session by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who on Monday last, the 9th instant, introduced a similar resolution. I trust the committee will give it that consideration its importance demands.

But what has been the result? Notwithstanding the fact that all legislation looking either to more adequate and severe restrictive measures, or absolute exclusion, was defeated during the Forty-ninth Congress, mainly through statements emanating apparently directly and authoritatively from the Secretary of State, that a treaty was under consideration and would undoubtedly be negotiated, which would go further, perhaps, in the direction of exclusion than would probably any legislation under existing treaties that could receive the assent of the two Houses and the Executive, and notwithstanding this same argument was used most effectively in Congress to secure the passage of the Chinese Warm Springs indemnity, giving the Chinese Government $150,000 out of the national Treasury, which bill, by the way, was promptly and enthusiastically reported favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body and passed by both Houses of Congress, it is a fact that no sooner had the Forty-ninth Congress adjourned than all talk about a new treaty immediately ceased, and the country from that day until the present has not heard a single word or intimation in that direction.

But not only so. It now transpires, so far as one may judge from existing facts and past performances, that all this report about pending negotiations during the last Congress, and which was used so effectively for the purposes suggested, was not of course exactly false in the ordinary acceptation of that term, but simply a piece of well-planned diplomacy, having in view the accomplishment of two purposes: first, the defeat of legislation affecting Chinese immigration, and, second, the passage of the Chinese indemnity act. The diplomatic ruse, whether originating in the fertile and able brain of the Chinese minister at Washington, or in that of some of his associates and friends, patrons at his sumptuous and generous dinner-table, and whereby our distinguished and able Secretary of State was overreached and Congress hoodwinked, it is now quite immaterial to inquire.

It is enough to know all legislation in the interest of the people of this country in connection with Chinese affairs was defeated, while the enterprising Chinese Empire, through its able and highly diplomatic minister at Washington, pockets the snug little sum of $150,000 in cash of the people's money taken directly in coin from the people's Treasury, and uses it for what purposes no one knows, save the few dollars recently so diplomatically returned by the Chinese minister to the Treasury of the United States simply for the purpose of constructing a cunning diplomatic hook upon which to hang arguments and appeals in the future in the interest of the Chinese Empire and its subjects in this country.

This, then, being the state of the case, and inasmuch as it has been truthfully stated recently by Judge Hagar, collector of the port of San Francisco, and which assertion has been verified in a thousand ways in the past few years, "that the restriction act as now administered is an utter failure," I have ventured to once more present for the consideration of the Senate the pending bill, which provides in plain, unambiguous, positive, and unmistakable terms for the abrogation of all treaties heretofore made and now operative between the United States Government and the Chinese Empire in so far as they, or any of them, provide for, recognize, or permit the coming of the Chinese to the United States, and in so far as they, or any of them, inhibit the United States from absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States, excepting only diplomatic, consular, and other officers, and prohibiting the landing of any Chinese therein, excepting only such diplomatic and other officers.

HAS CONGRESS THE POWER TO ABROGATE A TREATY, AND IS IT NOT ITS DUTY TO DO SO WHENEVER SUCH TREATY OR ANY OF ITS PROVISIONS BECOMES PERNICIOUS TO THE STATE?

And this leads me to consider this double or compound question: First, has Congress the power, by an act of Congress, to abrogate the provisions of an existing treaty with a foreign government; and, second, is it not the duty of Congress to do so whenever it is clearly apparent that such provisions are prejudicial or pernicious to the state?

It is occasionally suggested by leading journalists and jurists claiming to be learned, from whom better opinions should be expected, that Congress has not the power to abrogate or repeal the provisions of a treaty. This is an entirely mistaken notion, and no jurist, either on the bench or off, would now risk his reputation as such by asserting such a doctrine. When this bill was under consideration in the last Congress I took occasion to discuss this constitutional question at some length, and I now beg to incorporate into my remarks what I then said on that subject.

And in this connection I assert it as a fact that the doctrine that a subsequent act of Congress in so far as it conflicts with the provisions of a prior treaty with a foreign power or an Indian tribe abrogates the treaty to that extent, is one that has received the unqualified sanction of every department of this Government, legislative, executive, administrative, and judicial, and no man but an ignoramus in the profession, and I might perhaps say with propriety in every other respect as well, would expose himself or his paper to ridicule by asserting to the contrary.

True, article 6 of the Constitution provides that—

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

Even though the doctrine that a subsequent statute in direct conflict with a prior statute, whether purporting to repeal the former, or that otherwise operates as such repeal, could not be properly applied to a case of a subsequent statute coming in direct conflict with a prior treaty, the contention can be successfully maintained, and has been time out of mind, that for certain great purposes for which the Constitution was ordained and established by the people of the United States, such as the common defense and general welfare, including the power to declare war; to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States; to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to coin money and regulate the value thereof; to raise and support armies; to borrow money on the credit of the United States; to establish a uniform rule of naturalization; to promote the progress of science and useful arts; to provide and maintain a navy; and in fact all the powers vested in Congress by the Constitution, the powers so vested can not be taken away, impaired, or in any manner abridged by the Executive and the Senate in pursuance of the exercise of the treaty-making power.

The supreme right on the part of the Government to exercise at all times and under all circumstances through the Congress any power delegated to it by the Constitution, and the exercise of which in its judgment may become necessary to the vindication of the great rights which pertain to the common defense and the general welfare, stands pre-eminent above and beyond the reach or assailment of any other power, whether executive, judicial, or administrative; and the treaty-making power, although guarantied by the Constitution, is limited and subordinated to the exercise by Congress of those supreme powers necessary to the execution of the general purposes specified, for which the Constitution was ordained, and the right to exercise which are by the terms of the Constitution, specifically or inferentially granted to Congress.

Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution, volume 3, section 1502, makes the following statement:

"The treaty-making power is necessarily and obviously subordinate to the fundamental laws and constitution of the state, and it can not change the form of the Government or annihilate its constitutional powers."

Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution again in section 1508, volume 2, in speaking of the treaty-making power, remarks as follows:

"The power to make treaties is by the Constitution general, and of course it embraces all sorts of treaties—for peace or war, for commerce or territory, for allowance or succors, for indemnity for injuries or payment of debts, for the recognition and enforcement of principles of public law, and for any other purposes which the policy or interests of independent sovereigns may decide in their intercourse with each other. But though the power is thus general and unrestrained, it is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental law of the state.

"A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to authorize a destruction of other powers given in the same instrument. It must be construed, therefore, in subordination to it, and can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions. Each is equally obligatory and of paramount authority within its scope, and no one embraces a right to annihilate any other. A treaty to change the organization of the Government or annihilate its sovereignty, to overturn its republican form, or to deprive it of its constitutional powers, would be void, because it would destroy what it was designed merely to fulfill—the will of the people."

Inasmuch, therefore, as the Congress has by virtue of an express grant in the Constitution the "power to regulate commerce with foreign nations," and inasmuch as the Burlingame treaty is in all its essential particulars nothing more nor less than a regulation of commerce between the United States and China, and as an act of Congress inhibiting the coming of Chinese to this country and absolutely excluding them from it would be the exercise of the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, it therefore follows that the making of the treaty did not, and constitutionally could not, in any manner or in any respect, impair the power of Congress to pass a prohibitory act whenever in its judgment it became necessary to do this; and to hold that the Burlingame treaty and the treaty supplementary thereto should be construed as an inhibition on the power of Congress to pass a prohibitory law, would be simply to declare that the treaty itself was absolutely void, because in such a case the effect of the treaty would be to deprive Congress of its constitutional power.

But the doctrine that a subsequent act of Congress abrogates a prior treaty in so far as it conflicts with its provisions is one that has been recognized in this Government since the matter was first discussed or the question raised nearly ninety years ago; and it has received the sanction of every department of the Government—legislative, executive, administrative, and judicial—commencing with its exercise by Congress, when on July 7, 1798, an act of Congress was passed abrogating our treaties with France. That act declared among other things as follows:

"That the United States are of right freed and exonerated from the stipulations of the treaties and of the consular convention heretofore concluded between the United States and France; and that the same shall not henceforth be regarded as legally obligatory on the Government of the United States or citizens of the United States."

But not only so. The Department of Justice has through its Attorneys-General, at different times, proclaimed this doctrine in unqualified terms. Attorney-General Crittenden (see Opinions Attorneys-General, volume 5, page 345), in discussing the question of conflict between a prior treaty and a subsequent act of Congress with reference to the Florida claims, uses the following language:

"An act of Congress is as much a supreme law of the land as a treaty. They are placed on the same footing, and no preference or superiority is given to the one or the other. The last expression of the lawgiving power must prevail; and just for the same reason and on the same principle that a subsequent act must prevail and have effect, though inconsistent with a prior act, so must an act of Congress have effect though inconsistent with a prior treaty."

Again, Attorney-General Akerman, as late as the year 1870, in the case of the Choctaw Indians (see Opinions Attorneys-General, volume 13, page 357), said:

"There is nothing in the Constitution which assigns different ranks to treaties and to statutes; both the one and the other, when not inconsistent with the Constitution, seem to stand upon the same level and to be of equal validity; and as in the case of all laws emanating from an equal authority, the earlier in date yields to the later."

But not only so. Repeatedly has the Federal judiciary through its circuit and supreme courts, without reserve, doubt, or qualification of the doctrine, held that the power to abrogate a treaty with a foreign power, as well as with the Indian tribes, does not rest exclusively with the Executive and the Senate, but does reside in the Congress. The court, in Taylor vs. Martin (2 Curtis's Circuit Court Reports, 454), in discussing this subject, uses the following language:

"It is impossible to maintain that under our Constitution the President and the Senate exclusively possess the power to modify or repeal a law found in a treaty. If this were true no change in a treaty could be made without the consent of some foreign government. That the Constitution was designed to place our country in this helpless condition is a supposition wholly inadmissible. It is not only inconsistent with the necessities of a nation, but negatived by the express words of the Constitution. That gives to Congress, in so many words, power to declare war, an act which ipso facto repeals all treaties inconsistent with a state of war. It can not, therefore, be admitted that the only method of escape from a treaty is by the consent of the other party to it or a declaration of war.

"To refuse to execute a treaty for reasons which approve themselves to the conscientious judgment of a nation is a matter of the utmost gravity, but the power to do so is a prerogative of which no nation can be deprived without deeply affecting its independence. That the people of the United States have deprived their Government of this power I do not believe; that it must reside somewhere and be applicable to all cases I am convinced, and I feel no doubt that it belongs to Congress."

But the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme arbiter in all questions of this character, finally settled the doctrine beyond the power of future controversy in this country in the case known as "The Cherokee Tobacco case," reported in 11 Wallace, page 616. The court in that case (opinion by Mr. Justice Swayne) uses the following language:

"The effect of treaties and of acts of Congress, when in conflict, is not settled by the Constitution. But the question is not involved in any doubt as to its proper solution. The treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress (2 Peters, 314), and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty (2 Curtis, 454; 1 Woolworth, 155).

"In the cases referred to these principles were applied to treaties with foreign nations. Treaties with Indian nations can not be more obligatory. They have no higher sanctity, and no greater inviolability or immunity from legislative invasion can be claimed for them. The act of Congress must prevail as if the treaty were not an element to be considered. If a wrong has been done the power of redress is with Congress, not with the judiciary."

This doctrine, so well settled that it is a matter of amazement that any one, much less the constitutional expounders of great metropolitan journals, should assert to the contrary, was fully recognized by President Hayes in his veto message of March 1, 1879, wherein he gave his reasons for withholding his approval of the bill passed by both Houses of that Congress restricting the immigration of Chinese to the United States; although on the ground of policy solely he vetoed the bill, he in terms recognized the power of Congress to abrogate the Burlingame treaty in these words:

"The authority of Congress to terminate a treaty with a foreign power, by expressing the will of the nation no longer to adhere to it, is as free from controversy under our Constitution as is the further proposition that the power of making new treaties or modifying existing treaties is not lodged by the Constitution in Congress, but in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as shown by the concurrence of two-thirds of that body."

A further declaration is made in this message:

"A denunciation of any treaty by any government is confessedly justifiable only upon some reason, both of the highest justice and of the highest necessity."

And in this connection it may not be out of place to attract attention to the fact that in the passage of the bill in the Forty-fifth Congress abrogating the Burlingame treaty the two Houses of Congress by a most decided vote declared not only in favor of the power of Congress to abrogate a treaty with a foreign power, but did actually in that particular instance, in so far as the Congress could do it in the absence of executive approval, absolutely abrogate, set aside, and repeal the Burlingame treaty. The vote on the passage of that bill was in the House of Representatives 155 yeas, 72 nays, not voting 61, and most of whom were paired.

But not only so. A doctrine akin to this has been recognized time and time again by Congress in the passage of revenue laws. In 1857 the United States entered into a treaty with Denmark in which there was a provision to the effect that "no higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United States of any article, the produce or manufacture of the dominion of the treaty-making power, than are or should be payable on like articles, being the produce or manufacture of any other foreign country."

Subsequently, in 1875, the United States entered into a treaty with the Hawaiian Islands in which certain products were admitted free of duty, and it was insisted upon the part of the exporters in Denmark that by virtue of the provision in the Danish treaty similar products to those admitted under the Hawaiian treaty should come in free of duty, but the circuit court for the southern district of New York held as follows:

"The stipulation in a treaty with a foreign power to the effect that no higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United States of any article, the produce or manufacture of the dominion of the treaty-making power, than are or shall be payable on the like articles the produce or manufacture of any other foreign country, does not prevent Congress from passing an act exempting from duty like products and manufactures imported from any particular foreign dominion it may see fit."

And although we have similar provisions to that contained in our treaty with Denmark, in our treaties with Prussia, Sweden and Norway, the Two Sicilies, Portugal, Nicaragua, Hayti, Honduras, and Italy, yet none of these provisions in these several treaties has ever stood in the way of Congress enacting such tariff laws as were deemed necessary and proper.

In fact, the national House of Representatives so long ago as on the 7th day of April, 1796, adopted a resolution declaring that when a treaty depended for the execution of any of its stipulations on an act of Congress, it was the right and duty of the House to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect. And though it is a fact that President Washington in his message of 30th of March, 1796, denied this right on the part of the House of Representatives, it has been exercised time and time again during all the administrations of the past.

It is true a doctrine contrary to that which has become firmly settled in this country as applicable to treaties between certain nations, and to which the United States is not a party, has sometime been asserted but not maintained by these foreign nations; as, for instance, the congress of Paris in 1856, in which Great Britain, France, Prussia, Sardinia, and Freiburg were represented by ministers plenipotentiary, declared it to be an essential principle of the law of nations that "none of them can liberate itself from the engagements of a treaty nor modify the stipulations thereof unless with the consent of the contracting parties by means of an amicable understanding."

But this doctrine has never received the sanction of either the executive, administrative, or judicial authorities of this country; nor has the doctrine been practically acted upon, carried out, or enforced by any of the governments represented in that congress; but, on the contrary, a notable example of an entire repudiation of this doctrine by Great Britain is to be found in the passage by the British Parliament of the act of 1870 abrogating in part our extradition treaty with that Government of 1842. And it may as well be remembered by those who are so punctilious upon the subject of interference with treaty stipulations that Great Britain in the passage of that act did so without making any inquiries whatever of the Government of the United States, and without soliciting its consent, and without giving any notice whatever of its intention to modify the provisions of the extradition treaty by an act of Parliament.

During the discussion of the Chinese question in the Senate in May, 1876, this very question as to the power of Congress to abrogate a treaty came up and was alluded to as follows:

"Mr. OGLESBY. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Vermont, as I do not know myself, whether any conflict exists or not on the point concerning which I am about to inquire. Suppose under the treaty-making power a treaty should be made with China which should contain certain specific regulations upon this very question, and it should be duly ratified by the Senate, and a law of Congress under the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations should be passed upon the same subject, general but internal in its application, and yet in conflict with the terms of the treaty, I should be obliged to the Senator from Vermont to state if he knows whether there has been any determination by the Supreme Court as to how that conflict would be regarded under the Constitution of the United States. Would the law passed by Congress regulating commerce in conflict with a treaty upon that subject prevail or would the treaty prevail?

"Mr. EDMUNDS. As I understand it, the Supreme Court of the United States has two or three times (but once is enough, it being a unanimous opinion) determined that under the Constitution, just as it reads, the laws passed by Congress and treaties are both of them equally the supreme law of the land, any law or regulation of a State to the contrary notwithstanding. I do not quote the words, but that is the substance. Now, that being the state of the Constitution, the Supreme Court has decided unanimously more than once, and I think upon perfectly impregnable grounds, that, if a law is in conflict with a treaty that existed when the law was made, the treaty, to the extent that the law does conflict with it, is abrogated by the general sovereign power of the nation. Whether that abrogation would be an act of injustice or of war, or whatever it might be called, toward the foreign nation with whom we had the treaty, is a question with which, of course, the courts have nothing to do. On the other hand, if a law as a commercial regulation, to say nothing about the right of the House of Representatives to originate revenue bills and tariff bills—waiving all that—if a law about the introduction of persons should be passed, and afterward the President and the Senate should conclude a treaty with a foreign power which conflicted with the law, then in the same way the treaty would override the law and abrogate the law to that extent. In other words, the last act of the sovereign power exercised in either way under the Constitution, being a complete exercise of sovereign power, would prevail."

But, again, in 1879, when the act abrogating the Burlingame treaty was finally passed through both Houses of Congress, Senator Thurman, of Ohio, expressed his views upon this question as follows:

"It has been said," referring to the prohibition of Chinese immigration, "that it can only be done by the negotiation of a new treaty. I do not know that that proposition has been distinctly advocated upon this floor; but if it does lurk in the mind of any Senator I beg him to listen to the very few observations I have to make upon it.

"To me it seems perfectly clear that the proposition can not for a moment be sustained, and that it would be ruinous to this country, or to any country, to hold that a treaty can only be put an end to by the negotiation of another, for that would put you completely at the mercy of the party with whom you had negotiated the treaty. Take, for instance, this very case. If we can only put an end to this treaty by negotiating a new treaty with China, then it is in the power of China, by refusing to negotiate a new treaty or such a one as we desire, to hold us to this treaty, however detrimental to our interests it may be.

"Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he knows of any one who holds that doctrine?

"Mr. THURMAN. I said I did not know; but it has been said and it has been argued, and the Senator from Maine knows very well that when he and I were members of the other House, in the celebrated Oregon discussion, it was stoutly maintained then that the convention with Great Britain, known as the Oregon convention, could not be put an end to by an act of Congress.

"Mr. President, I said that the very necessity of the case requires that this power should reside in Congress. It must reside somewhere, and it must reside in that department of the Government which can judge for itself, irrespective of what any foreign power may say. The very existence of the Government itself might depend upon the exercise of this power. It is very true that if we were, without cause, to put an end to a treaty and thereby prejudice the other party to it, we should, in morals and according to the law of nations, be responsible in damages for such abrogation; but still the power to do so exists in every party to a treaty. In the nature of things it must be so. Treaties are like partnerships. There is no such thing as an indissoluble partnership; there is no such thing as an indissoluble treaty. Either party may declare it abrogated, being responsible if it abrogates it without due cause; but the treaty itself is at an end. And that Congress is the right department of the Government to put an end to it follows, as a matter of course, if it be admitted that there is some other mode of putting an end to it than by the negotiation of a new treaty. If it does not belong solely to the treaty-making part of the Government to put an end to it by the negotiation of a new treaty, then, ex necessitate, it must belong to the legislative department of the Government, and this is perfectly consistent with the declaration of the Constitution in article 6:

"'This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.'

"A treaty is a law according to the Constitution, and its modification or its abrogation belongs to that department of the Government which makes and unmakes laws.

"Mr. President, in pursuance of this view we have again and again modified, or even abrogated, or put an end to treaties. The most notable case—one that excited this country very greatly at the time it happened—was the action of Congress in 1798 in regard to the treaties made with France, including that celebrated treaty of the Revolution with France, to which we owed so much in achieving our independence. In 1798, by act approved July 7, Congress declared as follows:

"'Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the United States are of right free and exonerated from the stipulations of the treaties and of the consular convention heretofore concluded between the United States and France, and that the same shall not henceforth be regarded as legally obligatory on the Government or citizens of the United States.'

Senator Thurman, proceeding, further said:

"There was a treaty abrogated expressly by act of Congress, and on the question of power it does not in the least militate against this exercise of power by Congress that the preamble to this act sets forth divers causes why the treaties ought to be abrogated, and alleges breaches of the treaty on the part of France; because, whether there was cause or not cause to abrogate that treaty, if the Congress had no power to abrogate it, if the power to abrogate it resided with the treaty-making portion of the Government, then, no matter what was the cause, Congress had no right to pass that law. But it was not so regarded then. Congress did pass that law; and we have again and again since, and notably in our treaties with the Indian tribes, modified or even put an end to them, according to our own opinion of what was right and proper; and that we have that power in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States has been conclusively shown by the Senator who last spoke on this bill."

Mr. Justice Field, in the case of the Chinese laborer from Hong-Kong, decided by him in the United States circuit court of the ninth circuit, September 24, 1883, in discussing this very question, said:

"It will not be presumed, in the absence of clear language to that purport, that Congress intended to disregard the requirements of a treaty with a foreign government, or to abrogate any of its clauses. At the same time, an act of Congress must be construed according to its manifest intent, and, so far as the courts are concerned, must be enforced. A treaty is in nature a contract between two nations, and by writers on public law is generally so treated, and not as having of itself the force of a legislative act. The Constitution of the United States, however, places both treaties and laws made in pursuance thereof in the same category, and declares them to be the supreme law of the land. It does not give to either a paramount authority over the other. So far as a treaty operates by its own force without legislation, it is to be regarded by the courts as equivalent to a legislative act, but nothing further. If the subject to which it relates be one upon which Congress can also act, that body may modify its provisions or supersede them entirely. The immigration of foreigners to the United States and the conditions upon which they shall be permitted to remain are appropriate subjects of legislation, as well as of treaty stipulation. No treaty can deprive Congress of its power in that respect. As said by Mr. Justice Curtis in Taylor vs. Morton: 'Inasmuch as treaties must continue as part of our municipal law, be obeyed by the people, applied by the judiciary, and executed by the President while they continue unrepealed, and inasmuch as the power of repealing these municipal laws must reside somewhere, and nobody other than Congress possesses it, then legislative power is applicable to such laws whenever they relate to subjects which the Constitution has placed under that legislative power.' (2 Curtis C. C. Reports, 459.)"

Mr. Justice Field in discussing this question in Chew Heong vs. The United States, supra, uses this language:

If, however, the act of Congress be in conflict with the treaty upon the immigration of Chinese laborers, it must control as being the last expression of the sovereign will of the country. * * * If the treaty relates to a subject within the powers of Congress and operates by its own force, it can only be regarded by the courts as equivalent to a legislative act. Congress may, as with an ordinary statute, modify its provisions, or supersede them altogether. The immigration of foreigners to this country, and the conditions upon which they shall be permitted to come or remain, are proper subjects both of legislation and of treaty stipulation. The power of Congress, however, over the subject can neither be taken away nor impaired by any treaty.

IS THE TREATY PERNICIOUS TO THE STATE, PREJUDICIAL TO ITS BEST INTERESTS, AND SHOULD IT BE ABROGATED?

The power of Congress, therefore, to abrogate these treaties being beyond question, the next proposition to which I desire to attract attention is this: Do the admitted facts, read and known by all men, either demand or justify its exercise in the manner proposed by this bill? I insist, without fear of successful contradiction, that they not only justify but imperatively demand it. And in this connection I concede that the abrogation of a treaty with a foreign power by Congressional enactment should never be attempted, much less consummated, except for the gravest, most satisfactory, and conclusive reasons. But if from its inception it has been, or has for any reason since become, either contrary to the fundamental law, prejudical to the state, or in its operation or effect pernicious to the commonwealth, and in its tendencies violative of the public peace or subversive of public justice, then no higher duty could possibly devolve on the American Congress than that of striking it down and wiping it out, either on account of its illegality or because it was from its inception, or has become, a vicious enemy of the state. Indeed, writers on international law agree in the declaration that a treaty that is prejudicial or pernicious to the state is absolutely void, just as a treaty is that is in conflict with the fundamental law. Vattel, in his Laws of Nations, section 228, in discussing this subject, says:

"Every treaty prejudicial to the state or contrary to her fundamental laws being in its own nature void, the oath that may have been added to such treaty is void likewise and falls to the ground together with the covenant which it was intended to confirm."

And continuing further he says:

"A treaty pernicious to the state is null and not at all obligatory."

"Though a simple injury or disadvantage in a treaty is not sufficient to render it invalid, the case is not the same with those inconveniences that lead to the ruin of the state."

While Grotius, the great author of international law, states the following rule:

"The natural law, by which every nation is bound to maintain its own existence, is not abdicated by treaty."

In this connection I shall assume that it is conceded by over 95 per cent. of all intelligent, reasoning men of mature years in the United States who have given to this subject any consideration, whatever may be their opinion as to the abstract right of the proposition as to whether their coming should be absolutely excluded by law, that the presence of Chinese in this country is an evil colossal in character, insidious in its operations, pernicious in effect, provocative of dissension and strife, the corruptor of public and private morals, a blight upon American labor, an obstruction to the rightful demands of honest toil, a disturber of the public peace, a restraint on desirable European immigration, a common enemy of the toiling millions of our land, a gradually and rapidly expanding and fearful menace to the best interests of our Republic, and a poisonous cup to the lips of Christian civilization.

Whatever may be the sentiment on this subject east of the Rocky Mountains, where the shadows of this great scourge have as yet comparatively so lightly fallen, there is among the people west of the Rocky Mountains but one sentiment, but one mind, but one judgment on this great and all-absorbing question, if we may except an occasional mercenary journal whose venal proprietors attach more value to the patronage of the Chinese Six Companies than they do to the rights of the masses of the people or the best interests of the State, or an occasional corporation whose interest is to degrade labor, cheapen the price of honest toil, and obtain the services of the laboring man at the lowest possible price.

As bearing upon this question of unanimity of opinion on the Pacific coast in opposition to Chinese immigration, it may be well to remember that eight years ago, through the action of the Legislature of the State of California, the question was submitted to a vote of the people of that State. The whole vote cast was 155,521—a full vote. Of these 154,638 were cast in opposition to Chinese immigration, while only 883 votes were cast in favor of it. And it is an unquestionable fact that public opinion on this question in the infected districts—and by this is meant the whole Pacific coast, including, as I believe, also the State of Colorado and the Territories of New Mexico, Wyoming, Montana, and Dakota—has ever since been becoming more solidified, more robust, more aggressive, and is now more determined and emphatic than ever before.

To-day there is but one voice on the Pacific coast on this question, coming alike from the field and the workshop, the bench and the bar, the rostrum and the pulpit, while the press, irrespective of party, with but an occasional exception, as stated, is indefatigable and able not only in its attacks on the dreadful invasion, but also in insisting that the real remedy is that proposed by the bill I have presented. As evidence of my statement in this regard, I attract attention to the following editorials and extracts from some of the leading journals of San Francisco, that have fallen under my notice the past few days.

Mr. President, I also, when this bill was under consideration in the Senate in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, cited various articles from the leading journals of the Pacific coast, showing clearly the state of public opinion at that time in reference to this whole subject. I now reproduce these articles, as follows:

I find in the San Francisco Evening Post of the 15th instant the following report of a pulpit discourse recently delivered in that city by the celebrated Congregational divine, Rev. Dr. Barrows:

"At the First Congregational Church last evening Rev. C. D. Barrows, the pastor, delivered a strong anti-Chinese sermon, in which he favored adopting any legal measure for expelling the Mongolian from this country. He said the time had come when the pulpit could no longer be silent, but must show equal interest with the press in affairs of this character. Self-protection was always justifiable, and if so in individuals why not in communities? Invasion, he remarked, was not immigration. If one invites a stranger to share a meal, and he proposes not only to take his portion, but that of the family and turn them out of doors, should the host submit? There was no question that the Chinese were usurping our rights, and the laws human and divine entitled us to protect ourselves. The speaker declared that justice must not be forgotten, and defied the philosopher or missionary to prove by the Bible that there was any justice in the present state of affairs. The Chinese should be removed in accordance with justice, and there should be no more such immigration. Religious people made a great mistake when they thought that the only thing to do with the Chinese here is to Christianize them. In conclusion, he stated that there was a necessity to readjust the national policy, and that we must make our country one of reunited States, and not the home of vagabonds."

The Evening Post comments editorially in the same issue, as follows:

"Two weeks ago Rev. John Gray preached in the same strain at the Episcopal Church of the Advent. Neither of the reverend gentlemen said anything novel upon the theme which engaged his eloquence—for, indeed, no one can say anything new upon so well worn a subject—but the fact that two clergymen belonging to denominations so respectable, numerous, and influential should seize the present occasion to speak out so boldly and intelligently upon the Chinese question is noteworthy and gratifying. There has been a great advance within the past ten years in the position of the Pacific coast pulpit on this subject. Time was when here, as elsewhere throughout the country, it was thought that the pro-Chinese view was necessarily the Christian view. The argument ran thus: As it is the duty of Christians to convert the heathen, everything that facilitates this work is to be encouraged; Chinese who are brought to this country come directly under Christian influences—therefore, Chinese immigration should be approved. Long experience has shown, however, that it is no easier to convert the Chinaman here than on his native soil, and it has also become painfully apparent that whatever benefit, spiritual or other, the Chinese may derive from being in America, nobody else gains any permanent advantage. It has been seen that the presence of the Chinese means poverty, suffering, and moral and religious blight to many of our own race.

"The church view of the Chinese question has, therefore, broadened so as to take in the souls of whites as well as of Mongolians, and the result is that many clergymen are now among the most earnest advocates of exclusion. The religious press of the coast is almost as outspoken as the secular in its antagonism to coolyism. Of late the Occident, the Presbyterian organ, has been doing good missionary work in enlightening its pious contemporaries of the East as to the evils, material and spiritual, which accompany the advent of the picturesque heathen from Asia into American communities. It is significant of the changed attitude of the church that the anti-Chinese convention held recently at San José selected a Baptist clergyman of that city as its agent and representative to travel through the State and organize anti-cooly clubs.

"How can our esteemed contemporaries of the East reconcile these facts with their theory that hostility to the Chinese is confined on the Pacific coast to the ignorant and the vicious? We should like to see the sermons of Dr. Barrows and Rev. Mr. Gray printed in pamphlet form and sent to every newspaper office in the Union—especially to every religious newspaper office."

The San Francisco Evening Post in its issue of the 12th instant, in referring to the introduction of the bill now under discussion, speaks editorially as follows:

"THE MITCHELL BILL.

"Senator MITCHELL, of Oregon, has introduced a Chinese bill of a much more thorough character than any that has yet been offered by a responsible statesman. It abrogates all existing treaties with China so far as they hamper the United States in dealing with immigration; forbids the entry of any Chinese persons except government officials and their servants; provides punishment for any master of a vessel who brings Chinese in violation of the law; prohibits the naturalization of Chinese, and makes due provision for the execution of the act. No chance is left for the courts to nullify the law. The prohibition of immigration, with the one exception named, is absolute. In express terms, it applies to all persons of Chinese race, whether subjects of the Chinese Empire or not. The amiable witness, who appears with mechanical regularity to swear that the petitioner once lived on 'Dupon' stiee',' would, under this measure, find his occupation gone, for previous residence is not recognized by the bill.

"As to the justice of this proposed act there can not be two opinions on the Pacific coast. It is precisely what the Post has been recommending for months, and what will have to come, sooner or later."

The Daily Evening Bulletin of the same issue said, among other things, in its leading editorial, the following:

"SENATOR MITCHELL'S PROPOSITION.

"Senator MITCHELL, of Oregon, has introduced a bill in the Senate to abrogate all treaties which give the Chinese the right to enter this country and then effectually exclude them. There is not much doubt but that is a step which will have to be taken sooner or later. The movement against the coolies which is now so general throughout the Pacific coast goes by different names. As a matter of fact it is merely a popular effort more determined than anything that has yet been attempted to shake off Mongolianism. Its object is nothing more than the full and complete re-Americanization of the Pacific States and Territories, which are about the only areas not well filled up in the United States at this time. It might as well be understood by all those who give any thought to the subject, East or West, that this movement is not going to come to a halt, or that there is not going to be a reaction of any consequence. The conflict is as irrepressible as that between free and slave labor formerly in the South. It will proceed until the only logical solution possible under the circumstances is reached—that is to say, the absolute, complete, and eternal exclusion of the servile and disturbing Chinese element. If there is not legislation wise and broad to facilitate and guide the movement, it will, before long, assume another more ultra and less manageable form.

"To Senator MITCHELL'S proposition, therefore, Congress will in time have to come. No doubt the wisest thing to do is to accept and enforce it now."

The San Francisco Morning Call of the 13th instant said editorially in reference to this question and this particular measure:

"MITCHELL'S ANTI-CHINESE BILL.

"Senator MITCHELL has begun where other anti-Chinese legislators will end. The present Congress may not be prepared for the bill Mr. MITCHELL has presented, but the next Congress will be. The people of the United States appear to have made up their minds that Chinese immigration must be stopped, the only question now being as to the necessity of an act of legislation which abrogates existing treaties. The Mitchell bill will be opposed in Congress on the ground that it is a discourtesy to the State Department to give notice of the abrogation of a treaty through Congressional action. It will be held by some that the State Department should exhaust diplomatic resources in the effort to obtain such a treaty as we want before Congress shall declare a treaty abrogated. It seems to us, however, that time enough has been wasted in waiting for the State Department to act. There is much reason to doubt if that Department is intensely interested in keeping Chinese out of the country. It is certain that the Treasury Department has construed the present law to admit Chinese in transit without assuming the duty of ascertaining if the Chinese so admitted left the country as they reported their intention to do.

"In various ways the Departments have done much to render the present law ineffective. There is some excuse, in consequence, if Congress, representing the people, takes the task of getting rid of Chinese into its own hands. Nine years ago, in the early part of Mr. Hayes's administration, an exclusion law was passed which did not pretend to conform to existing treaties. The President vetoed it on the ground that it would be discourteous to China to announce through Congress the abrogation of a treaty. Under the stimulant of this Congressional act the State Department set its intellectual forces at work, and in the course of time the treaty of 1880 was agreed upon. By that treaty we agreed to allow all Chinese then in the country to go and come at pleasure. The go-and-come clause in the treaty has proved fatal to its usefulness. The 'go' was all right, but the 'come' was a mistake. Senator MITCHELL'S bill eliminates the word 'come' wherever it occurs. The facilities for going are not in the least impaired, but we do not want any one Chinaman to go but once. The Call has frequently expressed the belief that the present act might be made effective by literal construction and rigid enforcement.

"But the courts say that literal construction violates the spirit of the treaty. Rather than violate the spirit of the treaty the courts have so construed the act that it serves but little purpose. It increases the cost of landing Chinese in the country, but it does not apparently materially diminish the number landed. Now, if we must disregard the treaty, let us do so in an open and manly way. Let us say to the Chinese Government that on and after a certain date no Chinese laborers will be allowed to land in the United States. The stupendous folly of permitting a Chinaman to return and repeat his raid should be openly renounced. Provision can be made for the migration of recognized merchants whose business requires an occasional trip to China. But when a Chinese laborer goes he should be denied the privilege to return. The Call favors all legislation which will strengthen the present law. If the Morrow bill can be passed and the Mitchell bill can not, let us have the Morrow bill. If it does not work better than the present law, Congress will be ready for the Mitchell bill before its fiftieth session expires."

The Call, in another recent editorial, said:

"MAKE IT TIGHT.

"A Washington dispatch says it is thought that all the anti-Chinese legislation the Pacific coast desires will be conceded by Congress. The anti-Chinese legislation which the Pacific coast especially desires is an enactment which will keep Chinese out of the country. Our experience convinces us that this can only be done by the enactment of a law forbidding Chinese laborers to return at all. When they go, let them stay. So long as we undertake to provide for the return of the Chinese laborers, so long will fresh Chinese be sent in the place of those departed. We do not ignore the provision in the last treaty which allows Chinese then in the country to go and come of their own accord. It is, however, within the constitutional power of Congress to notify the Chinese Government that this provision of the treaty can not be observed without abandonment of the purpose for which the treaty was made. We have tried during four years a restriction law which carefully observed the provisions of the treaty. Between Department decisions and judicial decisions, all intended to carry out the spirit as well as the letter of the treaty, this law has been made ineffective. We now want a law that can not be construed away. The bill Representative MORROW has introduced limits the time within which a Chinese laborer may remain in China without forfeiting the right to return to two years. This is a disregard of the treaty, which makes no limit at all. An air-tight and water-proof Chinese exclusion law is what the Pacific coast now desires."

The Chronicle, in discussing the pending bill editorially, said:

"He [MITCHELL] has gone further than the most strenuous opponents of the Chinese have thus far gone, but it is just as well for Congress to face it now. MITCHELL will doubtless furnish reasons to justify the legislation he proposes, and show that the trade with China is not worth considering."

But the San Francisco Daily Evening Bulletin, returning to the subject in its issue of the 15th, publishes the following editorial under the head of

"THE RISING TIDE OF PUBLIC OPINION.

"If Senator MITCHELL'S bill, with some modifications, or any other bill having a like purpose in view, can be passed, the Chinese question will be solved for all time. That bill rises fully to the gravity of the case. If the question of our relations with China were broadly and ably presented, there is not much doubt that his proposition will become the law of the land. Mr. MORROW'S bill was introduced early in the session. It went as far as it was thought it was possible to go at that time. But since then the Chinese question has undergone an entire change on the Pacific coast. One whole stage in the natural process of its solution has been jumped over. There was no one who favored MORROW'S bill who did not know that at some future time some other and more ultra measure would have to be adopted. By the act of the people in every city and town of importance on the whole coast the question has been advanced one step on the calendar, so to speak.

"Revolutions never go backward. A social, moral, industrial, hygienic, financial, and ethnological revolution is now in progress in California and the other States and Territories of the Pacific. The general and, in many respects, lawful uprising of our people has stripped the question of the falsehoods by which it was surrounded. It is not the revolt of one class against another, however justifiable, but of a unanimous people determined to prevent the further defilement of this fair land by a heathen horde. It is Americanism asserting itself against the debased and servile Mongolism of Asia. For the time being the Pacific coast is fighting on the forepost of civilization. The movement is one which will occupy a greater space in history than the small souls who are now seeking to dwarf or divert it for gain imagine possible. It will rank second in the great moral and philanthropic movements of the epoch. The overthrow of black slavery was the first. The extinction of the more subtile coolyism of the present day is the second.

"Senator MITCHELL'S bill is necessarily more in accord with the rising tide of popular determination to extirpate the Chinese evil once for all than any previous measure. There ought, in the present condition of things, to be no trouble about accepting it. There is no reciprocity at all in our dealings with China. We have received no reciprocal advantages. The case can be summed up in a few words: We enjoy no more rights in China than any other civilized nation; but our country alone has been opened up for the traffic of the man-dealers of Canton. That traffic is openly carried on with Cuba, Brazil, and Asia, and is sanctioned by treaty. Here it is cloaked and disguised because our laws forbid forced labor. Some people do not believe that the Chinese are held to service and labor in the United States because they do not see them driven about in gangs.

"The chains which bind these slaves are invisible. They were forged out of their religion and their civil polity. The relatives of the Chinese peon are mortgaged at his home for the faithful performance of his contract. If he fail they are sold into slavery. He goes about apparently as a freeman, but his acts show the collar on his neck. Expensive lawyers are hired to represent coolies in the efforts to evade the restriction law, but in nothing else. Coolies move in obedience to orders issued by a central authority. They can not leave the country without the permission of their owners. If they attempt to do so they are removed from the steamer under trumped-up charges of felony. By cutting the Gordian knot as proposed by Senator MITCHELL we bring this slave incursion to an end. There is no reason to believe that such a summary method of proceeding will result in commercial loss of any kind. Even if it did, every consideration of patriotism, morals, philanthropy, and civilization would require that the sacrifice should be made. But China has too good a thing in the trade with the United States to relinquish it. Besides, we are masters of the situation. By discriminating duties on tea and silk we can build up Japan at the expense of China.

"Nor is there any necessity for diplomatic delay. No nation is bound to continue a treaty that is working it a constant and manifest injury. Great Britain did not ask permission when it modified by act of Parliament the extradition treaty which it had with us. It was enough for it that, in its opinion, that treaty was doing violence to some of the principles upon which its government was founded. No permanent, satisfactory arrangement can be made whereby certain classes of a people of whom we know but little, and of whose language we are all ignorant, are to be admitted and certain others excluded. The exigencies of the Burlingame treaty, when the object was to adhere to the letter of that one-sided document, required that some such arrangement should be set up, but for the reasons stated it can never be made to work. There will always be fraud and imposition in the administration of any law of that kind. It is by far preferable that an end should be made of the whole business right off. The Chinese can not be admitted to this country. There are millions of them standing ready to overwhelm us if the gates are not finally and firmly shut."

But the sentiment expressed in these editorials and on the bill under discussion is not confined by any means to the Pacific coast, and as a sample I attract attention to the following editorial found in the Philadelphia Press in its issue of the 11th instant:

"POTTERING WITH A GRAVE QUESTION.

"The anti-Chinese outbreak at Seattle, Wash., is the first exhibition only of a hostility which has long been growing. During a year past there has been a manifest increase in the aversion to this class of immigrants on the Pacific slope, and the determination to be rid of them is now much stronger than ever. A trial of nearly four years of the restriction act has shown that it is little better than a rope of sand as a bulwark against the Mongolians. The frauds that can be practiced under it are numerous, and the wily Chinese were not slow to find the loopholes and to take advantage of them. The knowledge of these facts has aroused the people of the Pacific slope as they were never aroused before on the subject. Numerous meetings have been held to interchange opinions on the question, and two State conventions have been called to insure united action in dealing with the evil. One convention will assemble in Portland, Oregon, next Saturday, while the other will meet in San Francisco March 10.

"These events ought to impress upon Congress the necessity for taking this matter into serious consideration at once. The legislation of the past has been mere pottering and was enacted evidently in the hope that the question would settle itself in time. This, however, it has not done, and to-day the situation is more grave than ever. The great shame of the whole business is that it has been viewed more in its political aspects than in any other light. As the great majority of the members of Congress reside on this side of the Rocky Mountains and have no personal knowledge of the subject, they have taken that view of it which was likely to benefit their party most. Meanwhile the evil has gone on increasing. Instead of diminishing under the restriction act, the number of Chinese is believed to have steadily increased. According to the census of 1880 there were 73,548 Mongolian immigrants in California, 9,472 in Oregon, 3,166 in Washington Territory, and 104,000 in the whole country. California now estimates its Chinese population at 75,000, and the other States and the Territories in that vicinity admit no decrease. The frauds practiced on the custom-house officials and the ease in crossing the British Columbia border will account for this increase.

"It is evident that some other policy must be tried. It is unjust to one of the fairest portions of the country for the rest of the nation to sit by supinely and see its prosperity retarded, its labor demoralized, and its people contaminated and refuse relief."

It will no longer do, therefore, to urge here or elsewhere in all this broad land that it is the irresponsible hoodlum element of the West only that is inveighing against Chinese immigration and crying out against their infectious, demoralizing, and pernicious presence.

This cry, always unfounded in facts, has in the face of events past and now transpiring become obsolete. The voice of honest labor, the intelligent demand of vital industries, the piteous wail of indigent toil—struggling for life in the unequal and unfair contest of competitive trial with the servile labor of Asia, transplanted, unfortunately, as it has been in American soil with all its tragic train of degradation, its ruinous tendencies, its debasing practices, its revolting customs, and nameless crimes, are practically a unit on this great question in dignifying the movement on the Pacific coast in opposition to the Chinese as one in the interest of the general welfare, the conservation of public peace, the preservation of domestic tranquillity, the unfettering of public and private justice, and the vindication of the rights of American labor on American soil.

In view of the fact that the discussions of this question in Congress during the past fifteen or twenty years, and of the investigations that have been made under the direction of the two Houses of Congress, and the reports that have from time to time been submitted, with volume after volume of accompanying testimony, whereby have been spread upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and before Congressional eyes evidence without limit and in its character overwhelming and conclusive, showing in all its horrid phases and in its real, abhorrent character the evil nature, the contaminating tendencies, and horrible results of Mongolian life and habits on American soil, it would seem superfluous to waste the time of the Senate in a repetition of the disgusting facts or in rehearsing the many arguments that have been made bearing upon this great question.

THE UNITED STATES CAN NOT BE CHARGED WITH BAD FAITH, SHOULD UNDER EXISTING CIRCUMSTANCES THE TREATIES BE ABROGATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS.

But returning to the proposition as to the right, and not only the right, but, under all the circumstances of the case, the absolute duty upon the part of the United States to strike down at once and forever, and without further hesitation or delay, every barrier in existing treaties that interferes in the slightest degree with the absolute exclusion of Chinese from this country in the future, it may be said that the Chinese Empire has in divers respects willfully, and without any cause or excuse, violated material provisions of existing treaties, both by commission and omission, but more especially by omission, in not performing their several requirements, and therefore, according to every respectable writer on public law, according to the decisions of all respectable courts, the United States is justified in doing precisely what is proposed to be done by the pending bill, without being subjected in the slightest possible degree to the charge of Punic faith. Although the Burlingame treaty provides in terms for like privileges, immunities, and exceptions on both sides to our people going to or residing in China, and to its people coming to reside here, is it not a fact that our people residing in China are absolutely denied the rights and privileges guaranteed by such provisions of the treaty?

No American citizen—

As was stated by Mr. Justice Field in his able dissenting opinion in Chew Heong vs. The United States, 112 U. S., page 567—

can enjoy in China, except at certain designated ports, any valuable privileges, immunities, or exemptions. He can trade at those ports, but nowhere else. He can not go into the interior of the country and buy or sell there or engage in manufactures of any kind. A residence there would be unsafe, and the crowded millions of her people render it impossible for him to engage in any business of any kind among them. * * * Reciprocity in benefits between the two countries in that respect has never existed. There is not, and never has been, any "mutual" advantage in the migration or emigration of the citizens or subjects, respectively, from one country to the other, which the treaty, in cordially recognizing, assumes to exist.

But not only so. By the Burlingame treaty everything in the shape of emigration, except that which was entirely voluntary, was denounced and reprobated. And not only so, but by the provisions of that treaty the Chinese Empire covenanted to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subject to take Chinese subjects to the United States without their free and voluntary consent. Mr. Justice Field, in referring to this provision of the treaty, remarks in the case referred to:

In the face of this explicit provision large numbers of them, more than one-half of all who have come to the United States, have been brought under what is termed the contract system; that is, a contract for their labor. In one sense they come freely, because they come pursuant to contract, but they are not the free immigrants whose coming the treaty contemplates, and for whose protection the treaty provides. They are for the time the bond-thralls of the contractor—his cooly slaves. The United States had already legislated to prevent the transportation by their citizens of coolies from China to any foreign port; but no law has ever been passed by China to prevent its subjects, thus bound, from being taken to the United States.

Mr. Justice Field in further discussing this important question in Chew Heong vs. The United States, before referred to, further remarks, as follows:

The consideration, therefore, for allowing free emigration from China to this country has failed, and it may be affirmed with much justice that by reason of this failure there would have been no breach of faith towards China had the stipulation on our part been disregarded by the legislation of Congress. If the treaty had stipulated for the like admission to each country of the goods of the other, and China excluded our goods, or her condition was such that they could not be landed, it would seem that no one could pretend that the stipulation on our part to receive her goods would continue obligatory. It can not make any difference that the stipulations relate to emigrants instead of goods. So of any other mutual stipulations; when on one side they are not observed, or become incapable of enforcement, they cease to be binding on the other. And surely it could never have been contemplated that an unlimited immigration of Chinese, with all the privileges of subjects of the most favored nation, should be continued without receiving corresponding benefits for which the treaty stipulated.

While, therefore, Mr. Justice Field, in the dissenting opinion referred to, held, with the majority of the court, that the restriction laws were within the provisions of the treaty, although giving to them a different construction and application from that given by the majority of the court, he held, nevertheless, that even had such legislation not been within the provisions of the treaty, but antagonistic to the same, in so far as to exclude further immigration to this country absolutely, that even in such an event the power of Congress to do so would be unquestioned, and not only so, but that such an act under existing circumstances of the various violations of the treaty upon the part of China could not justly subject the United States to a charge of bad faith or of unwarrantably violating the provisions of a treaty with a friendly power.

While the majority of the court in that case did not discuss this latter proposition, they conceded in the strongest possible manner, as all jurists must concede, that as to the power of Congress to repeal a treaty by an act of legislation there could be no kind of question.

THE RESTRICTION ACTS AN UTTER FAILURE.

That the present Chinese restriction acts, as at present administered, are worse than a pretense, is conceded by all familiar with their operations. And why is this so? What is the difficulty aside from the fundamental objection that must stand good now, and at all times, against mere restriction acts of all kinds as a real remedy for the evil complained of? It may be summed up briefly in these words: By the terms of the treaty of November 17, 1880, and of the restriction act of May 6, 1882, and the act amendatory thereof of July 5, 1884, considered, as they must be, in pari materia, as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, it is provided that all Chinese persons who were in the United States at the date of such treaty, November 17, 1880, or who came here within six months after the date of the approval of the restriction act of May 6, 1882, which leads up to August 5, 1882, were permitted to depart from and return to the United States at their discretion. The amendatory act of May 6, 1882, as amended by the act of July 5, 1884, while recognizing the right of Chinese who were in this country prior to August 5, 1882, to go and come of their own free will and accord, provided that the certificate provided for in the acts of 1882 and 1884 to be issued to Chinese departing from this country should be the only evidence considered in determining the question as to their right to return.

A conflict of opinion at once arose. The executive officers of the Government insisted this provision was retroactive and applied as well to such Chinese persons as were here at the date of the treaty or who came subsequent to the treaty and departed from this country prior to August 5, 1882, as to all others. On the other hand, it was contended that as to such Chinese persons as were here at the date of the treaty, November 17, 1880, and departed from this country prior to the date of the restriction act, or within ninety days thereafter, or who came here subsequent to the treaty and prior to August 5, 1882, and departed prior to the latter date, the provision of the act of 1884 providing that the certificate should be the only evidence of their right to return did not apply.

This was the first serious conflict of opinion as to the proper construction of the treaty and the restriction acts of 1882 and 1884. This controverted point was brought before the courts for solution in re Chew Heong on habeas corpus. This cause was heard in the first instance before Mr. Justice Field, of the Supreme Court of the United States, United States Circuit Judge Sawyer, of the ninth circuit, and United States District Judges Hoffman, of the district of California, and Sabin, of the district of Nevada, sitting in banc in San Francisco. Mr. Justice Field held in that case, and sustained his position with his usual great ability and learning, first, that the provisions of the treaty of November 17, 1880, guarantying to certain classes the right to go and come of their own free will and accord should be construed to apply only to those here at the date of the treaty who afterwards continued their residence in this country and who may during such residence desire to be temporarily absent, and that in such view of the case there was no conflict between the provisions of the treaty and the provisions of the restriction acts; and, second, that the provision of the act of May 6, 1882, as amended by the act of July 5, 1884, providing that the certificate of departure should be the only evidence of the right of a Chinese person to return, applied as well to those who were here at the date of the treaty, and who had left the country prior to the date of the passage of the restriction act, as to those who departed subsequently. Mr. Justice Field further maintained that conceding that his construction of this provision of the treaty was not correct, that then there was in such event a direct conflict between the treaty and the act of Congress, and the act being the last expression of the sovereign will on the subject operated as a repeal of the provisions of the treaty pro tanto. The circuit and district judges dissented, however, from these views. This case is fully reported in 10 Sawyer, 361. On certificate of division of opinion among the judges to the Supreme Court of the United States, a majority of that court (Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Bradley dissenting), in 112 U. S., 536, opinion by Mr. Justice Harlan, affirmed the view in the main held by the circuit and district judges.

So now it is unquestionably the law of the land, as settled by a majority of the justices of the highest judicial tribunal in the country, that all such Chinese persons as were here on November 17, 1880, the date of the treaty, or who came here prior to the date of the passage of the restriction act of May 6, 1882, and who prior to this latter date had departed from the United States by sea, have the right guarantied by both treaty and statute to return to the United States at pleasure on a proper showing to the satisfaction of the collector by any competent evidence of the fact of prior residence within the time specified, and that as to such Chinese persons the provision in the act of 1884, to the effect that the certificate shall be the only evidence of their right to return, does not apply.

The effect of this final decision of the Supreme Court upon this important controverted question, it will be observed, was to open at once a wide door to the perpetration of the most tremendous frauds upon the law, upon the part of the Chinese or those interested in their coming to the United States. The records disclose the fact that nearly 13,000 Chinese who were in this country on November 17, 1880, had left it through the port of San Francisco alone prior to the passage of the restriction act of May 6, 1882, the exact number being, as shown by the steamship passenger-lists, 12,726. Under this decision, therefore, of the Supreme Court of the United States all these, as well as all citizens of Chinese parentage, irrespective of the question as to when they left this country, are under the treaty, the restriction acts, and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States entitled to return at will, provided they can prove the fact of prior residence or citizenship, as stated, to the satisfaction of the collector, or the court in the event that the writ of habeas corpus can be held to properly issue in such a case, irrespective of the question as to whether they can or can not produce the certificate required by the restriction acts.

Conceding then this to be the present law of the case, and having been so declared by the final judicial arbiter of the land it must be accepted as such, all will rightly agree that the efficacy of the restriction acts is absolutely destroyed by this judicial construction. As to whether this construction is in truth and in fact the proper construction of this legislation and the one that should have been applied to it, it is immaterial now to inquire.

It is, however, enough for us to know, first, that Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Bradley both dissented from this view in opinions of great ability, which fact in and of itself is sufficient evidence that there is at least serious cause to question the correctness of the construction given by the majority of the court; and, second, that it is very evident that Congress in the passage of the act of 1884, however far short it may have fallen in giving proper legal expression to it, intended that no Chinese person, whenever residence here first attached, who sought to enter this country under a plea of prior residence should be permitted to do so, except on presentation of the return certificate provided in the restriction acts.

But the controversy as to the proper effect of, and the manner in which the restriction acts should be administered did not end here. A more serious conflict impended, and has for over three years last past been waged with great ability and no inconsiderable amount of feeling between the Federal courts in California and the collector and other customs officers of the port of San Francisco. The vital question at issue now in this conflict of jurisdiction is as to whether the right to the writ of habeas corpus and bail attaches in favor of a Chinese person seeking to enter this country under claim of prior residence, and who departed from the United States previous to August 5, 1882. It is insisted by the collector of the port, and with much reason, as it occurs to me, that he alone is the sole judge under the restriction acts as to the right of a Chinese person to enter this country. On the contrary, a different view has been taken by the United States judges, and that view has been maintained by them with much earnestness and ability also, and it has been the practice of the Federal courts in California to extend not only the right of the writ of habeas corpus but also that of bail to all Chinese persons arriving at the port of San Francisco and who may be temporarily detained on shipboard pending an investigation by the collector of the port as to their right to enter the United States, or after his decision against their right to enter, whenever complaint has been made by such Chinese persons of unlawful restraint of their liberty.

In maintaining his position the collector of the port has insisted, and still insists, as I understand it, with much earnestness and vigor, first, that the question as to the right of a Chinese person to enter this country is one to be determined exclusively by the executive officers of the Government, and that the writ of habeas corpus can not rightfully issue in any such case, and even conceding that it may rightfully issue in such a case, that it does not follow that the person so claiming to be restrained of his liberty shall be entitled to bail; and it is said in this connection with much force, that if all seeking to return, whether under any real claim of right or not, should be brought before the court on habeas corpus and then before a hearing admitted to bail, that then, in each and every such event, such persons might, by simply forfeiting their bail to appear in court, remain in this country not only in absolute violation of the law and of the treaty, but also without having the question as to their right to return adjudicated or passed upon either by the collector or court, or any other administrative, executive, or judicial power.

And this view of the case is illustrated by the suggestion that under such a rule all the prisoners in the California penitentiary by the complaint of unlawful restraint of their liberty might be brought before the court on habeas corpus and set at large on bail. While, therefore, having the very highest regard for the personal integrity and great judicial learning of Circuit Judge Sawyer and District Judges Hoffman and Sabin, I can not agree, for one, until the matter has finally been determined at least by the Supreme Court of the United States, that a Chinese person brought before the court under the circumstances indicated on a writ of habeas corpus, even conceding the very doubtful power of the court to issue the writ in such a case, is entitled to bail. And it is with me, as at present advised, a matter of the gravest doubt as to whether the courts have the right or power on a writ of habeas corpus to pass upon the question of fact as to whether a particular Chinese person has had a prior residence in this country, and departed from it prior to August 5, 1882, and on such finding permit such person to enter the United States; the more especially if in the same case the collector of customs has previously decided to the contrary.

May it not be insisted with reason that the question as to the right of a Chinese person to enter this country, under the treaty and restriction acts, is a political and not a judicial question? That the determination of this question is one that belongs to the executive authority exclusively, and not the judicial; that to the collector of the port as the immediate and direct representative of the Executive in respect of the execution of this great function belongs exclusively this right and duty, under the treaty and law, and not to the judiciary, to determine the questions arising under the treaty and the restriction acts, as to what Chinese persons shall or shall not enter our jurisdiction and become denizens of our country, and subject to our laws; and until this question, in one sense quasi-political, has been determined by the collector of customs, and the person in question has actually been admitted to our jurisdiction, he is not and can not be entitled to the benefit or protection of our laws, or any of them; and hence may it not with force be insisted that the statutory right to the writ of habeas corpus can not in such a case attach in his favor? He can not, in other words, may it not be said, be unlawfully restrained of his liberty, within the meaning of the statute relating to habeas corpus, until he has been admitted to our jurisdiction, to a territory covered by our laws, in such a manner as will cause the right of the writ to attach in his favor.

In such case the petitioner must necessarily rest his case, as to unlawful restraint of his liberty, on the sole ground that he is an alien, that he is not a denizen of the United States, but that he is by treaty stipulation, entitled to enter this country, and the only restraint of liberty of which he can complain, is the refusal upon the part of the executive officers of the Government, representing in one sense the political power of the Government, and to whom by special mention is committed the jurisdiction of determining who shall or who shall not enter the territory of the United States, to permit him to enter our country. The treaty between the Chinese Empire and the United States looking to the restriction of Chinese immigration, and the restriction acts of Congress, are, taken together, great political measures, intended to limit the coming to our shores of a class of immigration deemed inimical to the public peace and general welfare. For the purpose of the proper execution of these measures, a special jurisdiction is established, a special tribunal is designated. The questions to be determined are not in their essential natures judicial, but executive. Hence their decisions are reposed, not in the judiciary, but in the executive, represented by the collector of customs, and from his decisions there is no provision in the law for either review or appeal. His decisions, therefore, under the law, must, whether right or wrong, necessarily be final and conclusive on all concerned, and on every question involved, whether of fact or law.

The question involved in this conflict of opinion and of jurisdiction has not yet been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. A case is, however, now pending in that court, and I believe has been submitted, that of Jung Ah Lung, in which this very question is involved. Should a majority of that court sustain the position assumed by the circuit and district judges, as, in view of their previous decisions in cognate questions, they very probably will, then it is safe to say the existing legislation on the subject of restriction of Chinese immigration is an absolutely dead letter upon the statute-books, a sublime pretense, a stupid make-believe, a legislative delusion, and a snare. In other words, it will then be by established law, as it is now amid the whirlpool of continued controversy, an absolutely inefficient and worthless enactment; and not only so, but a piece of legislation that can not under such a decision of the court be amended so as to be effectual and at the same time keep within the limits of the treaty. Therefore the only remedy is that proposed by the pending bill, and, as heretofore, the false report given out as to the probability of a new treaty was used to defeat legislation on this important subject in the Forty-ninth Congress, the pendency in the Supreme Court of the United States of the habeas corpus case of Jung Ah Lung is being used by the same parties, and with the same practical effect now, to delay and perhaps finally defeat all appropriate and effective legislation on this subject at the present session of Congress.

But in any event, and however this controversy may be ultimately determined in the Supreme Court of the United States, the very fact of the existence of such a wide difference of opinion as to the construction and administration of existing law, is the most effective argument that could possibly be adduced in favor of the imbecility of mere restriction acts, of the absolute impotency of such measures to meet and cope in an efficient and effective manner with this great evil, and of the unquestionable propriety and absolute necessity of such legislation as will forever exclude in unambiguous and unmistakable terms the coming of Chinese to this country in the future, as well those who had been here and returned, as those who are seeking to enter the United States for the first time.

The universally conceded high character of the judges of the Federal courts who have dealt with this topic, and of the present collector of customs at the port of San Francisco, as well personally as jurists of acknowledged ability and large experience, and the fact of such radical diversity of opinion between them as to the proper construction of the restriction acts, and the manner in which they should be administered, but adds another powerful argument in opposition to measures merely restrictive in their character, and in favor of the only real and effective remedy equal to this great emergency that is upon us, namely, that of absolute exclusion.

THE CHINESE SLAVE-TRAFFIC AND THE MANNER IN WHICH THE RESTRICTION ACTS ARE AVOIDED.

That a slave-trade in Chinese women for immoral purposes, more abominable than was ever that of the African slave-traffic, has been for years past and is now being carried on between China and San Francisco and on the Pacific coast generally has been demonstrated by the most conclusive proofs. In recent investigations at San Francisco numerous written slave contracts have come to light and been published; also various villainous papers, evidencing the perjury and subornation of perjury that are resorted to for the purpose of evading the restriction acts.

I have a few sample copies—a number of specimens—of these which I will read and incorporate into my remarks. They are as follows:

A SPECIMEN CONTRACT REQUIRED BY DEALERS IN FEMALE SLAVES.

This is to certify that I, Lin Choy, am indebted to my creditors for passage money, board, etc., and finding no means to pay my indebtedness, I came to Mrs. Chow Quai and borrowed $562.50, and agreed to work for her four years and a half as a common woman. No interest to be charged, and the said sum to be considered paid at the expiration of said period. Then Lin Choy is to be considered free, and is allowed to marry any one she may choose. Mrs. Chow Quai has no more control of her after that time. But if before that time Lin Choy tries to desert from Chow Quai, Chow Quai shall have the power to sell Lin Choy forever, and Lin Choy shall not make any complaint. If Lin Choy should be sick over fifteen days, one month shall be added to her period, and if sick less than fifteen days no charge will be made. If she contracts before one hundred days any disease of leprosy, her former master or mistress shall be held responsible. If Lin Choy should die before the expiration of the specified time, Chow Quai shall have to take the risk.

The $562.50 is paid this day, and the receipt is hereby acknowledged. This agreement shall be the proof of this contract.

Signed in duplicate.

LIN CHOY.
[With her finger-mark.]

Dated the 3d day, 6th month, and 12th year of Kwong Sui.
JULY 3, 1886.

The following account, published in the San Francisco Call, one of the leading journals of San Francisco, in its issue of December 6 last, tells the terrible story in part. It is as follows:

Slave traffic.—Wong Ah Hung's papers reveal some startling facts.—Chinese contracts which force women into lives of slavery.—How the restriction act is evaded.—What it costs to land a Chinaman.—Valuable evidence.—A tell-tale letter.

Among the passengers who arrived in this city from China on the Oceanic, November 17, was a wealthy Chinese merchant named Wong Ah Hung. He had long been suspected by the customs officers of being implicated in the female slave trade, and on his arrival what baggage he had was seized. A trunkful of the most important documents yet discovered by the customs authorities was found. These valuable papers were gradually translated, under the direction of Deputy Collector Scott, by four men, and have now been completed. Before the contents of the papers were entirely disclosed enough evidence was gathered about this merchant's business to warrant the United States jury finding an indictment against him for unlawfully importing slaves for immoral purposes.

The translations of the captured documents have progressed slowly in consequence of their great number and the tedious nature of the work, which, however, has been done carefully.

SYSTEMATIC FRAUD DISCLOSED.

The papers disclose the systematic methods resorted to in evading the requirements of the restriction act, and show that in the face of the most careful efforts on the part of the customs officers fraudulent Chinese succeed in passing into the country on purchased certificates.

Not less interesting is the disclosure which is made as to the manner in which "guaranty-letter" men, without a shadow of right, resort to the courts to effect a landing.

The material that Deputy Collector Scott has gathered is the most important thus far uncovered, and will go a long way toward convincing the Federal judges that they are being constantly imposed upon by the Mongolian flesh traffickers.

Deputy Collector Henry H. Scott yesterday morning transmitted to Collector Hager a report of the work thus far accomplished, which is the most complete exposé of the Chinese slave-trade yet made. The full text of the report is appended:

DEPUTY SCOTT'S REPORT.

"In accordance with your instructions to search the baggage and persons of all Chinese arriving at this port suspected of being connected with the slave ring for documentary evidence of their complicity in the business, I caused diligent search to be made of the baggage and persons of the female passengers on the steamship City of Peking, from Hong-Kong on the 26th ultimo, and of the male passengers suspected of being engaged in the traffic in women for immoral purposes; and I herewith submit translations of the seized documents, which convey some idea of the enormity of the slave-trade.

"In the baggage of Lee Ming Hing, a Chinese merchant, holding merchant's certificate No. 1023, the papers marked Exhibit 1 were found. They contain four instructions, marked 1 to 4, for girls who arrive on the same steamer with him; also a general letter (No. 5), applicable to all the letters of instruction, giving the names of persons who, they say, returned with them to China in certain steamers. One paper (No. 6) contains the name of seven other girls in his charge for whom no letters of instruction were found. There are also two letters of goods purchased for women (Nos. 23 and 24), and three memoranda (21, 22, and 25), No. 21 showing the purchase and sale of two girls in 1884 and profit therefrom, and No. 22 showing the expenses incident to their landing. No. 25 exhibits the purchase price and expense of bringing girls from Hong-Kong to San Francisco in March, April, and May of 1883, the amount set opposite each month at that time, and the price and expense of landing a Chinese woman."

PAPERS DISCOVERED.

"These last three transactions (21, 22, and 25) were taken from his personal account-book in his own name. Another paper was found on him containing questions on the climatic and other features of this city, and everything likely to be asked by the examining officers and the court, with answers to the same. This man, it is known, has made repeated trips to China during the past year, and from envelopes found in his possession addressed to Lee Shuey, a notorious slave-dealer and broker, there is no doubt that he is one of the leaders of the ring.

"The papers marked 'Exhibit 2' were on a woman, Chue Ching Shue, holding custom-house certificate 55,669. Paper No. 8 of this exhibit is an account of money paid for six girls. No. 9 is a letter informing her grandmother of the remittance of a draft for the purchase of 'nice young girls.' No. 10 speaks of a party having called to look at a girl, and probably has some bearing on the contents of No. 9. Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 19 are bills of women's clothing."

A GUARANTY RECOMMENDATION.

"Exhibit 3 was taken from a Chinaman without a certificate, whose name on the passenger list is Pang Wong Kue. It appears to be a letter written to him in China from his brother here, who evidently had passed through the guaranty-letter process and was recommending that mode of entry, which advice had been accepted, as the man is here on a guaranty letter. A perusal of this letter will furnish some idea of the way the courts are being imposed upon by the cooly dealers.

"The remaining papers are being translated, and when ready will be handed to you.

"I take this opportunity to pay a well-deserved compliment to the officers of the Chinese bureau, A. J. Ruddell, the officer in charge; A. A. Bailey, W. P. Johnson, and Interpreter J. E. Kipp, to whose zealousness in carrying out your instructions on this and other occasions is due, in a great measure, the unearthing of the mysteries of the slave-trade and the many startling revelations recently made."

THE EXHIBITS.

Accompanying this letter are the three exhibits referred to. Exhibit 1 is as follows:

"No. 1.—Chow Tai Dow, born in Colusia. My mother is living in San Francisco now. When I was thirteen years of age I went to China with my father, mother, and sister on the 23d day of the third month, in the seventh year of Kwong Sui. My father's name was Chow Ah Lee. My mother's name was Chun Shee (fat girl). She has returned to San Francisco now. My father died three years ago. I am nineteen years of age. My mother sent me $67 for me, and $53.50 for my sister, to come to San Francisco. My sister's name is Choy Hee. When she was six years of age she went to China. She is now twelve years of age, and returned with me to San Francisco.

"No. 2.—My name is Lee See. Went to China at the age of twenty-two. I am now twenty-eight. My husband's name is Chun Ah Lee. He is a business man; a merchant. My youngest sister, Tong Ho, went with me when she was four years of age. She is now ten. We were born in Portland, Oregon. My father died in Portland, Oregon. Came to San Francisco from Portland in three days. My mother, myself, and my sister went to China on the thirteenth day of the seventh month, in the seventh year of Kwong Sui, by the steamship Tokio. There was also with us a man, Wong San Tick. My mother died in the second month of last year. If Tong Hee should be asked some questions she should say she went to China with her mother and sister, and when she was four years of age. She is now returning."

DOCUMENTS OF INSTRUCTION.

"No. 3.—My name is Chun Kum Fung. I was born in San Rafael. My father's name is Chun Choy. I went to China with my mother at the age of nine years, in the fifth year of Kwong Sui, by the city of Peking. My mother died in China three years ago. I am seventeen years old now and coming back to San Francisco to my father.

"No. 4.—My name is Chow Ngon Fung; was born in Sacramento. When I came down to San Francisco on the rail-car I arrived early in the morning. In the first year of Kwong Sui my father, mother, and myself went to China by steamer. My father's name is Chow Mow. My mother's name is Cheng Shee. When I went to China I was twelve years old; now I am twenty-four."

HOW CHINESE ARE LANDED.

"No. 5.—When your case comes up in court and questions are asked, say that when you went to China who was with you—who went down with you to the steamer. After you answer in court you have to find out from the company on such a day, month, and year the steamer left, and the name of the man who was then on the Belgic. He is named How Kung Suen. On the seventeenth day of the second month of the seventh year of Kwong Sui the Belgic left; on the twenty-third of the third month of the seventh year of Kwong Sui the Gaelic went to China, and How Loi Shew was a passenger, also Chow Pak Cheong. On the seventeenth day of the eighth month of the seventh year of Kwong Sui the Oceanic went to China, and Se Toe Chun was a passenger. On the thirteenth day of the seventh month of the seventh year of Kwong Sui the steamship Tokio sailed for China, and Wong Lan Yick was a passenger. On the thirtieth day of the seventh month of the seventh year of Kwong Sui, the Belgic returned to San Francisco, and Wong Loi was a passenger. On the seventh day, fourth month, seventh year of Kwong Sui, the Oceanic returned to San Francisco, and Tam Ah You was a passenger. All the above statements you will find in the book of Shew Hing Company.

"HOW PAK SHUN.

"No. 6.—Lee See, age 27; Lee Tung Hee, age 10; Chun Kum Tung, age 17; Koong Tai Yow, age 19; Chow Ngon Fung, age 24; Chow Choi Hee, age 12; Chun Ah Yee, age —."

MONEY PAID FOR GIRLS.

"No. 21.—Tai Choy and Chun Ting each paid $540 for two girls, or $1,080. They sold them for $1,410, and made a profit of $330.

"No. 22.—(No date)—December 1, 1887:

|---|---|
| Paid to Quan Hoy (bondsman) | $30.00 |
| Paid counsel fees | 5.00 |
| Paid for visiting jail | 10.00 |

| March, 1885. Cash paid for Keng Chee | $1,685 |
| April, 1885. Paid for Ah Neg | 1,120 |
| March, 1885. Paid for Kum Chai | 1,695 |
| April, 1885. Paid for Ah Yuit | 1,100 |
| May, 1885. Paid for Chin Lin | 1,080 |

THE SECOND EXHIBIT.

Exhibit 2 consists of papers taken from Chue Chung Chee, who is thirty-five years old, and holds ticket 137 on the City of Peking, which arrived on August 13, 1887. The papers are as follows:

"No. 8.—Money paid for the following girls:

|---|---|
| For Ah Poi | $300.00 |
| For Ah Fung | 500.00 |
| For Tuck Hay | 100.00 |
| For Sun Choy | 350.00 |
| For Ah Ho | 436.00 |
| For Fung Choy | 160.00 |
| Total | 1,846.00 |
| Taken away from the account | 10.90 |
| Balance | 1,835.10 |
| Paid for sundry articles | 40.70 |
| Total | 1,875.80 |
| Received | 2,000.00 |
| Must refund | 124.20 |

WANTS A NICE GIRL.

"No. 9.—Certificate 55069.

"TO SUI YOUK AND GRANDMOTHER: I hope you arrived in China safely and are enjoying good health. I now send you by this mail a draft for $300, local currency, through the firm of Chun Tuck Wing & Co. I send this money to the care of grandmother for you. When you receive this money I want you to buy me a nice young girl—want a nice-looking one. If the money is insufficient, you please pay the balance for me.

"We are all well here. Liu Ho stops with Ah Chuck now. I have heard of Sun Low disposing of a girl for $900. I think the price will be agreeable.

"P. S.—Sun Low and Tam Fan send their compliments to you and hope you are all well. Tam Fan's disease is a carbuncle (or abscess) and is a little better; attended by a distinguished physician.

"CHUE NG (writer),
"For Tam Fan and Sun Low.

"Date, sixth day, seventh month, thirteenth year of Kwong Sui [August 23, 1887].

"No. 10.—Certificate 55069.

"Ah Kew is at Hong-Kong. Lai Kum has seen her and her youngest sister. She thinks that her sister suits her. She comes to talk about the price, and Lai Kum agrees to pay all the expenses of passage and to send her to San Francisco.

"[Not signed.]

"No. 11.—Certificate 55069. Miss Ah Choy bought of Tuck Lum Yee Kee:

|---|---|
| One black woman's cloak | $2.80 |
| One woman's trousers | 4.80 |
| Total | 7.60 |

"Stamped paid. Date, twelfth day, ninth month, thirteenth year of Kwong Sui [October 27, 1887].

"No. 12.—Certificate 55069. Mrs. Lin Oi, bought of Lun Lee Kee:

| One woman's black cloth coat | 2.20 |
| Total | 49.40 |

"Exhibits 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 consist of similar bills to those just given, ranging in amount from $19 to $321.18."

IMPORTANT EVIDENCE.

By far the most important of all the evidence captured is that contained in Exhibit 3, which is an explanation of the methods adopted by the Chinese to effect their landing in this country.

The letter is dated twentieth day, fifth month, thirteenth year of Kwong Sui (July 9, 1887), and is annexed.

"MY DEAR BROTHERS, SAI CHING AND SAI SUM: Since I left you I have arrived safely on the ninth day of the fifth month (June 28), and I have landed all right. Sai Wo and Fun Wing are luckily landed. In my opinion I think the white men (officers at the custom-house) are strict and not strict. If the certificate appears to be all right, and the description on the same tallies with the man presenting the same, he is easily landed and no questions are asked. If any discrepancy appears in the description the officers are very particular in asking questions and making the examination."

THE CUSTOMS EXAMINATION.

"They (the officers) try them by showing pieces of American money and asking them the value of the same and what they are called. If the certificate (is made or issued at the port of San Francisco) shows that the applicant was formerly a resident of this city, the officer will ask what street and number of the house he formerly lived in. But if the certificate shows that the applicant resided in another place the officers will ask questions about that place. They will ask how you came from that place, how much fare you paid, and other questions concerning the location and situation of that place.

"If the answers are not correct, they will refuse to land the applicant. There were over sixty men with me on the same ship who bought their certificates in Hong-Kong. Forty of them were luckily landed, and the other twenty were refused a landing. They had to get out writs of habeas corpus, and during the time they were released on bonds they try to get others to substitute themselves in their places."

USE OF SUBSTITUTES.

"The substitutes, being familiar with the questions that are likely to be asked, readily answer the questions propounded in court, and consequently they are immediately landed. These twenty men were obliged to go into court because the description of their certificates did not tally with those presenting them.

"There are about ten men on the ship who claimed prior residence. After I was landed I found out that they were obliged to proceed in the same manner as I was told before leaving Hong-Kong. They proved by the Chinese companies' books that they left here for China in 1881. It cost each one of them $100 for lawyers' and brokers' fees before they were landed. The Chinese brokers agreed to land each man for $100. I think it is best to pay $170 for a full guaranty in Hong-Kong. If they are not landed the money will be refunded."

BEST PLAN TO LAND WOMEN.

"Those who come without guaranty letters will lose their passage money both ways if not landed here. The best plan to land women is to claim they were born here, and returned to China in 1881 with their parents. When they return here they have to get out a writ of habeas corpus, and then can be easily landed. It costs about $50 or $60 to land each child.

"Ting Lun, one of my friends, told me if any of my acquaintances should go to China to send some sort of a guaranty paper to bring my brother, Chee Choy, here. I told Ting Lun to hurry up and get the paper ready to send back for my brother. I wish him to come with Chum Yue Mue, but he is afraid that Chum Yue Mue has already started before the paper can get there, and he will then be disappointed. However, Ting Lun says he will make out some sort of a paper ready for him to come. I don't know what plan Ting Lun is going to get up."

PURCHASE OF CERTIFICATES.

"If both of you make up your minds to come, you better buy certificates. Get certificates with the correct measure and description of marks, and learn the questions to answer, and learn the streets of the city in Chinatown, and the "house" and number of the street; and if you buy the certificate stating you lived in the country, you must learn how much the fare is, and what kind of work you did there, and learn some English words.

"When you come, have courage and don't be afraid, then the officers will not be suspicious nor detect you. Be cautious and you will be passed and landed, and save you one year's trouble. In case you do not get landed, we will try the best we can to assist you, but I can not tell exactly what the cost will be. If your statement in court is good the cost will be a good deal less; but if your statement is bad it will cost more. If you come you had better come by the new company's steamer. (O. & O. S. S. Co.) The old company is too strict."

SAMPLE AMERICAN COINS.

"I now send you $10, and I also send you $1 in small denominations, and you better learn this—what the half dollar is, what the quarter dollar, ten cents, and five cents are in English, so you will know when the officers ask you. If you have not money enough to come you go to Sai Yung and he will advance you money on my account and I will remit it to him.

"I (myself) and Sai Wo will go back to the ship and work as part of the crew.

"Lai Jim Choy, Chun Kow Ling, and Chun Leong did not have satisfactory descriptions or measure. The first one spent $300, and the other two $100 each to get landed.

"When you come to Hong-Kong you better write to me before you start, so I can get ready for you when you arrive. If you don't come this year I will send you some money for your expenses to come next year.

"I will help you all I can on account of a brother's affection.

"Your brother,

"WONG SAI CHOW."

Chinese contracts.

SOME VALUABLE EVIDENCE OF THE CHINESE SLAVE-TRADE.

During the past week Deputy Collector Scott and his officers have been deeply engaged in seeking further information about the slave-trade. At present Mr. Scott has in detention over fifty women, from whom considerable evidence of a documentary character has been obtained relative to the importation of females for immoral purposes. These have been translated, a number of them proving to be contracts which have been entered into by the females. The amount of money paid for them is stated, and their course of action, including minor details, is disclosed.

The girls, by these contracts, for a sum of money, bind themselves for four years, and covenant that for every fifteen days of sickness they will serve an additional month. A number of other conditions are attached to these contracts. When this evidence is offered in court it will probably surprise the Federal officials to an astonishing degree.

For the present the customs officials are attempting to prevent the importation of women, and when they shall succeed in this, attention will be bestowed upon the males who are swarming into the country upon the previous-residence plea.

Some startling evidence of Chinese depravity is held in reserve by the officials and will be disclosed on the trial.

Another account, as follows, appeared in the Call in its issue of November 23 last:

Traffic in women.—Damaging evidence found in Fong Chun Shee's box.—Customs officers obtain confessions from three Chinese women on the Belgic who were sold to slavery.

The increasing efforts of Deputy Collector Scott to stop the infamous traffic in Chinese women brought to this country for immoral purposes have succeeded in stemming the human tide of female immigration to some extent already. But the indefatigable customs officer is not satisfied with the results thus far obtained, and has expressed a determination to prosecute his labors until the nefarious trade ceases altogether.

The efforts of officials have been redoubled since the testimony of Consul Bee, in the United States district court, was given, strongly corroborating the oft-asserted but little-heeded statements of the customs authorities.

Another gratifying encouragement has been given to the collector and assistants by Judge Hoffman, who has awakened to the gross frauds which are daily being perpetrated by the Chinese upon the courts, and decided to lend every aid in his power to circumvent the outrageous proceedings of the Chinese slave ring.

A FEMALE AGENT CAUGHT.

One of the many wretches engaged in procuring recruits for the female portion of the Chinese colony is Fong Chun Shee. She is not in the business for herself, but acts in the interests of the ring. Several months ago she went to China for the purpose of purchasing a lot of girls.

She succeeded in buying a number of unusually fine specimens of Celestial beauty and arrived with her charges on the 17th instant by the Belgic. The number of these is not known.

On the same vessel were two other intermediators, and all three received orders from a Chinaman who, it will be remembered, was described by Mr. Handy, a passenger by the same steamer, as the owner of all the girls. The statement of Mr. Handy has been fully substantiated by the confessions of three of the girls.

A RICH FIND.

When the customs officers boarded the Belgic, on her entry into port, a box claimed by Fong Chun Shee was seized. In this were found a number of letters of instructions which had evidently been used for the purpose of coaching. These were translated, and on Monday proved more than serviceable. In addition to the letters there were documents conveying a complete description of this city and vicinity.

After some trouble the girls whose names were mentioned in the letters were found. One of these was Chun Sing Gum, a pretty little dame. She told the officers that she was born in this city twenty-two years ago, was a seamstress by occupation, and had resided over Sam Choy's on Dupont street. The date of her departure for China, she said, was October 24, 1881, by the Tokio. She could not speak English. Further questioning brought out the fact of her marriage in China in her eighteenth year, which was two years after her return. Her husband's name was Low Ah Yee. At present he was in New York.

When the photograph of Fong Chun Shee and the statements found in the box were shown to her, she began to cry and pleaded that if she spoke the truth she would be killed. After a time she made the following confession to Interpreter Kipp:

THE CONFESSION.

"I was born in China, and never was in this country (San Francisco) before. This woman (Fong Chun Shee), ticket No. 260, bought me. I do not know how much she paid for me. She bought me from my mother. Please do not arrest this woman, as I will be killed sure. I was bought in Hong-Kong, my home. I will be killed now if ever I go back to China."

For the purpose of procuring corroborative evidence, Rev. F. J. Masters, of the Methodist Chinese Mission, obtained another statement from the woman. It reads:

"My name is Chun Sing Gum. I was born in China, in Canton. I am twenty-two years old. Came to Hong-Kong when I was five years old. My own mother took me down to Hong-Kong. I lived there with her till I came to California. The woman in the photograph (Fong Chun Shee) bought me from my mother and brought me over. I have never been in California before. I have no certificate. No one taught me on board the steamer. I want to go back to my own mother in Hong-Kong. I know where she lives. Let no one go with me."

Lee Sing Choy was another bewitching female who arrived on the transparent guaranty-letter route. She was told to say that she was twenty-three, had resided on Dupont street, and was a seamstress. The time of her departure was set down as November 8, 1881, but she could not remember when she first arrived in the United States, but recollected that her parents brought her when she was five years old. She could not speak English, and lived on Washington alley with her parents before being married. This event occurred in this city March 27, 1880. Her husband's name is Kong Ah He, and he is connected with the Gum Kuk Uen Hong restaurant on Jackson street."

CONFRONTED WITH THE LETTER.

Interpreter Kipp read these instructions to the woman, who broke down completely, and wept piteously, believing her life in danger. She finally consented to tell her story, and said:

"I never was in this country before. This woman (Fong Chun Shee) ticket No. 260, bought me and paid $625 for me at Ho Lou, China, and taught me the instructions in this letter (No. 1). Please do not arrest this woman, for if you do I will be killed. I will die sure. My fate is sealed now."

To Dr. Masters she stated:

"My name is Lee Sing Choy. I was born in Canton on Honam (on the south side of the river) in the Lun Chee Lee street. I am twenty-three years old. I was only a little thing when my mother died. I don't remember my mother's name. My father's name was Lee Shun Cheong. He died the year before last. Before my mother died she sold me because she was poor and wanted money. I passed hands, and then the woman in the photograph (I don't know her name), she bought me and brought me over to this country. She paid $620 for me to my adopted mother. I had no certificate, for I had never been in this country before.

"The woman in the photo is my mistress. She taught me what to say and taught me to say what was written in the paper marked No. 1. I want to go back to China on this steamer. I want to get back to my friends. I am not afraid of any one. When once I get back to China I can find my friends myself."

THE THIRD GIRL'S STATEMENT.

The same process was gone through with the third female. She stated that she had been born in China, was a seamstress, and resided at 714 Dupont street with San Gum Wah. She left this country July 11, 1881, on the Belgic. Her father, Chun Ah Dai, bought her ticket. He is a shoemaker, employed by Kwong Sam Lung & Co. In 1878 she first arrived in the United States.

Continuing she said: "I was married in San Francisco to Fung Ah Sam, who has an interest in San Gum Wah & Co.'s. My parents are both dead in China. I was sixteen years old when I was married."

When confronted with the proofs of her perversity she set up a howl, and between her sobs and moans she made this confession to Interpreter Kipp:

"I never was in this country before. My mother sold me in China, but I do not know for how much. My mother told me that I was to go to America, but where I do not know, with this woman Fong Chun Shee, who taught me, etc. All that I have said in the above statement is not true. My mother took me from Heongshan, my home in China, to Hong-Kong, where I was sold."

AN ADDITIONAL CONFESSION.

In addition to this, the woman made the following confession to Rev. Mr. Masters:

"My name is Chow Ming Chee; I was born in China, but do not know where; I am twenty-three years old; my parents are dead; my mother sold me to be a slave girl; I was a slave girl in Canton for two years; my mistress sold me to a woman who handed me over to the woman in the photograph to bring to California; I do not know how much was paid; my mistress paid for my ticket; I had no certificate, for I have never been here before; a man on board this steamer taught me what to say on my arrival; while teaching me his hand held a paper; I do not want to go back to China; I want to remain here in California; I do not know what the woman wants of me who brought me over; I am under her orders."

As soon as the facts detailed above were ascertained the three women were separated from the others on board the steamer. Every assurance was given them of entire protection pending their return to China.

The woman Fong Chun Shee has been detained on the ship by the customs officers and will be arrested for importing these women in violation of the law and for questionable purposes.

The Call, speaking editorially on this subject, in its issue of December 7 last, says—and all the leading San Francisco journals are equally outspoken and emphatic on this question, and all unite in insisting that absolute exclusion and not restriction is the only real remedy for the great evil. The Call says:

CALL A HALT.

It is time that Colonel Bee should point out to the Chinese merchants of this city the necessity of calling a halt among their countrymen. They are trying American patience about as far as it will bear.

The unfortunate girl Kwok Ah Sip has been rescued from the life of infamy to which she was destined and will be sent back to China. But the examination of the baggage of the passengers who arrived in the City of Peking establishes the fact that her case was only one of many and that an elaborate system is in force for the purchase of young girls in China. The girls are purchased either directly from their parents in China or from some one who obtained them from their parents. The price appears to vary from $400 to $600. For this sum, which the girl does not touch, she covenants to serve in a house of prostitution for four years and a month extra for every fortnight she is laid up by illness. On her arrival here she is taught to swear that she was born here and went to China on a visit, in proof whereof she produces a certificate purchased in Hong-Kong. Witnesses are forthcoming to testify that they knew her here. The girl is supplied with a smattering of information regarding our money, our streets, and our climate, to corroborate her theory that she was born here. It illustrates the terrorism with which contracts are enforced among the Chinese that hardly any of the girls evince a tendency to rebel against their doom.

The men who furnished the money for the infamous traffic are known, and so are the women who keep the establishments to which the Chinese girls are consigned. They ought to be punished with the utmost severity which the law allows. Nor should the steamship companies which transport these slaves from Hong-Kong to this port be allowed to escape. It is intolerable that a company which is asking Congress for a subsidy should be earning dividends by the wholesale transportation of these Chinese females.

But this is not all. The strife which is pending between two Chinese clans bids fair to reproduce in this city the vendettas of Corsica. On Wednesday last a member of the See Yup clan was killed by a Leong over a tan game. The See Yups determined on vengeance, and a day or two afterward they killed by mistake one Lee Way, who was taken for a Leong. When they discovered their error they shot at and nearly killed Leong Chee. It is understood that they are not satisfied, as Leong Chee was not killed outright. They propose to go on with the vendetta until a Leong really bites the dust, and meanwhile the Leongs propose to avenge the attempts made by their enemies.

Any intelligent Chinaman must realize the effect of such conduct as this. We can not tolerate the deliberate nullification of our laws by a race whom the people of this State have deliberately declared to be unfit immigrants. The worst that could be said against the Chinese by the most prejudiced of their enemies will not hurt them as much as the exposé of the Chinese prostitute business or the strife of the hostile Chinese clans. There is no argument left for them to urge, no plea in mitigation. The facts are beyond excuse.

And again, another editorial reads as follows:

IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

Congressman MORROW states that the California delegation will ask Congress to pass a bill which will provide for the abrogation of that portion of the Burlingame treaty which permits the entrance of Chinamen into America. This is a step in the right direction; but it would not have great practical results unless the clause in the Angell-Swift treaty which permits Chinese in the country when the treaty was signed to go and come at will is also repealed. Mr. MORROW says that the bill he introduced last winter providing that Chinese who have been absent more than two years should not be readmitted would greatly reduce the number who could come in fraudulently, either on bogus certificates or under the prior-residence plea. Of course there would be some advantage in limiting the period of a Chinaman's absence without forfeiture of his right to return. But the courts would doubtless find as much difficulty in determining the period of a Chinaman's absence as they now have in arriving at the truth of his representations that he has been in the country before. The Chinese unfortunately are a people who have no regard for truth. They approach our courts with the idea in their minds that there is no harm in trying to deceive them. Their experience has taught them that perjury could be committed with impunity. The case of the Chinese cigar manufacturer who swore that an applicant to land under the habeas corpus process had been in his employ, when it was afterward shown that the applicant had never been in the country, is but one among many. This Chinese business man committed flat perjury under Judge Sawyer's nose, but the judge did not grant a warrant for his arrest. The Call would suggest to Mr. MORROW and others of the California delegation that there is but one bill that covers the ground. The Chinese, with the aid of the courts, will get round any bill but an absolute exclusion bill.

The Portland (Oregon) Daily News, in its issue of January 5, remarks as follows editorially:

EXCLUSION OF CHINESE.

The bill for the exclusion of Chinese, introduced in the Congress now in session by Senator MITCHELL, of Oregon, was published in the News yesterday morning. It is worthy of careful perusal. It will, if passed into a law, effectually exclude from the United States the Chinese. This is the thing that is wanted. The Federal courts can not twist it into practical evasion, as the Federal courts in San Francisco have done with the present restriction law, which is now, through the practice of these courts, of no value or force whatever. Senator MITCHELL's bill does not trifle with the important question. It provides definitely for the exclusion of the hordes from China; not restriction. The particular classes of Chinese who may be permitted to come are specifically mentioned, and only these shall be permitted. This exactly meets the wishes and wants of the people of the Pacific coast. It will receive the approbation of the people of the States across the continent who know of or contemplate the harm and danger which Chinese inpouring has upon our country—theirs the same as ours. The bill ought to be passed.

At a mass-meeting held at Metropolitan Hall in San Francisco late last month, not a mass-meeting of hoodlums or anarchists or cranks, but of leading representative men of the city and State, presided over and addressed by Mr. Pond, present mayor of the city, letters from the governor of the State and other distinguished citizens being received, and enthusiastically read, Governor Waterman stating in his letter that the "danger [referring to the Chinese] is only equaled or surpassed by that from an influx of anarchists or socialists," and stirring addresses from leading orators delivered, a series of resolutions were unanimously adopted. They read as follows:

Whereas the people of the Pacific coast have repeatedly petitioned the Congress of the United States for relief from an evil which for years has sapped our life's blood, undermined our prosperity, and spread a most demoralizing influence in our communities; and

Whereas this evil consists of the presence in our midst of a people distinct in their civilization, un-American in their habits and customs, in dress, religion, and language, as entirely distinct as it is possible for two peoples to be—one hoary with age, the other a youth full of life and hope; one a democrat, the other a slave—a people whose mode of living enables them to successfully compete against any other human labor, displacing, therefore, and ruining all who come in contact with them; and

Whereas as a result of this competition low wages must prevail, preventing a civilized people from living in comfort, respectably rearing their families, giving their children a proper education, making them good citizens and providing for themselves in old age; and

Whereas this competition furthermore deprives thousands of our people of legitimate employment, and robs our children of an opportunity of earning an honest living, driving many of them to crime and shame; and

Whereas the present laws respecting the admission of these people (the Chinese) passed as a compliance to our many petitions, are so inefficient as to not materially impede their admission and to open wide the doors to fraudulent and corrupt practices, making the intent of the law a mere sham; and

Whereas the class of Chinese thus admitted, contrary to the intent of our existing laws, consists largely of coolies imported substantially as slaves, of criminals of the most vicious and brutal kind, and of prostitutes or young women sold into slavery to become such; and

Whereas the absolute disregard of these heathen for any law, oath, truth, or decency keeps our own judiciary from having any hold on them, while they maintain a system of jurisprudence of their own among us, enforcing their own illegal edicts by blackmail and murder, and resorting to every device and trickery that their low cunning is possible of devising to frustrate and resist the successful prosecution of their criminals in our own courts; and

Whereas their gambling hells, opium joints, and dens of iniquity and vice serve to entice our boys and girls, prompted by inducements too great to resist, offered by the wily heathen, while our laws seem powerless to suppress them, and yet the entire taxes paid by the Chinese population are insufficient to cover the cost of maintaining the Chinese prisoners of the State; and

Whereas the resources of the Pacific coast are so great that millions may be furnished homes where now there are but thousands, but by reason of this terrible Asiatic curse our progress is retarded, our development checked, our industries dwarfed and a healthy increase of our American population discouraged, while at the same time our very free and liberal institutions are menaced by the unwholesome and corrupt influences at work by these people, who are determined to maintain the foothold they now have in this country: Be it, therefore,

Resolved by the citizens of San Francisco in mass-meeting assembled, That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully and urgently requested to at once either so modify the existing laws on Chinese immigration or else to enact such new laws as shall most effectually "exclude" the Chinese from any entrance whatever in the United States.

Resolved, That we consider "exclusion" the only practical remedy, the present restriction laws having presented no bar to their entrance.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and these resolutions, to be signed by the chairman and secretary of this meeting, be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Men hold up their hands in holy horror at the suggestion that we must not under any circumstances legislate in such a manner as to interfere in the slightest degree with any of the provisions of existing treaties between the United States and the Chinese Empire. It is said to do so is a deliberate insult to a friendly power with whom we are on terms of amity and peace. It is said, moreover, to do so is to turn aside from an important trade, from a growing commerce which we are now reaping, as it is said, from this source. We are told, furthermore, that we have a right to look in the near future to China as a market for our surplus wheat; that the Chinese will soon become a wheat-eating people. Answering the last suggestion first, I venture to suggest in the first place that the Chinese never will in all human probability become a flour-eating people to any extent whatever. Certainly not so long as rice and vegetables continue to grow, and fish continue to swim. But in the second place, should they do so, then following along with the same advancement in the line of civilized life China, like its neighbor, India, would become a great wheat-growing country, so that so far, in such an event, from China becoming a market for the surplus wheat of the Pacific coast, or elsewhere, it will only be a coadjutor with India, and Russia and other European countries, in glutting the wheat markets of the world, and thus, instead of being a benefit to our wheat-producing people, will in the end be a positive injury.

And as to our commerce with China, what does it amount to? The balances are all against us, and the benefits are all with China.

I hold in my hand a statistical statement showing the kind, qualities, and values of the imports into the United States from, and the exports of the United States to, China during the year ending June 30, 1885, which I ask the permission of the Senate to incorporate in my remarks without stopping to read it.

| Total exports | | 6,396,500 |

From this statement, it will be seen that the whole amount of merchandise imported from China to the United States during this period amounted in value to the sum of $16,292,169, of which amount only about one-fourth, or $4,241,401, was subject to duty, the balance being on the free-list; while the sum total of our exports to China on domestic commodoties during the same time was $6,396,178, our total exports of foreign merchandise but $322, making our total exports $6,396,500.

The port of San Francisco alone exported merchandise to all foreign countries during the year ending June 30, 1885, more than six times the amount in value than did all the ports of the United States, San Francisco included, export to China during the same period, her exports of merchandise for that year being $38,115,624, while the port of Portland, Oregon, the next nearest port of consequence to China, if we may except Astoria, Oregon, exported in all that year merchandise within $2,000,000 of the amount sent to China by all the ports of the United States, San Francisco and Portland included.

Nor has our export trade with China increased, but on the contrary largely decreased, during the past few years under the operation of the Burlingame treaty. Our total exports to China for the year ending June 30, 1885, were less by nearly $500,000 than they were seven years ago. In that year, ending June 30, 1878, they were $6,867,255, and our exports to China during the year ending June 30, 1885, were less by $1,968,036 than they were in 1881, and, small as it is, less than double that when the Burlingame treaty was ratified. But, not only so, it requires a drain of our gold and silver of nearly $10,000,000 annually to square our account with China, to say nothing of the immense drain of many millions annually sent out of the country through the operations of the Chinese.

But another consideration of immense importance must not be lost sight of in the consideration of this question. Prior to the existence of the Burlingame treaty Americans on the Pacific coast and elsewhere within the limits of the United States carried on whatever trade we had with China and received the benefit of it. How is it to-day? Over 95 per cent. of the whole trade is monopolized and carried on by Chinese. The chimera, therefore, in reference to our great commerce with China and its alleged immense importance to this country can not delude much longer, and when put in the balance against the great evils that are resulting to this country and to our people from the presence of the Chinese, it should not be considered for one moment, even though the effect of the abrogation of the treaty might be to deprive us wholly of this trade, which, as I have endeavored to show, it most certainly will not; for, even conceding the importance of that trade and the desirability of retaining it, China will never close her ports against it, treaty or no treaty. The advantages are too greatly in her favor; the profits are all on her side of the ledger. The benefits inuring from it are in favor of China and not of the United States.

With Great Britain her account stands quite differently. England is not compelled to go down in her exchequer every year to the tune of many millions as have we in order to settle a balance of trade with China. Her opium from India alone very nearly pays for the Chinese products purchased by her.

It was proclaimed with a flourish of trumpets when the Burlingame treaty was consummated that a new market for our surplus wheat was to be opened up to the producers of this country; that the rice-eating millions of China would at once become a bread-eating people. But what is the result? Eighteen years have passed away and our annual total exports of breadstuffs to China, including wheat and flour, are of the value of less than $40,000, the exact amount for the year ending June 30, 1885, being $35,734—a mere bagatelle. And so with our provisions, comprising meats and dairy products; $35,977 in value is the sum of all they purchased from us in the last year.

In fact, if we may except the two products of uncolored cotton manufactures, the value of our exports of which to China during the year 1885 was $3,400,339, or considerably over one-half of all our exports to that country, and refined petroleum, amounting to $1,455,234, our export trade with China amounts to absolutely nothing; while from her free-list she, through her importations, is permitted to enter into competition with our producers of hides and skins, chemicals, drugs, and dyes, unmanufactured rare woods, hair, and other of our productions.

But again, recurring to the immense drain of specie from our country involved in this trade, I submit the following statement from the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, showing the value of the foreign trade with China and Hong-Kong and our annual total exports of gold and silver to China during the fifteen years, including 1885:

From this it will be seen we have in that time sent to China in gold and silver to balance our account $131,134,815. In the four years and seven months ending July 31, 1879, we exported from San Francisco alone, to China, specie to the amount of $49,848,918. This immense sum of over $131,000,000 in gold and silver is in small part the tax that has been levied on the white labor of the Pacific coast and handed over to the Mongols of Asia. But to this add not less than from $75,000 to $100,000 per day that is daily being absorbed by the laboring Chinese of the Pacific coast, and only a very small fraction of which finds its way back into American life and industries, and the balance of which, amounting to untold millions, is sent out of the country, and then some adequate conception may be had of the enormously bad bargain this country struck with China when the Burlingame treaty was made.

RESTRICTION ACTS DO NOT RESTRICT.

It is now, Mr. President, nearly six years since Congress passed the first act having for its purpose the restriction of Chinese immigration to this country, and what has been the result? Commencing with the year 1852, when the first Chinese immigration of any consequence entered this country, and ending with and including the year 1880, or at least up to November 17 of that year, the date of the treaty, in all a period of twenty-eight years ten months and seventeen days, the average number of Chinese arrivals annually at the port of San Francisco alone was 8,772, or a monthly average of about 731, or a total during that period of 253,085; whereas in the six years and seven months and thirteen days commencing with November 17, 1880, the date of our treaty with China having for its main purpose the restriction of Chinese immigration, and ending with June 30, 1887, the average number of arrivals annually at the port of San Francisco has been 12,414, or an average monthly installment during that period of 1,034 and a fraction, aggregating in that period of restriction by treaty and restriction acts 82,229, or an excess in that time of average monthly arrivals over that of the preceding years mentioned of 303, an excess annually over the arrivals of previous years of 3,636, or nearly 50 per cent.

But not only so. How has it been since the restriction act of 1882 went into operation? From August 5, 1882, to June 30, 1887, a period of four years ten months and twenty-five days, the whole number of arrivals at that port by steamer alone was 36,564, or a yearly average of 7,462 and a monthly average of 621 and a fraction, being an annual number of arrivals of only 170 less and an average monthly arrival of only about 14 less than the arrivals for the three years of 1877, 1878, and 1879, the three years prior to the date of the treaty. The average annual arrivals at that port by steamer during those three years immediately prior to the adoption of restriction measures were 7,633, or an aggregate of 22,898 in those three years.

But the folly and inefficiency of the restriction acts have been demonstrated beyond all question during the past two years in various ways, and especially by the increased number of Chinese in this country. Never in the history of Chinese immigration to this country, with a single exception, not excepting the year 1852, when 20,076 arrived at the port of San Francisco, or 1875, when 18,021 came, has the average number of arrivals of Chinese by steamer at the port of San Francisco been so great as in the first six months of the year 1887. According to the steamer passenger-list the arrivals at the port of San Francisco for the six months ending June 30, 1887, were 11,147, or at the rate of 22,294 annually, or 1,857 and a fraction per month. Never but once before in the history of Chinese immigration to the United States was this class of immigration so large, and it is a fact not to be forgotten that that exception included a period since the existence of our latest treaty with the Chinese Empire and covered the time from November 17, 1880, the date of such treaty, to August 5, 1882, a period of one year, eight months, and eighteen days, when the arrivals by steamer alone at San Francisco reached 45,665, or an average of about 2,225 per month.

But not only so. In these figures no account whatever is taken of hundreds and thousands in the aggregate that enter at other ports of the Pacific either lawfully or by being smuggled into this country by the scores and hundreds from the Canadian provinces along the line of the Canadian Pacific and across the waters of Puget Sound from British Columbia. And still another fact must be taken into account, and that is that vessels on the route between San Francisco and China ports are as a rule manned by Chinese crews, many of whom are constantly deserting and remaining in this country; in fact, that is one way in which hundreds and perhaps thousands constantly evade the law and violate the treaty; none of these are included in the figures just given. It is a fact, moreover, asserted by the customs officers at the port of San Francisco, that it is in but the fewest number of cases that Chinese departing from San Francisco do not secure return certificates, and it is a notorious fact that these certificates are sold by the wholesale in the Chinese market for an average of about $40 for each certificate; and it is a further fact, of the arrivals during the past couple of years and at present, more came without than with certificates, and are permitted to enter this country on habeas corpus on a showing of testimony, mainly and of necessity of a Chinese character, of prior residence and departure prior to the 5th of August, 1882, and under which the most tremendous frauds have been committed through the wholesale perjury and artifice of the Chinese, whereby the courts have been cruelly imposed upon and justice thwarted.

It must therefore be remembered that the rate of arrivals from China in San Francisco annually has never been so large as since the date when the United States sought by treaty to restrict this class of immigration, thereby conclusively proving that restriction treaties do not restrict, and restriction acts, so far from restricting, have actually increased Chinese immigration to this country.

The testimony of Hon. F. A. Bee, the Chinese consul at San Francisco, ought to have weight on this question as to the effect of restriction acts. He is reported in the San Francisco journals as having testified in a recent Chinese investigation in that city, that "within the last six months more Chinese women had arrived, and been landed by the courts as previous residents, than ever departed between 1849 and 1887;" and furthermore "that all the women brought into this country were brought here for immoral purposes."

THE LABOR QUESTION; THE GREAT ISSUE IN THE NEXT PRESIDENTIAL CONTEST.

Recent events indicate in unmistakable terms that the great overshadowing issue in the next Presidential campaign is as to whether the principle of protection to American labor and American industries shall be maintained in the administration of the affairs of this Government, or whether it shall be abandoned and the laboring and industrial classes of America shall be compelled to enter a competitive and forlorn race with the cheaply-fed, low-priced labor, not only of Europeans on European soil, but what is infinitely worse, that of Asiatic labor also, on our own shores.

All New England is in convulsions with fear lest some interference with the existing tariff laws shall cripple the manufacturing industries of that great section of the country, and the alarm is sounded by the declaration that there are one thousand million dollars of capital invested in manufacturing establishments in New England, that nearly 600,000 (584,495) wage-workers earned in 1880 over $200,000,000 ($200,054,-194.70), and the appeal is made to these nearly 600,000 employés in these words: "Do you want to have your earnings put upon an European basis and cut down more than one-half by free trade?"

I tell our friends from New England, or rather the six hundred thousand wage-workers of that section, as well as the laboring classes generally in every State and Territory of the American Union, not only in New England, but throughout the length and breadth of this broad land, that there is a more destructive element menacing them than free trade, although that is full of danger. By the latter it is true they will be brought in ruinous competition to a certain extent with the servile labor of Europe on foreign soil, and hence it is a state of affairs to be dreaded and avoided; but there is an impending danger threatening the wage-workers of this country more to be feared, more to be dreaded, more to be shunned than the low wages paid by European nations in foreign lands.

That danger is the actual presence in this country, at our own doors, in the factories, at the furnaces and forges, the looms and spindles, in the mines and vineyards, in the laundries and shops, in the hotels and boarding-houses, in the kitchens and dining-rooms of men of moderate means, as well as in those of the palaces of the millionaires, and in every department of manual labor, of millions of the cheaply fed and still cheaper paid serfs of Asia. That is a competition whose evil effects will not be shared, as in the former case, in the same proportion by capital and labor, but is one that must be borne silently, exclusively, alone by the laboring classes of this country. The capital of the country, the great manufacturing establishments, the powerful corporations of the land, who always purchase labor at the lowest possible figure, may not suffer so much from the actual introduction into this country of cheap labor when it can thus be secured by them and utilized in their own interest, in their own workshops, and in their own factories, but to the laboring classes the blow is terrible.

Free trade may, and doubtless will, reduce the price of wages in this country, while the introduction of the slave labor of China will absolutely paralyze and effectually destroy the interests of the laboring man. If, as stated very truthfully, recently, by Senator FRYE, in a very able speech in Boston, "free trade would simply drag wages in this country down to European wages," what, I would inquire of that eminent Senator, would be the effect on wages in this country by the introduction here, not merely of the products of this European cheap labor, but what is infinitely worse, the actual servile labor on our own soil, in our own shops and factories, brought in sharp and direct and ruinous competition with the labor of this country, of the cheaply clothed, cheaply fed, low-priced rice-eating Asians?

If the low-paid labor of the Italian, the German, the Frenchman, the Belgian, in lands across the seas where the products of that labor alone are to affect us here, is to be dreaded by the American wage-worker, then that of the still lower-priced labor of the more cheaply fed Mongolian in our very midst is to be forever shunned as absolutely destructive of the rights of the American laborer.

The following table, giving the rates of wages paid whites and Chinese respectively in the city of San Francisco, in the various employments mentioned, will give a pretty clear idea of the effect of the introduction into this country of Chinese labor in reducing to ruinously low rates the wages of the American laborer. It is as follows:

| Occupation. | White. | Chinese. |
|---|---|---|
| Bakers (country only) per week | $8 to $15 | $3 to $9 |
| Cigar-makers: | | |
| Per 1,000 | 8 to 17 | 4 to 6 |

Permit the present immigration of Chinese to go on as it has been going on ever since the passage of the restriction acts, increasing both in numbers and in baseness of character, and it will not be long until every department of labor in every city and hamlet on the Pacific coast at least, if not elsewhere, will be monopolized and controlled by the Chinese laborer, and the wages of the white wage-worker will be regulated, fixed, and controlled by Asiatic prices.

Hon. John S. Hager, formerly a member of this Senate from the State of California, and now collector of the port at San Francisco, in a letter recently addressed to the Hon. W. W. MORROW, a member of the House of Representatives from that State, concludes as follows:

There is a prevailing impression that the objections among our people to Chinese immigration are based solely on ethnological and physiological grounds; but, as you well understand, this does not correctly present the question. There may be a race prejudice against the servile labor class, but this does not extend to those who come among us for purposes of trade and commerce, nor is it the controlling influence.

It is the opinion of many that next to the African slave-trade this so-called Chinese immigration is the most important event that has shadowed our political horizon. It is not the immigration of a people seeking a home in a new land; it is the gradual introduction from an inexhaustible source of supply of servile labor imported, owned, controlled, and directed by powerful and wealthy Chinese companies. China might spare from her vast population millions of her people without experiencing the sensation of a vacuum; and if the importation of this laboring class be unchecked they will come and continue to come. In laws, habits, dress, religion, and language they are a distinct people; unaffiliating, unassimilating, they are not of us and never will be. They are always Chinamen, never Americans. They can live cheaper, clothe themselves cheaper, and in the fields of labor our people can not compete with them; they underbid our race.

The Six Companies located in this city are ready to supply by contract one or one thousand or more of these laborers for any employment wherever labor is wanted. In rewarding labor, as capital generally gravitates towards the infinitesimal in compensation, the Chinaman will have the preference. If the importation of this servile class is unchecked, it remains to be disclosed in the future which, on this coast, will be the numerically preponderating race—the Mongolian or the Caucasian.

As you are aware, the Chinese question is not with us a party question, but public sentiment being uniform, it is to be hoped the delegation from the Pacific coast, with like unanimity and by harmonious action, will be able to accomplish some beneficial legislation that may be satisfactory to our entire people.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], in a very interesting and able speech made by him at the Home Market Club banquet, Hotel Vendome, Boston, on October 19 last, upon the general subject of the tariff, and especially on the subject of protection to New England homes, and in which he discussed ably and truthfully the evil effects of cheap European labor on the interests of the laboring man of New England, used these eloquent and truthful words:

I should not myself, for one, think this a matter of the greatest public importance if it affected merely, or affected chiefly, the interests of the gentlemen whom I see about this table. I take it you could get your living in comfort somehow if every Massachusetts factory were to be closed to-morrow. But to me it is a question of the very life of the American people. It is a question whether henceforth and in the future the American home shall be overrun and supplanted by the squalid population whom my honorable friend has so eloquently described. We do not care to emulate England, or France, or Germany in any of the things which make up their glory. They may have the glory of war and of peace. They may have the splendors of art, and architecture, and music. I do not care for the galleries which Raphael or Angelo have adorned. I do not care that domes shall rise here which Wren has builded. I do not care for the music of Handel or Beethoven. But I do mean that health shall paint with her roses the cheeks of the factory girl. I do mean that we shall improve the architecture of the people's dwellings. I do mean that we shall, if we can, hear the music of children's voices in the well-paid workman's home. When you determine the question whether you shall pay a shilling or $2 a day to a workman, you are not dealing with the condition of a serf; you are fixing the salary of your monarch. If these men can be educated and be happy, can dwell in comfortable homes, can know the pleasure of church, and of lecture, and of town meeting, and of social gatherings, the American Republic will go on in its pathway of honor and of glory. But if European policies, European principles, European examples, European wages shall ever come here, you may not lose your capital—it will be but a trifle—but the American Republic will go down.

I tell the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts who uttered these eloquent, truthful, and prophetic words, and who heretofore, I regret to say, has given no aid or comfort in this Chamber to those protesting against the invasion of this country by Chinese laborers, he might in that same speech have added with equal truth, and with that sublime eloquence of which he is so distinguished a master, that if Asiatic policies, Asiatic principles, Asiatic examples, Asiatic wages, shall ever come here, then, while capitalists may not lose their capital, the American Republic will go down.

Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STEWART. If I can have unanimous consent, I should like to have an opportunity to make a few remarks on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER in the chair). The bill will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that the Senator from Nevada has asked unanimous consent of the Senate to supplement what I have said by a few remarks, if agreeable to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who has the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] wishes to make some remarks on the pending question at this time, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Nevada will suspend for a few minutes, the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT PARIS IN 1889.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the invitation from the Government of France to this Government to participate in the international exhibition which is to be held at Paris in 1889.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 12, 1888.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HOAR. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that there are some matters which I think it important the Senate should look to to-morrow. There are several Senators on this side, I know, who greatly prefer that the Senate should meet to-morrow instead of adjourning over.

Mr. HOAR. I have no choice about it, except I know that there is a great deal of committee work required to be done; and I know that some Senators have made arrangements for committee meetings to-morrow and Saturday. I thought probably the public business would go on better by adjourning over. However, I shall not make any question if there is any doubt in the minds of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

COMING OF CHINESE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the consideration of the bill which has been before the Senate will be resumed, and the Chair will recognize the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 582) abrogating all treaties heretofore made and now operative between the United States Government and the Chinese Empire in so far as they, or any of them, provide for, recognize, or permit the coming of Chinese to the United States, and in so far as they, or any of them, inhibit the United States from absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States; and repealing all acts of Congress in so far as they, or any of them, recognize or permit the coming of Chinese to the United States; and absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States, excepting only diplomatic, consular, and other officers, and prohibiting the landing of any Chinese therein, excepting only such diplomatic and other officers.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the question of Chinese immigration is much broader than any of us supposed years ago. It is now about forty years since the Chinese commenced emigrating to the Pacific coast. They first attracted the attention of our people on account of their peculiar appearance and habits, but at that time occasioned very little inconvenience, because there was then room for all, and they confined themselves principally to the placer mines, which had already been worked over by the whites. We were then wholly ignorant of the real character of the race that was invading our country. They were peaceable and quiet, and had not then obtruded themselves into the industrial pursuits of our people. The population of our coast at that time consisted almost exclusively of adult males, who were engaged in mining and furnishing supplies to miners. For this reason the Chinese did not interfere with the institutions of our people. Since then they have gradually and persistently obtruded themselves into every pursuit in life. We find them in the mines, in the vineyards, in the fields, on the railroads, in our kitchens, doing every description of household work and supplanting and excluding white men and white women from employment and the means of a livelihood. We find them in every workshop and manufactory; the tailors, the shoemakers, the cigar-makers, the manufacturers of every variety of clothing, for both males and females, are supplanted by them. The white man, the white woman, the white girl, and the white boy are driven by them from every industry.

I have no feeling of resentment against the Chinese. I have always been in favor of treating them kindly while they are here. I have met the opposition of my own people in defending the Chinese from violence which naturally arises from race hatred and prejudice.

But I have long since seen that we can not live with the Chinese. Seventeen years ago last July the question arose in this Senate Chamber as to whether the Chinese should be naturalized. It was a fierce and protracted discussion; it continued over the 4th of July; and after the subject was fully discussed, the Senate almost unanimously decided that it would not allow them to become citizens, while in the beginning of the discussion Senators were nearly unanimous the other way. Since that time I have had an opportunity to observe the Chinese and to reflect upon the question, and I find that it is an all-important and a new question, so far as the people of the United States are concerned; but so far as our race is concerned it is but the renewal of the conflict which commenced at the earliest period of history.

It is a curious fact that the races of Western Europe have never been able to wrest one acre of ground from the Asiatics, while the Asiatics have always been advancing upon the Europeans. They have several times invaded Europe and supplanted large sections of its population, but Europeans have never supplanted the inhabitants of Asia at any point. The descendants of the armies of Genghis Khan and Tamerlane are still in Europe. The descendants of the vast hordes of Huns who overran Europe centuries ago still occupy the lands they gained by conquest. Ten millions of Turks remain in Europe in possession of the lands they acquired by arms from the Christians.

Great Britain has overrun 250,000,000 Asiatics, but she has yet to acquire the first farm in Asia. The natives are there. She may overrun them with her armies, but she can not supplant them. Englishmen can not live among them. There are less than 250,000 Englishmen in all Asia. After more than a century of conquest and dominion, she has been unable to colonize a single village in all India. France has tried the experiment in Cochin-China with the same result. Other powers of Europe have vainly attempted to plant colonies in Asia, but none of them have succeeded. Wherever the Asiatic has acquired possession he holds the fort, so far as occupying the soil and excluding the races of Western Europe is concerned.

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire of the Senator if what he says applies to the Moors in Spain?

Mr. STEWART. The Moors in Spain were nearly all slaughtered before they were driven out, but they were of the Caucasian race, not the Mongolian.

Mr. HOAR. They were Asiatics.

Mr. STEWART. They came from Circassia. They did not belong to the Asiatic race.

Mr. TELLER. They were not Mongolians.

Mr. STEWART. No, they were not Mongolians. If they had been Mongolians the Spaniards would have been forced to kill them all to rid the soil of their presence. The Mongolians would not have left even to save their own lives. Their dogged perseverance in holding to their possessions and remaining where they have once located, surpasses the comprehension of the tenacious and persevering Anglo-Saxon. If China had been in the condition she now is in, if she had been waked up, if she had known of modern means of transportation before this continent was discovered by Western Europeans we should never have been here.

On the Pacific coast, wherever the Chinaman goes there our civilization stops; there can be no such thing as school-houses or churches in their presence. All that you see that is beautiful in your New England homes, or your Southern homes, vanishes before the Chinese. It is impossible for our race to live upon the same allowance that they live on. We never can be reduced to the standard of food on which they subsist.

It is impossible for our race to labor as incessantly as they do. Their habits of industry are the inheritance of all the ages. There are more than three times as many of them as there are of the white race, perhaps four times; the census has not been accurately taken. Their persistence in maintaining existence, their tenacity of life, their industry so far surpass ours that wherever they come we must go. I do not pretend to say that China has capacity to conquer us with arms. That is impossible; but if you will open the doors and let the Chinese come they will supplant the people of this country, occupy it and take it as absolutely as the Hindoos hold Hindostan, notwithstanding the English rule.

If allowed to come the Chinese will be the laborers of this country, and the laborers must be the people who occupy the soil.

In every neighborhood where they have gone on the Pacific coast the Chinese have driven the whites before them. In towns, in parts of towns which they occupy, they exclude the whites—by their habits, by the contrast between their civilization and ours, by their industry, and by everything that separates a people and makes it impossible for them to commingle together.

I say that opening our gates to Mongolian immigration means nothing more and nothing less than the occupancy of this country by Chinese. You already find them in every town in the United States. You can hardly pass through a town and not see signs of Chinese washhouses. They will do all your washing, and they will do all your manufacturing, and they will do all your work so much cheaper and live on so much less than white people that competition with them is impossible.

I do not wish to injure the Chinese; I am not unfriendly to them, because I do admire a race which has as old a civilization as they have and which has produced such philosophers as Confucius. Those who lead and control China are as strong as any men on earth, intellectually, I mean.

I recollect meeting General Grant in San Francisco after his tour around the world. Whatever may be said of him, there are few men who ever lived who saw what was transpiring around them more clearly than he did. I inquired of the general what was the most remarkable characteristic of all the people he had met on his travels. He said that the superiority of the Chinese as traders over all others was astonishing; that no race could compete with them in the East where they were engaged in business; that even the Jew, with his sagacity for trade, was forced to abandon every field where he came in competition with the Chinese.

A race of men of that kind can not be supplanted. I do not relate this anecdote in disparagement of the Jew; his superiority in trade must be admired by the Gentile, who is compelled to do his bidding. I do not want to place my race in competition not only with the servile labor of the cooly slave, but with the overreaching avarice and patient cunning of the wily Chinese. The Mongolians already occupy two-thirds of the globe, and number two-thirds of the people.

Wherever they come in peaceable competition with the white race they must prevail. If we open our country to them, with our rate of wages, our laborers can not exist. The only way that the people of Western Europe can maintain themselves against Asia is by superior physical power and the use of arms. They can not maintain themselves on the field of industry, they can not supplant Asiatics, but will be supplanted by them everywhere. That is my experience from a careful observation of these people for the last forty years.

I have offered a resolution calling on the President of the United States to negotiate a treaty with China excluding Chinese altogether, except embassadors and diplomatic agents and merchants engaged in foreign trade. I am a little doubtful about making even that concession. If a treaty of that kind can not be negotiated, if China refuses to treat, the resolution will give them notice that we intend to legislate. There is no use in discussing our power to legislate without China's consent; we have that power, and I believe it to be an imperative duty to legislate, and to legislate effectually, so as to exclude them from coming. They will come in some way; no restriction act can keep them out. We must also make a treaty with Great Britain, so that the Chinese can not come into the United States through British Columbia, and also one with Mexico, so that they shall not come into this country from the south. The United States must take this matter in hand and preserve this continent to white men. We have possession, and we ought not to give it up. We can do it peaceably now.

I can give you an illustration which every farmer will understand. You might as well try to fatten cattle in a sheep pasture as to raise white men where Chinese live. The Chinese will live while the whites starve, as the sheep will live while the cattle perish. It is possible for us to prevent the calamity of Chinese immigration without doing any harm, without having unfriendly relations with China. We must state to them frankly the reasons why we can not live together. We must tell them that their institutions are so different from our institutions, their habits so different from our habits, that it is impossible for us to tolerate them. Every nation and individual has the right of self-protection. Self-defense is among the first laws of nature; and if the Anglo-Saxon race does not protect itself from the Chinese by force, it will perish by starvation and become extinct.

I had no conception originally of the power of the Chinese race to overrun and destroy, which is now demonstrated on the Pacific coast See the towns they occupy, see the plague spots where they are, and behold civilization absolutely blotted out. Would you subject any portion of this country to such degradation? Would you thus give it up?

I say it is the duty of Congress to pass at an early day an absolute exclusion act. I shall vote for the bill of the Senator from Oregon. We have tried various means and find that nothing else will do, and in an emergency like this where there is so much at stake it will not do to parley with the question. We must act at once. I shall on all proper occasions ask leave of the Senate to press this matter until we get rid of the Chinese, and have them not only excluded from our ports, but have them prevented from invading the country through either British Columbia or Mexico. This continent must forever remain dedicated to the Anglo-Saxon race.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I ask leave also to refer the concurrent resolution in relation to the admission of Chinese, submitted by me on the 9th instant, to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada moves that the resolution submitted by him be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to; and the following resolution, submitted by Mr. STEWART on the 9th instant, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be requested, at the earliest practical moment, to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China containing a provision that no Chinese shall enter the United States except embassadors and others engaged in the diplomatic service of the Chinese Empire and merchants engaged in trade between the United States and foreign countries, and providing further that the United States shall be at liberty to ascertain, by such officers or tribunals as Congress may designate, whether Chinese offering to enter the United States are of the excepted classes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before putting that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 13, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 12, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REVISION OF TARIFF LAWS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copies of correspondence relating to the revision of the tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SPRING CREEK, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report upon the preliminary examination of Spring Creek, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT UPON MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the president of the Mississippi River Commission, plate 2 of the illustrations of Captain Leach's report upon the works at Memphis to accompany the report of the Mississippi River Commission from July 1 to November 1, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

NICHOLAS LOCHBOELER.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Nicholas Lochboeler, without leaving copies thereof.

CONSTITUTION OF UTAH.

On motion of Mr. CAINE, by unanimous consent, the constitution and memorial adopted by the late constitutional convention of Utah, which accompanied the bill for the admission of the State of Utah into the Union, was ordered to be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now proceed to call the standing and select committees of the House for reports.

ROBERT JOHNSTON.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. 4811) for the relief of Robert Johnston, of the State of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

L. A. MORRIS.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 76) for the relief of L. A. Morris; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PRESENTATION OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 1346) limiting the time for the presentation and payment of claims against the United States; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PERMISSIBLE MARKS ON POSTAL MATTER.

Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, on second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask leave to present the written report hereafter.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair under the rules will call the committees for one hour for the consideration of bills heretofore reported.

ROBBERY AND HORSE-STEALING IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. ROGERS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1213) to punish robbery and horse-stealing in the Indian Territory which was reported the day before yesterday by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person hereafter convicted in the United States courts having jurisdiction over the Indian Territory or parts thereof, of stealing any horse, mare, gelding, filly, foal, ass, or mule, when said theft is committed in the Indian Territory, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That any person hereafter convicted of any robbery in the Indian Territory shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding ten years, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to apply to any offense committed by one Indian upon the person or property of another Indian, or so as to repeal any former act in relation to robbing the mails or robbing any person of property belonging to the United States: And provided further, That this act shall not affect or apply to any prosecution now pending, or the prosecution of any offense already committed.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but said act shall remain in force for the punishment of all persons who have heretofore been guilty of the crime of larceny in the Indian Territory.

Mr. ROGERS. I send to the Clerk's desk the report which I think will be sufficiently explanatory of the purposes of the bill.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House bill 1213, report the same back with the following amendments, and recommend its passage:

1. Insert after the word "mule," in line 6 of the first section of the bill, the words "or other domestic animal."

2. Strike out the word "five," in line 8, same section, and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

3. Insert after the word "robbery," in line 2 of the second section, the words "or burglary;" and in line 4 of said section strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The committee find that section 5356 of the Revised Statutes of the United States prescribes the punishment for larceny. The maximum punishment is $1,000 fine and one year's imprisonment. This has been found inadequate to suppress larceny in the Indian Territory. The States surrounding that country have found it necessary to inflict much severer punishment—the maximum punishment in one State, and perhaps others, being fifteen years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. The result is, the thief follows his vocation in the Territory. It is believed the passage of this bill will go far toward deterring his operations in that country.

There are statutes of the United States punishing the robbing of the mails and the robbing of persons of property belonging to the United States, and also in a few other instances robbery is punishable under existing law. It is not intended by this bill to interfere in any way with any existing statutes relating to the crime of robbery.

There is no statute punishing robbery in the Indian country except as stated. This crime is not unfrequently committed in that country. Sometimes the railroad trains are stopped and the railroad companies and express companies and passengers robbed, and the perpetrators can only be punished under the general statute for larceny, the maximum punishment for which is $1,000 fine and one year's imprisonment. This punishment the committee think incommensurate with the character of offenses stated. The surrounding States have found it necessary to punish this offense much more severely, and the committee think a severer punishment should be inflicted for this class of crimes committed in the Indian Territory, where lawless and bad men have congregated in great numbers.

The committee have been unable to find any statute punishing the crime of burglary in the Indian Territory, and have therefore recommended an amendment of the second section of the bill, so as to embrace that offense and inflict an appropriate punishment therefor.

The committee also recommend amending the title of the bill by striking out the words "and horse-stealing," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "burglary and larceny."

Mr. ROGERS. I have discovered since the Clerk read the bill that it is not the print containing the amendments reported by the committee; but the amendments are so simple that I think there will be no difficulty in having them considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill which has been read is the bill as originally introduced by the gentleman from Arkansas. The bill as reported by the committee has not yet been received from the printing office.

Mr. ROGERS. I presume we can get along with this print. The amendments are indicated in the report which has been read.

The SPEAKER. By consent the gentleman can proceed in that way and offer the amendments in the House. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of this bill, stating that he will propose in the House the amendments reported by the committee.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask, then, that after the word "mule," in line 6 of the first section of the bill, the words "or other domestic animal" be inserted, in conformity with the recommendation of the report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, those words will be incorporated in the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to amend by striking out the word "five," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to know something of the significance of these amendments as we pass along. I understand that the effect of the one just adopted is to strike out five years as the maximum punishment and insert fifteen.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, fifteen years as the maximum; no minimum being fixed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to insert in line 2 of section 2, after the word "robbery," the words "or burglary;" which will make the section embrace the crime of burglary as well as that of robbery.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Also, in line 4 of section 2, I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen;" making the maximum punishment fifteen years, there being no minimum fixed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. That, Mr. Speaker, embraces all the amendments of the committee, and now, unless some gentleman desires to discuss it, I move the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill as amended be reported to the House.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person hereafter convicted in the United States courts having jurisdiction over the Indian Territory or parts thereof, of stealing any horse, mare, gelding, filly, foal, ass, mule, or other domestic animal, when said theft is committed in the Indian Territory, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than fifteen years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That any person hereafter convicted of any robbery or burglary in the Indian Territory shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding fifteen years, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to apply to any offense committed by one Indian upon the person or property of another Indian, or so as to repeal any former act in relation to robbing the mails or robbing any person of property belonging to the United States: And provided further, That this act shall not affect or apply to any prosecution now pending, or the prosecution of any offense already committed.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but said act shall remain in force for the punishment of all persons who have heretofore been guilty of the crime of larceny in the Indian Territory.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. By the use of the words "or other domestic animals," is it intended that imprisonment for fifteen years shall be the punishment for stealing a cat, for instance, or a dog? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. No, not necessarily a cat or a dog; but a pig, of course. That is a domestic animal.

Mr. WEAVER. So is a cat.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Arkansas. Why is it that the act is not made operative as to a crime committed by one Indian against another? I suppose there must be some good reason for it, but I confess I do not know what it is.

Mr. ROGERS. I supposed everybody understood that under the existing treaties and laws of the United States the Federal courts do not take jurisdiction of any offense committed by one Indian against either the person or property of another Indian. That is the reason for the proposition. This bill is not intended to extend the jurisdiction of the Federal courts so as to interfere in any way with the Indian government or with the enforcement of their own laws. It is designed to apply only where an offense is committed by an Indian upon the person or property of a white man, or by a white man upon an Indian, or a negro, who is not a citizen of the Territory.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Well, I have learned something that I would not have known if I had not made the inquiry.

Mr. ROGERS. I supposed that was generally known.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas that perhaps the committee intended also to strike out the word "or" before the word "mule" in the first section.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; and I move that that amendment be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. PERKINS. I did not hear this bill read, and therefore I ask the gentleman what is the maximum punishment fixed by the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. The maximum punishment is imprisonment for fifteen years; but no minimum is fixed.

Mr. PERKINS. No minimum?

Mr. ROGERS. No; that matter is left discretionary with the court.

The question being taken, the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the title of the bill will be amended, as recommended by the committee.

There being no objection, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to punish robbery, burglary, and larceny in the Indian Territory."

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL-BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. WILKINS (when the Committee on Banking and Currency was called) said: I am directed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to call up for consideration House bill No. 1733, reported to the House a day or two ago.

Mr. BLAND. I want to reserve a point of order on that bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I will ask whether there is a report accompanying the bill? If so, I call for its reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS], on behalf of the Committee on Banking and Currency, calls up for consideration, under the rule, a bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1733) to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national banking associations.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to raise a point of order, but before doing so I would like to hear the reading of the report, if there is one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WEAVER. My point is that no such report as is contemplated by the rules of the House has been made upon this bill.

Mr. WILKINS. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 1733:

"The Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred House bill No. 1733, report the same back, and recommend its passage."

Mr. WEAVER. I make the point that this is not such a report as is contemplated by the rules. Rule XVIII provides, in clause 2, that—

No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution referred to a committee, or reported therefrom for printing or recommitment, shall be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider; and all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

Clause 2 of Rule XXIV provides:

On all days other than Monday as soon as the business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed, and a copy thereof mailed by the Public Printer to each Member and Delegate.

Now, sir, the rules contemplate, I submit, that every bill on being reported shall be accompanied by a statement on the part of the committee of the provisions of the bill, with their scope and effect. A mere recommendation that the bill pass does not satisfy the requirements of the rule. Here is a bill the possible effect of which will be to increase the national-banking circulation more than $400,000,000.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, I am speaking advisedly. The certain effect of the bill will be to increase that circulation $20,000,000 beyond the present amount of bonds deposited to secure the circulation of the national banks. These banks will have the right to increase their circulation to a maximum corresponding with the amount of their capital stock paid in. The aggregate amount that they have paid in is $500,000,000; and if this bill should pass, the banks are to have the right to increase their circulation to the par value of their bonds, provided this does not exceed the amount of capital stock paid in. This may lead, as the Comptroller of the Currency says, to a possible increase of the national-bank circulation to the extent of over $400,000,000 beyond the present amount.

A bill of this vast importance is hurried in here without any printed report having been distributed among members, and before we have had an opportunity to inquire into the effect of the measure should it become a law. My point of order is that this bill is not accompanied by a carefully considered and intelligible report such as the gravity of the bill and the plain requirements of the rule demand.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILKINS. I am quite willing to submit both points of order to the decision of the Chair without discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAND. Under clause 3 of Rule XXIII it is required that "all motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people" shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole. It is very true that this bill does not make a direct appropriation; but it does provide that the Comptroller of the Currency shall issue to these banks circulating notes which may increase their circulation up to the par value of the bonds deposited by them. The increased amount of notes which will thus be issued to these banking associations is, I submit, in a fair and reasonable sense, an appropriation of Government money; for the bonds of the Government are held as security for the circulation of these institutions, and these bonds are a tax upon the people. These national-bank notes are redeemable in legal-tender notes, and the Government is responsible for the redemption of the legal-tender notes. Therefore, there is in this case, under a fair construction of the rule, a tax upon the people. A bill of such character, involving the issue of a large amount of circulating notes, so that practically there is an appropriation of money, resulting under the law in a tax upon the people of the country, ought, within the spirit of the rules, to be considered in Committee of the Whole, where it can be properly discussed and amended.

Yesterday this bill had not been printed. I sent for a copy of it, and all I could get was the bill printed at the last session of Congress. It is only this moment that printed copies of the bill are furnished to members of the House.

It seems to me that we should have some opportunity of considering this matter, within the spirit and rule of the House, in Committee of the Whole; and I make that point of order.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not contemplate the appropriation of any money out of the Treasury; and at the suggestion of gentlemen around me I submit the question to the Speaker of the House without further discussion.

The SPEAKER. As to the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], the Chair can only say what has been frequently said before upon similar points, that it is not within the province of the Chair to decide upon the sufficiency of a report made by a committee of the House. All that the rule requires is that a report shall be submitted in writing, without specifying the nature of the report, and if that provision of the rule is complied with the Chair must entertain the report.

The argument of the gentleman from Iowa may be a very proper one to address to the House itself upon a motion to recommit the bill for a report containing further and more specific information. But the gentleman will see at once that if the Chair should undertake to decide such questions, the reception of all reports would depend upon the judgment of the Chair as to whether they were full or sufficiently explanatory of the measure to which they referred. So that point of order must be overruled.

The point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is also overruled. This bill does not make an appropriation or require any appropriation of money, as the Chair understands it; and, as heretofore decided, unless the bill itself does make an appropriation or necessarily require an appropriation to be made in order to execute its provisions, it does not come within the provision of the rule which requires its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. This bill simply gives to the national banks, as the Chair understands it, the privilege of issuing circulation to the amount of the par value of their bonds. Whether they will or will not make such issue of additional circulation depends upon their own judgment, to be exercised hereafter.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to know whether it is in order at this time to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with instructions to present a report setting forth the effect of the bill, its intent and purposes, and the reasons for its passage.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order whenever the gentleman from Ohio shall have relinquished the floor. Under the practice of the House the gentleman is entitled to the floor in the first instance, having made the report and called up the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire at the proper time to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. It will be in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to give notice that the motion will be made.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, during the Forty-eighth Congress I had the honor to introduce this measure. It went to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and was reported back to the House. In the Forty-ninth Congress this measure was again introduced, went to the same committee, and came back on a report from the committee and was considered in the House.

It may not be improper for me to say that the same measure passed the Senate of the United States, introduced originally by a Democratic member of great ability, and was advocated by him up to its final passage.

This proposition contains but a single clause. It provides that the circulation of the national banks may be increased from 90 per cent., which is the present law, up to the par value of the bonds deposited to secure their circulation. It is such a simple proposition that it did not seem to me or to the committee to be necessary to make any more elaborate or further report to reach the ordinary intelligence of the average member of Congress.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] both know, I hope, the importance of the passage of a such a measure. Believing that they know it, I am constrained to regard their objections this morning as rather in the nature of factious opposition than otherwise.

But I repeat, sir, if the measure becomes a law it increases the circulation of the national banks, if they see fit to avail themselves of its provisions, only to the extent of 10 per cent.

There are deposited in the national Treasury to-day one hundred and eighty-nine millions of Government bonds to secure the circulation of $167,000,000. If this shall become a law, then, Mr. Speaker, the currency of the national banks will be increased to the extent of the difference between these two sums, and no more.

I have no desire to take up the time of the House this morning with further discussion of the bill, and I am in hopes that we can reach a vote upon it without delay. I would like to know, therefore, who rises upon the other side in opposition.

Mr. BRUMM. I give notice to the gentleman that I rise for that purpose.

Mr. COX. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio if he can give the exact amount of the increase in circulation if his measure shall be adopted.

Mr. WILKINS. It would be an increase of the difference between $189,083,100 and $167,283,343, or in round numbers $21,799,000.

Mr. WEAVER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WILKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman intimates that he would like to know something about whether there is to be opposition to this bill. I say to him most emphatically that there will be, and that we want time. I would like to know how much time he is willing to accord before the debate proceeds further.

Mr. WILKINS. I am quite willing to accord all the time necessary for a full ventilation of the opinions of the gentleman from Iowa. I turned to the other side of the House, hoping that if objection came at all it would be from over there.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. You turned to the wrong side.

Mr. WILKINS. I rather think so, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] has emphatically stated his opposition.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] yield?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman from Ohio yields the floor I suggest to him, as a number of gentlemen desire to speak, that some arrangement be reached now as to the extent of the debate.

Mr. WILKINS. I was for that reason asked the question.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILKINS. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to occupy the floor for one hour, and under the practice of the House has the right to yield part of that time, if he sees proper, to other gentlemen.

Mr. WILKINS. No gentleman has indicated his desire to speak on the pending proposition.

Mr. DINGLEY. I simply desire to call attention to the parliamentary situation. Under the rule this committee would occupy the remainder of the hour to-day, and another hour to-morrow; and after that, if not disposed of, the bill would go on the Calendar of unfinished business. But so long as the House has no other business before it at the present time, it appears to me we would expedite matters by coming to an agreement by which the debate might run on, and at a certain hour this afternoon or to-morrow the previous question should be considered as ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. I prefer not to make any agreement until we test the sense of the House on a motion to recommit.

Mr. DINGLEY. All right, then.

Mr. WILKINS. If no gentleman desires to speak on this question, I move the previous question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That will not do.

Mr. WILKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas as much time as he chooses to indicate. Will ten minutes be sufficient?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I prefer to have my time in my own right. If the gentleman from Ohio wishes to explain the bill and tell the House the necessity for bringing in this measure at this time he has the right now to do that. I wish to oppose the bill, and do not desire to use up the gentleman's time.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BRUMM. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

Mr. WILKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. BRUMM. I do not want the gentleman to yield to me. I prefer taking time in my own right. As a member of the committee I claim I have that right, and I see no necessity for this hurried and impetuous action. This is a matter of vital importance to the people of this country, and one that ought to be considered immediately, and I certainly hope there will be no effort made to gag members on this question by calling the previous question. I insist upon my hour in my own time.

Mr. WILKINS. There is no desire to gag any member of this House who desires to speak on this question. I will ask unanimous consent that the discussion of this measure go on until 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. WEAVER objected.

Mr. WILKINS. Then I insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the discussion go on to-day, and the question will then come up again to-morrow under the rule.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the discussion shall proceed to-day through the entire day.

Objection was made.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to recommit the bill, and upon that motion I move the previous question; and I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BLAND. Is it in order to move to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BLAND. Then I desire to amend the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Iowa has demanded the previous question on his motion to recommit, which cuts off all amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri to allow him to offer his amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Rule XVII provides:

> It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

The motion for the previous question made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] is not on the passage, but on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is correct. The Chair had failed to make the distinction between the demand for the previous question on the engrossment and third reading and the demand for the previous question on the passage of the bill. The motion now is for the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and it is not in order under the rules of the House at that stage to move to recommit. The question is now on ordering the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The affirmative vote was taken, being—ayes 113.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the question is not understood on account of so much confusion prevailing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated the question twice, but will again state it. The question is on the demand by the gentleman from Ohio for the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Allow me to say at this point that there is an honest desire on the part of several gentlemen to occupy some time in the discussion of this measure. The gentleman from Ohio, I think, will accomplish his object better by allowing the discussion to run for some time.

Mr. WILKINS. I have been quite willing to agree to any reasonable proposition having that object in view.

Mr. MCMILLIN. While the vote is being taken debate is not in order. I call for the regular order.

The negative vote being taken, there were—noes 59.

Mr. BRUMM. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, 28 members voting therefor—not one-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. BRUMM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 45 members voting in the affirmative.

Mr. BLAND. Is it in order now to move to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and upon that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] demands the previous question. This vote is to be taken upon ordering the previous question. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND called for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 132.

Mr. BLAND. I demand tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and they were refused—only 26 members voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BRUMM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and they were refused—only 20 members voting in the affirmative.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and tellers were refused—only 18 members voting in the affirmative.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion now pending. [Laughter.] Tellers are refused; the yeas and nays are refused; the vote on the motion to adjourn is, ayes 55, noes 132; the noes have it, and the House refuses to adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The question was taken on Mr. BLAND'S motion; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 114.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WILKINS] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 3, noes 161.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The question was taken on the motion for a recess; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILKINS. Is it in order to withdraw the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. If the order made by the House directing the yeas and nays to be called is set aside, rescinded, or reconsidered, the gentleman can withdraw his demand; but the House has taken possession of the question, and ordered the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRUMM. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, I think I can make a suggestion which may possibly facilitate this matter. I do not think there is a disposition on the part of what seems to be the minority here now, the opponents of this bill, to prevent a vote being taken upon it. The disposition is simply to have a fair discussion of the bill and an agreement to have a yea-and-nay vote upon it, and, while I am not prepared to make any proposition to-day, I think that there will be no difficulty to-morrow in arriving at a conclusion that will be fair to both sides, if the gentleman will allow the matter to lie over until that time.

The SPEAKER. The hour will expire in one minute. This matter will come up to-morrow during the morning hour, and in the mean time gentlemen may come to an understanding. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] withdraw his motion for a recess?

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. There is no unfinished business.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired, and unless there be some motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the next business in order is the consideration of bills on the House Calendar.

WAR RECORDS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back with amendments the resolution referred to that committee some days ago with reference to the compilation, etc., of the war records. I send the report to the Clerk's desk, and ask that it be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for information in relation to the war records, respectfully report the same back, and recommend its adoption with the following amendments:

1. Strike out the word "directed" and insert in lieu thereof the word "requested."

2. Insert after the words "lately involved in the rebellion" the words "or any other State."

3. Strike out the word "trophies" and insert in lieu thereof the word "colors."

4. Add after the citation of the States these words: "Looking to the preservation of said property as provided by law."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Unless some gentleman desires to discuss the resolution or the amendments——

The SPEAKER. The resolution has not yet been read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House a full statement of the plan and scope of the compilation of the official records of the war of the rebellion, specifying particularly all changes, if any, made or contemplated, either in the arrangement or subject-matters to be published, in the plan adopted by the Secretary of War while the publication of these records was in charge of the late Lieut. Col. R. M. Scott; and that the said Secretary be directed to further transmit copies of all official correspondence and orders relating to permitting or refusing access to such portions of the war records as have been selected for publication under the law of Congress providing for their publication.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now ask the Clerk to read the amendments proposed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Those amendments have already been reported.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In order that the House may understand their effect, I ask that they be read again.

The amendments as embraced in the report of the committee were again read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, unless some one desires to discuss this resolution or the proposed amendments, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, thirty minutes are allowed for debate; fifteen minutes in support of the proposition and fifteen minutes in opposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no wish to make any remarks in reference to the resolution or amendments, and unless some other member desires discussion I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. If no gentleman desires to speak, the Chair will put the question. [A pause.] The first question is upon the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any of them? In the absence of such demand, the question will be taken upon the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

CAPTURED BATTLE-FLAGS, ETC.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to submit from the Committee on Military Affairs another privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for information relating to the flags, standards, and trophies under his charge, respectfully report the same back and recommend that it be adopted with the following amendments:——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the Clerk read the resolution before reading the amendments, so that the effect of the amendments may be better understood.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform this House whether it is true that the flags, standards, and trophies captured from the enemies of the United States have been removed from the place where they were displayed, as required by law, and have since been concealed from the public; and, if so, when, by what authority, and for what reason said flags and trophies have been withdrawn from public inspection.

Also, that he inform the House whether any propositions have been at any time made, by persons in authority under the United States Government, for the surrender or delivery of any portion of said flags and trophies to any official or person in any of the States lately involved in the rebellion, and, if so, by whose order, by what authority, and for what reason such propositions to surrender these sacred trophies of the valor of the nation's defenders were made.

Also, that he inform the House whether it is true, as alleged, that a portion of said flags and trophies were actually surrendered and delivered to persons having no right to their possession, before the countermanding order of the President was issued; and, if so, to furnish a list, and description of the property of the United States thus surrendered, with the names of the person or persons responsible for the delivery, and of those who received said property.

Also, that the Secretary furnish the House with a full descriptive list of all the flags, banners, and trophies that have been placed in the custody of the War Department, with information as to what measures, if any, have been taken to comply with the requirements and obvious intent of sections 218, 423, 1554, and 1555 of the Revised Statutes.

The following amendments reccommended by the committee were read:

First. Strike out the word "directed" and insert in lieu thereof the word "requested."

Second. Insert after the words "lately involved in the rebellion" the words "or any other State."

Third. Strike out the word "trophies" and insert in lieu thereof the word "colors."

Fourth. Add after the citation of statutes these words, "looking to the preservation of said property as provided by law."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BOUTELLE. This resolution has been reported without material modifications. I have no desire to make any remarks at this time on the merits of the resolution, but I trust the chairman of the committee will allow me to say a few words in regard to the amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Two or three minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the first amendment reported by the committee proposes to change the phraseology of that portion of the resolution which calls for this information, by striking out the word "directed" and inserting the word "requested." On this point I wish to say that in framing the resolution I had no desire to make the wording especially imperative or to depart from the customary phraseology of the House in resolutions of this kind. I consulted what I believed to be the uniform precedents of this body and the Senate in making requisitions upon the various heads of Departments for information.

Without going into any elaborate citations, I may say that I have here references taken at random from the proceedings of the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress, embracing ten or fifteen cases in which, by resolutions of the House calling for information, the head of the Department has been "directed" to furnish such information.

I will detain the House only by referring to one I have here. In the House of Representatives, on the 21st of December, 1885, Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the leader of the majority side of the House, asked unanimous consent that a resolution be now considered by the House in these words:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to transmit to this House such information as he possesses, including copies of all official documents and correspondence on file in his Department, relating to importations from Bohemia of certain glasswares.

I cite that as an illustration to show that the leader of the Democratic side of the House certainly would not be likely to go out of his way to employ an unusual method of calling for information.

I cite further the fact that in the exhaustive report of the Senate Judiciary Committee, made February 17, 1886, in the celebrated dispute between the Senate and the Executive in regard to the production of certain executive documents, the only contention made on the part of the minority was that the Senate had no right to demand the production of documents in possession of the President himself; but so far as the public archives were concerned and documents in the various Departments, there was no contention on either side against the right of either branch of Congress to demand their production. On that point those eminent lawyers composing the Senate Judiciary Committee say in the majority report:

The early Journals of the Senate show a great number of instances of direction to the heads of Departments, as of course, to furnish papers and reports of all sorts, both executive and legislative.

But they make the distinction of requesting the Executive and commanding the heads of Departments. Each House of Congress, from the early days until now, in calling for papers and other information, has followed that formula, as is shown by instances innumerable. I leave that point with these brief citations of the usage of Congress.

I am not at all tenacious about phraseology. If the House chooses to request the Secretary instead of using the ordinary phraseology, it is perfectly satisfactory to me. I have been led to believe that these forms and phrases which have come to us through the precedents of years had some meaning and were based on a deliberate conception of the relative positions of the different branches of the Government and its officers, and I am firm in the belief that the proper phraseology of the House of Representatives of the United States in requiring the production of public documents of this Government, or information in regard to public affairs from the heads of Departments, is to "direct," as always has been done.

In regard to the next amendment, which is the substitution of the word "colors" for "trophies," of course that is immaterial.

A further amendment provides that the inquiry shall be extended beyond the original terms of the resolution, which required information as to any proposition to return flags or colors captured from the enemies of the United States to any persons representing any of the States lately involved in rebellion, so as to include the inquiry whether any flags or colors had been returned to anybody in "any other State." I have no objection to that, although, Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted to say it has no point of bearing on the purpose of the original resolution. No troops from any of those "other States," to which reference is made in this amendment, ever had any colors, standards, or banners captured from them as enemies of the United States. In those "other States" the troops were organized into regiments under State classifications and titles, as the First Maine, Tenth Massachusetts, and Fourth Michigan Volunteers, etc., and as they brought their own banners when they were mustered into the United States service, they carried their banners with them when they went home to be mustered out after having aided in suppressing the rebellion. No banners or trophies could have been captured from them as enemies of the United States.

I presume, therefore, that the only purpose of this amendment may possibly be to call into prominence the fact which has been alleged in some of the newspapers, that in some instances where troops from the loyal States had their colors captured from them on the field of battle by rebel organizations, and afterwards the Army of the United States, or some portion of it, captured such rebel organization with its banners, and also with the Union banners they held as trophies, and brought them to Washington, that in some of those instances, requests from loyal regiments in the North—regiments whose organization has been still kept up—regiments recognized to-day as part of the militia of the United States as they were when they enlisted—that on the request of persons connected with those regiments, the Secretary of War or some other official has returned to such regiments of loyal soldiers the colors which they bore into battle in defense of the Union, and which had been captured from them on the field by the enemies of the United States, and afterwards recaptured from those enemies of the United States and sent to Washington.

Now, if the Committee on Military Affairs, or any portion of the members of the House, think that the citation of any possible instances where banners have thus been returned to Union troops who originally carried them in defense of the Government is pertinent to this inquiry, relating solely to propositions to transfer the banners and colors captured from the armed enemies of the United States back to persons claiming to be the representatives of those military organizations which were at the time enemies of the United States, I do not think that I shall care to antagonize it.

With this brief explanation I desire to say to my friends on this side of the House, and to gentlemen on both sides of the House, that I am very glad to find that the Committee on Military Affairs by reporting back with unanimous vote this resolution, without substantial modifications, have so fully vindicated the belief I expressed when I introduced and asked immediate action upon the resolution, that there really would be no serious objection upon either side of the House to its adoption.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], I beg to say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] and to the House, that I have no doubt he is in the main correct as to the form of expression ordinarily used in such resolutions. It has always been the custom, in the phraseology of resolutions of this character, when addressed to the head of a Department, to use the word "directed," but when such a resolution is addressed to the President of the United States we employ the word "requested." I never could see any special reason for adhering to that form when asking information of the Departments. True, the heads of Departments are the clerks of the President—his subordinates—for the transaction of the operations of the Government. But we, as a body representing the people, are possibly somewhat superior to the mere Cabinet officer, and perhaps we do not treat him with the same deference as we treat a co-ordinate branch, to wit, the Executive. I think there would be no objection possibly to the use of either word in connection with such a resolution; but I am told by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the committee has made a unanimous report, and perhaps it could not now be amended in that respect without a new meeting of the committee and further delay.

Having made that unanimous report which so pleases my friend from Maine, I am glad to know that we have unanimity at last in this business; for it indicates that there has been a "growth in grace" towards all our States, North and South, in relation to our late troubles, or rather our remote troubles, for they are now remote. So we ought to congratulate ourselves and the country that a resolution of this character, which touches the public sensibilities so greatly, has been arrived at, and has received even the appreciation of my friend from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If my friend from New York will permit me to reciprocate his very pleasant expressions, I will only emphasize them by saying that I am sorry the gentleman did not take the same position a few days ago, when I requested immediate action upon this matter.

Mr. COX. But the gentleman from Maine will recollect that he was entirely out of order, as he generally is. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I desire to say that the action of that committee was entirely unanimous upon all the amendments to this resolution. The reason the first amendment was adopted was because there was no apprehension in the mind of any member of the committee that the Secretary of War would be disinclined to answer promptly and fully any of the inquiries addressed to him by this resolution, and therefore, as a matter of taste, every member of the committee felt that it was better to use the more courteous term "requested" in lieu of the more imperative and commanding term "directed."

It was also thought by some members of the committee that the House alone has no power to compel any Cabinet officer or a co-ordinate branch of the Government to respond to any inquiry. They are of the opinion that you can not direct or compel a Cabinet officer except by an act of Congress, which, of course, requires the co-operation and approval of the Senate at least. As this resolution simply addresses inquiry to the head of a Department in a co-ordinate branch of the Government, it was deemed proper by every member of the committee, Republican as well as Democrat, that a more courteous term should be used than the one employed in the original resolution.

Now as to the second amendment. The resolution, as it was sent to the committee, confined the inquiry to the action of persons or officials in States which had lately been involved in the rebellion. The committee, by a unanimous vote, without one single discordant voice, either Democrat or Republican, deemed it perfectly proper and right that the inquiry should be broadened so as to ascertain whether persons or officials in any State, North or South, had asked for or obtained the custody of any of the captured flags, standards, or colors which, under the law, are required to be preserved in the War Department at Washington.

The third amendment was adopted for this reason: The language of the original resolution requires the Secretary of War to furnish "information as to what measures, if any, have been taken to comply with the requirements and obvious intent of sections 218, 228, 1554, and 1555 of the Revised Statutes." The amendment offered by the committee is to the effect that the words be added "in so far as it relates to the preservation of these flags, etc."

This was done because, upon an examination of these sections, it was seen that but one of them relates to the War Department. The others relate alone to the Navy Department and to matters over which the Secretary of War has no control, and who it can not be assumed is as well prepared to advise us as the Secretary of the Navy. In order that we might adhere as much as possible to the language of the gentleman from Maine as expressed in the original resolution—for we desired that he shall solely enjoy the fame and origin of the language of this resolution—it was suggested that we make the modification in the form I have quoted and therefore obviate the necessity for striking out the sections of the statute mentioned, although they have no relation whatever to the question before the House, which is an inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War.

Mr. Speaker, it will be premature to discuss the merits of this resolution in advance of the answer of the Secretary of War. I shall therefore refrain from saying anything whatever in regard to its merits until the answer of the Secretary of War has been received.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me a word in regard to the statutes which have been referred to?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will be brief. I merely want to economize time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Only a moment. I am perfectly well aware and was so when I drew the resolution, that three of those statutes referred to were not directed specifically to the Secretary of War; and if the gentleman will examine the resolution he will see that it asks the Secretary of War what measures have been taken to comply with the requirements and "obvious intent" of sections so and so.

The statutes are these: The first two are in the organic acts creating the War and Navy Departments. Those require the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to collect all flags, standards, and colors captured by the Army and the Navy, respectively, from the enemies of the United States. Those are in the original acts creating those Departments.

Farther on in the Statutes—sections 1554, I think, and 1555—there are provisions, first, that the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be collected and transmitted to the national capital all standards and colors captured from the enemies of the United States by the Navy; and section 1555 requires the President of the United States to cause those colors to be properly displayed at some place at the seat of government.

Now, there is no specific provision of that nature addressed by a statute to the Secretary of War. But I included those in my resolution because it did not seem to me that the War Department or the Committee on Military Affairs would desire to plead that the plain and clear intent of the instruction of Congress to the Secretary of the Navy in regard to the proper disposition of trophies captured in battle by one of the great branches of the military arm would not properly apply in its intent and spirit to the War Department in its dealing with the same subject.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move the adoption of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Are separate votes demanded on the amendments?

No separate vote was demanded.

The amendments were agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a question of privilege. I offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the standing committee of this House on printing be requested to inquire into the reasons, if any exist, why the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not furnished to members at an earlier hour, and report their finding in the premises to the House.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. GROSVENOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNN. I ask the Chair if it is now in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills on that Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DUNN. I make that motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman please state his object?

Mr. DUNN. My object is to call up for consideration the bill relating to a Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; the Senate bill No. 261.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills on the Calendar of that committee. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The first bill on the Calendar was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 261) to amend the law concerning the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4395 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a person of scientific and practical acquaintance with the fish and fisheries to be a Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and he shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, and he shall be removable at the pleasure of the President. Said Commissioner shall not hold any other office or employment under the authority of the United States or any State."

The report (by Mr. DUNN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 261) entitled "An act to amend the law concerning the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries," have considered the same and report it back to the House without amendment, and recommend its passage without delay.

The United States Fish Commission was established by act of February 9, 1871, which provided for the appointment, by the President, with the consent of the Senate, of a Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries from among the civil officers or employés of the Government, who shall serve without additional salary. The act contemplated simply an investigation "with the view of ascertaining whether any, and what diminution in the number of food-fishes" had taken place, and also what "protective, prohibitory, or precautionary measures should be adopted, and report upon the same to Congress."

The act of March 3 of the same year, to provide for deficiencies, etc., appropriated $6,000 for the expenses of the inquiry ordered.

Professor Spencer F. Baird, then assistant secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and an employé of the Government, he having charge of the National Museum, was appointed Commissioner. He prosecuted the inquiries with so much zeal, energy, and ability that the act of 1871 was re-enacted, and the deficiency bill of May 18, 1872, made an additional appropriation of $3,500 to continue the inquiry and $500 for the preparation of illustrations, tables, and report.

So impressed was Congress with the wisdom of Professor Baird's recommendations, based on the investigations he had made into the condition of our fisheries, that the act of June 10, 1872, contained an appropriation of $5,000 to continue those investigations during the fiscal year, and $15,000 was provided "for the introduction of shad into the waters of the Pacific States, the Gulf States, and of the Mississippi Valley; and of salmon, whitefish, and other useful food-fishes into the waters of the United States to which they are best adapted." Each succeeding year appropriations have been increased as the work was extended under the wise and successful management of the Commissioner.

The act limiting the appointment of the Commissioner to a detail of some one at the time in the employ of the Government appears to have contemplated only an inquiry occupying perhaps a few summer months.

At the time of the selection of Professor Baird his duties under his salaried position were comparatively light, as he was charged with the administration, under the Secretary, of the Museum, which was in those days contained in the small space which could be allowed in the Smithsonian building. Under Professor Baird's masterly, wise, and energetic management, both the Fish Commission and the National Museum have grown to large proportions, so that at his death the work of the Fish Commission had developed from an inquiry in 1871, on an appropriation of $5,000, to the production, transportation, and distribution of over 100,000,000 young fish, and the administration of some sixteen hatching and rearing stations: two in Maine, at Grand Lake Stream and Bucksport; two in Massachusetts, at Gloucester and Wood's Holl; two in Michigan, at Northville and Alpena; one at Duluth; one on the Columbia River; two in California, on the Sacramento; one on the Susquehanna, at Havre de Grace; one at the mouth of the Potomac; two within the city of Washington; one at Fort Washington, and one at Wytheville, Va., besides the administration of scientific investigations and fish hatching done by three steam and one sailing vessel, and of three transporting cars specially designed to transfer fish from one end of the country to the other.

The National Museum has had a corresponding expansion, for in addition to the hall of the Smithsonian, which held the collections in 1871, and whose administration cost $20,000, a building covering 3½ acres has been built and equipped, and it has been found necessary to appropriate $168,000 for their care this year.

The necessity arose for husbanding and increasing our food resources, and Professor Baird created and expanded the Fish Commission, and although the act of 1871 may have been prudent and a wise measure at the time it was enacted, and although the work of the Fish Commission as well as that of the Museum was well done by him, perhaps at sacrifice of some years of his valuable and honored life, it is to be doubted if, at the time of his appointment as Fish Commissioner, the Smithsonian, the National Museum, and the Fish Commission had been of their present magnitude, Congress would have provided for their conduct being placed even on his broad shoulders, and the work of three assigned to his well-trained and cultivated intellect.

The work of the Fish Commission has become so extensive, and the results so important to the country, that it should be made, as this bill proposes, the sole object of the Commissioner—it should occupy all his time. This bill, therefore, while giving the President the greatest latitude in making his choice, takes away the limitation that that choice shall be confined to those who may be otherwise employed by the Government. This bill repeals the provision of the act of 1871, which requires that the now important and all-engrossing duties of the Fish Commissioner shall be performed at the expense of some other department and some other appropriation.

Under the present law the Commissioner must either hold a sinecure, receive a Government salary which he does not earn, or he must neglect duties for which he is paid in order that he might perform others for which he is not paid; or perhaps, as in the case of Professor Baird, devote hours which nature demands for rest and recreation to Government work without compensation. The first two alternatives are neither right nor proper, and the Government is not so impecunious or needy that we should ask for it or accept such gratuitous services.

The rate of salary named in the bill is the same as has been fixed for and paid to the assistant commissioner for years.

With a Commissioner charged, as his sole duty, with the work of the Fish Commission there will be no further need for an assistant commissioner. The bill, therefore, does not contemplate any additional expense. The further details of the administration will be looked to when the appropriation bills are made up.

It is best not to incumber the present bill with other matter than the provision for the head of the Commission, as it is of the first importance that a permanent head of the Commission should be provided for at once. As soon as the new Commissioner provided for by this act shall have been appointed and installed, he can be called before the committees of the House, and if further legislation be needed it can be predicated on his reports, and after a revision of any projects for the prosecution of the work which he may submit.

Mr. DUNN. I do not know of anything that I can add to the explanation given in the report if members have attended to the reading of it. The simple question is whether the Fish Commission shall be retained and given a thorough business organization, with a distinctive, independent, and responsible head to it, or whether it shall be abandoned.

I presume that members generally know that it originated at the instance of Professor Baird in the institution of a mere inquiry in 1871, and that it has grown now to be one of the most important bureaus of the Government in the estimation of a great many thoughtful and considerate people. Appropriations have been made from year to year and placed at the disposal practically of Professor Baird almost without limitation, and I believe during most of the time without detailed report as to the manner of their expenditure, so great was the confidence which Congress and the country had in his wisdom and in his integrity, and the results have justified that confidence.

But Professor Baird is dead, and there is now no practical head to that bureau. And it is thought wise and to be best that an independent head be created, in order that the bureau may be administered on a basis of responsibility, as the other departments or bureaus of the Government are and should be.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Arkansas permit me a question?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman inform us what authority Congress has for legislation creating this bureau?

Mr. DUNN. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is a very large question, undoubtedly, in the estimation of my friend from Alabama; but it seems that Congress created this bureau in 1871, and has maintained it since. It was perhaps unfortunate that my friend from Alabama was not here just then to intercept it; but we have the bureau in existence, and it is for Congress to determine now not whether it will create such a bureau, but whether or not it will retain it. Really, time would fail me to undertake to go into a general disquisition as to the exact authority of Congress to do or not to do a great many things which it has done in the past.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. DUNN. If I can.

Mr. OATES. Was not the origin of this bureau merely a resolution authorizing the detail of an officer of the Government to inquire into the destruction of fish along the coast?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir; that was its origin, as is stated in the report of the committee. Inquiry made under that authority led to the making of the appropriations by Congress from time to time for the creation of hatching-stations, for the construction and equipment of vessels, for the construction and maintenance of railway cars to transport spawn and young fish, and distribute them over the country, and for doing all the things that the Fish Commission has done. There has been created and brought into existence a plant costing the Government perhaps more than a quarter million dollars, possibly a half million. We now have sixteen hatching-stations, several vessels with their equipments, and some railway cars constructed for the express purpose of transporting spawn and young fish to different parts of the country, where they are deposited in the water for development and propagation. That is the situation. The bureau is now actually in existence. Heretofore the appropriations have been intrusted to Professor Baird, but, unfortunately for science and the good of mankind, Professor Baird is no longer alive, and it now devolves upon the Government to put that bureau upon a business basis or else to abandon it. It is not believed that there is any strong sentiment in the country in favor of abandoning it, because everybody is aware of the great benefits that have resulted from its establishment.

Mr. STEELE. Can the gentleman inform us whether Professor Baird's successor has been appointed?

Mr. DUNN. There has been designated an officer to take charge of that bureau temporarily, Professor Goode, who is now away on leave of absence, I believe. By reference of the question to the Solicitor-General, it was found that the assistant commissioner, who had been really the administrative officer of the Government, was not eligible for appointment to the position of Commissioner.

Mr. STEELE. Is Professor Baird's successor at the head of the Smithsonian Institution?

Mr. DUNN. Professor Goode?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. DUNN. I can not answer that question. Professor Baird, I believe, was one of the secretaries of the Institution.

Mr. COX. Professor Goode is assistant secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, but he will probably be compelled to resign by reason of ill health.

Mr. STEELE. Professor Baird's successor, if appointed, will receive $8,000?

Mr. DUNN. Oh, no.

Mr. STEELE. Professor Baird received that.

Mr. DUNN. Professor Baird received nothing as Fish Commissioner.

Mr. STEELE. But in connection with the Smithsonian Institution he received $8,000.

Mr. DUNN. He received $8,000 for performing the duties of that office and of two others.

Mr. COX. But not from the Government.

Mr. DUNN. Not from the Government.

Mr. STEELE. I want to ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether, within his knowledge, the President of the United States has canvassed the country to find a man who can perform the duties which Professor Baird performed as Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and as Fish Commissioner.

Mr. DUNN. I must respectfully refer the gentleman to the President himself. The question would not be a respectful one for me to ask, and I must decline to make the inquiry, and, in the absence of any information on the subject, I can not undertake to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. STEELE. Do you not think it would be possible for the President to find a suitable successor to Professor Baird?

Mr. DUNN. I have never doubted the President's ability to discharge all the duties devolving upon him by law as Chief Executive with great ability and great benefit to the country.

Mr. STEELE. As I understand it now, the party of "economy and reform" propose to pay $13,000 to some one for performing the same duties that were performed by Professor Baird for $8,000.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is greatly in error. I sympathize with him, and I shall be patient in enlightening him. [Laughter.] The Government has never paid one dollar as a salary to any person for acting as Fish Commissioner.

Mr. STEELE. Professor Baird did that work in addition to his other duties?

Mr. DUNN. Yes; Professor Baird was a great naturalist and scientist and an enthusiast about this particular matter. He rendered the Government a very valuable service as a labor of love, and his labors produced such valuable results that it is now deemed wise for Congress to preserve and extend them by preserving this bureau and leaving the President to find a fit successor to carry on Professor Baird's work.

Mr. STEELE. Would it not be economy to defer this matter for awhile in order to see whether a successor can not be found to perform the same duty that Professor Baird did and for the same pay?

Mr. DUNN. The President will scarcely "search" for a Commissioner, for he is authorized to appoint one.

Mr. STEELE. He has already made a designation, as I understand.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] yields to me for a few moments.

As to the question of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], I will simply make this explanation, that the salary of Professor Baird was never paid out of the Treasury or by the Government of the United States. As Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, elected by the regents of that Institution, not appointed by the President, he was paid out of the income of the Institution. He was designated as the head of the Fish Commission, and for his services in that capacity he received no salary whatever.

Professor Baird's successor as secretary of the Smithsonian Institution has been selected by the regents, and is performing his duties. This Fish Commission has grown to such an extent that the administrative work requires an executive officer at the head of it. It will be no longer proper to devolve the duties of the head of this commission upon an officer paid out of a private fund, and who, having been selected for his high scientific abilities and attainments, can not properly be required to give to the administrative duties of an office like this the time and attention which they demand, and who is not expected to have the special qualifications which would fit him for work of this character.

While on the floor I will say only one other word with reference to the appointment of a head for this commission. By the language of the bill it is provided, I observe, that the President shall appoint as Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries a person of scientific and practical acquaintance with the fish and fisheries of the coast. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] informs me that this language has been modified so as to include the inland waters of the country. With the respect which I have for Professor Baird's memory and which I had for him while he was living, I would be the last man to make any criticism upon the past management of the Fish Commission; but I think there is danger that the scientific side of this question may be given a prominence not designed by Congress in the establishment of this commission. I do not understand that the appropriations made by Congress for this work, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars per annum, and increasing from year to year, are given for the purpose of investigations in natural history. In my view, the work of this commission is designed to be economic and practical, looking to an increase of the food supply in the fisheries of the United States. The practical and economic side of the work of this commission is the one which should have prominence, and the scientific work should be only an adjunct. I think the danger to be apprehended in the future, especially if we should have a purely scientific man at the head of this commission, is that he will consider the appropriations given by Congress as designed rather for the purpose of conducting scientific experiments and investigations than to be applied to the actual economic work contemplated by Congress in the creation of the commission.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Does not the gentleman's argument apply more to the question of the appointment which may be made by the President than to the phraseology of the bill?

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I am not objecting to the phraseology of the bill, for it includes both terms—"scientific" and "practical."

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Of course the appointee must have some special knowledge with reference to the subjects intrusted to the commission.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. If I were going to write the bill I would give the word "practical" preference over the other.

Mr. DUNN. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON].

Mr. FELTON. I wish to state for the information of gentlemen here that while Professor Baird received no salary other than that paid from the funds of the Smithsonian Institution——

Mr. STEELE. A salary of $8,000.

Mr. FELTON. He had an assistant who performed, under the supervision of the professor, most of the duties connected with the work of the Fish Commission, and this assistant was paid for his services $5,000 per annum. It is now proposed to dispense with this assistant and to put at the head of this commission some competent gentleman who will receive the salary of $5,000. Consequently there will be no increased expenditure in the matter of salaries for conducting the work of the commission. This work having grown to such magnitude as to justify the creation of a distinct bureau with an official head, it is important that this officer should give to the work of the commission his entire time, instead of attending to matters connected with two or three different institutions. There will be no increase of salary and no additional expenditure of money.

Mr. STEELE. Does the gentleman refer to Mr. Ferguson?

Mr. FELTON. I do refer to Mr. Ferguson, a gentleman as to whom Professor Baird is upon record as saying that there was not in the United States a man who was his equal in knowledge of these fish industries.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer satisfactorily the queries which have been propounded on the other side. I would not obtrude myself in connection with this matter but for some relation which I had in the early days to the Smithsonian Institution and my regard for the gentlemen who have been associated through that Institution with the Fish Commission.

Professor Baird, as we all know, became, after the death of Professor Henry, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. He received a salary, but not from the Government. He was a beneficiary under the will of an Englishman—James Smithson. When we undertook, through the agency of the Government, to investigate the propagation of food-fishes in America, a measure was passed by Congress on the 9th of February, 1871, authorizing the President to appoint, for the purpose of taking charge of this work, some one connected either with the Smithsonian Institution or with the Government. Professor Baird at that time was connected with the Government National Museum. He was an employé of the Government. Being an enthusiast in relation to the propagation of food-fishes, having a thorough scientific training, he entered upon these researches con amore. He was selected by the President to undertake it. He undertook it without pay.

The pay he received as Secretary was perhaps adequate for his running expenses as a citizen of Washington, in such an eminent position, but he died a comparatively poor man, and his family, consisting of an infirm wife and an infirm daughter, are living in a house which they must sell or give up, unless they are more or less supported from some other source than remained to him at his death. After all his gratuitous and beneficent services for the Government, they must yield up that comfort which they enjoyed while the husband and father was serving the Government. But of that I may speak on another and more fitting occasion.

I do not wish to discuss the question whether there is any necessity for this bureau. It exists. The only question now is, whether we shall sustain it in its present efficiency.

Professor Baird inaugurated the inquiry to which I have adverted, in 1871. He continued his service until the last year, when he died. On his decease Professor Goode was called to take his place. He was and is in frail health. He had been an assistant to Professor Baird and has been receiving $5,000 as such assistant fish commissioner. Professor Goode, at the express request of the President, took charge of this trust temporarily, as understood. He is not able to keep up his relation with the Smithsonian, and the Museum, and with the Fish Commission also; so that he is likely to resign that position as Fish Commissioner.

Now the question comes up, whether we shall continue this bureau. It does not call on us to pay any more money out of the Treasury as salary than has been paid to the assistant commissioner. This was well stated by the gentleman. We propose to give the same sum to the officer created under this act, as was paid to the assistant, namely, $5,000.

This business of propagating our food-fishes is well appreciated by the people all over our country. Since Professor Baird began this work there has been sent out by tank, cans, and otherwise, throughout the land, from Texas to Maine, and from the Columbia River to the St. John's, one hundred millions of young fish, or spawn, for the propagation of this food.

The report of Professor Goode (House Miscellaneous Document No. 39) to the present Congress shows the cost during the last fiscal year of the production, transportation, and distribution of these hundred millions from their sixteen hatching and rearing stations. The propagation expenses were $130,000, the cost of fish-ponds and distribution was $45,000; and the same sum for vessels engaged in the service. There are existing other appliances for the forwarding of this extensive and humane object, which I will not now dwell upon.

The time has almost come prophesied by Professor Huxley, when an acre of water will almost produce as much food for the support of human life as an acre of land.

The science of fish propagation is one of the marvels of our time. It is one of the miracles of physical culture. We have understood, appreciated, and encouraged by law this wonderful multiplication of food-fishes.

If I am permitted to refer modestly to my travels, I will say that when I was coasting around Norway a scientist informed me—pointing out over the Arctic Ocean, which we were inspecting—that there had been the year before a shoal of codfish near the Lofoden Islands 1 mile in superficial extent, containing one hundred and fifty millions of cod; and that those codfish had fed on four hundred and twenty millions of herring. There is no limit to the wonderful infinitude of these finny creatures of the deep.

Professor Baird saw with generous vision this result of natural law. Although I believe the invention or discovery of this remarkable fecundity and mode of propagation in fish was made at an earlier date than 1871, still he utilized it. To be just in this connection, I may remark that before Professor Baird undertook this service, Dr. Garlick, an Ohio man, discovered the process. His is not a happy name, but his discovery was felicity itself to millions. Is it not a curious fact that Ohio always seems to be a little ahead of other States in certain affairs—political or otherwise? [Laughter.] Excuse my seeming forwardness in speaking of Ohio products, for I was born there myself. [Laughter.]

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, there never was an interest in this country so cared for by the Government as this of fish. Our first efforts, at least in New England, began with fish. When our ancestors—I refer to New England where I was educated—when our ancestors went to King James for a charter to go across seas and colonize Massachusetts, the king asked the Puritans, "What is your object? What do you intend?" Their answer was, "To worship God and catch fish!" [Laughter.] Then the king rejoined, "I give you the charter. Fore Gad! it is the Apostles' own calling!" [Renewed laughter.]

Why, sir, even in the early churches of New England the early and pious Puritans used to sing:

Ye monsters of the bubbling deep,
Your Maker's name upraise;
Up from the sands ye codlings peep,
And wag your tails always.

[Laughter and applause.]

So that in early New England the cure and care of fish was concomitant with commerce, liberty, and sanctity. In later times New England has obtained Congressional enactments giving free salt for her fish, while the miserable man in Chicago can not get free salt for his pork. [Laughter.] Congress has always had a kindly word for the fishermen. For many decades it gave bounties at so much per cod. These fishermen have not become less tenacious of their rights since the bounty ceased. They are a power in numbers and influence. They number a million or more of men constantly engaged in their hardy and hazardous occupation. Their calling is associated at the present time with some curious wriggling in diplomacy. [Laughter.] But wherever they are, and wherever they adventure, they should be cared for by the fostering arm of the Government.

The main object of this bill, sir, is not to assist the fishermen so much as the consumers of fish. It would send out the seed broadcast, that food harvests may grow in all the waters of this land. I trust there will be nothing done here to impair the usefulness of this bureau. I trust, as this bill takes no money out of the Treasury, that no further objection will be made to its passage; that the President may be able to select a good practical man of science and energy, whether he be a Democrat or not, to occupy and honor the position. I am not sure but that there may be found some good scientific Democrat in this country to administer this office. [Laughter.] All the sciences cannot be monopolized by the Republican party. There may be a Democrat discovered with the qualities of a good scientific fisherman. The President will find him. The President himself is somewhat of an expert in that line. [Laughter.] At all events let us by this enactment enable him to select the right man for the position. So far as I am individually concerned I am not over eager whether he selects a Democrat or a Republican to carry out the humane and beneficent provisions proposed by this bill reported by my honored friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], to whom I tender my thanks for the privilege of these desultory remarks. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the committee is now in the humor to rise and report this bill to the House; and I make that motion unless some other gentleman desires to be heard upon it.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill S. 261, had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, PARIS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the invitation from the Government of France to this Government to participate in the international exposition which is to be held at Paris in 1889.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1888.

And then, on motion of Mr. MILLS (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 13, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. STEWART. There is a slight inaccuracy in the Journal. Yesterday I reported the bill (S. 498) for the relief of Frank De La Terre and Susan F. De La Terre, heirs of Peter De La Terre, deceased, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. That fact is not noted in the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction suggested by the Senator from Nevada will be made. If there be no further correction or amendment, the Journal will stand approved as read.

ANNUAL REPORT OF PUBLIC PRINTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Public Printer; which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Printing:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1888.

SIR: In obedience to statute, I herewith transmit to Congress the annual report of this office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Respectfully, yours,

TH. E. BENEDICT, Public Printer.

Hon. J. J. INGALLS,

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the city council of Springfield, Ohio, and resolutions adopted by the Baltimore (Md.) Corn and Flour Exchange, in favor of the world's exposition in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus; which were referred to the Special Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

He also presented a petition of 35 citizens of the Fourth Congressional district of Kansas, and a petition of 87 citizens of the Second Congressional district of Kansas, praying for the passage of a bill to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Toledo (Ohio) Association of Union ex-Prisoners of War, favoring the passage of some measure for their relief; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Stephen D. Redfield, of Vinton, Benton County, Missouri, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of citizens of Seward County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of an amendment of the postal laws concerning the transmission of seeds, bulbs, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the gold and silver beaters of the United States, praying for relief, in consideration of the deplorable condition of their trade, suggesting as a remedy that an increased duty be levied on gold leaf, bronze, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a petition of gold and silver beaters of the United States, similar to the one just presented by the Senator from Nebraska, which I move be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by the board of supervisors of Bureau County, Illinois, favoring the passage of certain legislation concerning swamp lands; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Connecticut, praying for a national commission of inquiry in reference to the alcoholic liquor trade; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Connecticut, praying for the submission to the States of a national prohibitory constitutional amendment; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, presented a petition of officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Arkansas, praying for the appointment of a board to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to crime, pauperism, etc., in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Arkansas, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional amendment to prohibit the sale and manufacture of alcoholic liquors; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. QUAY presented the petition of George W. Stare and 56 other citizens of Emigsville, York County, Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of the bill providing temporary aid for common schools; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of North Carolina, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HAMPTON presented a petition of gold and silver beaters of the United States, praying for relief in consideration of the deplorable condition of their trade, with a view to the adoption of a remedy by an increased duty on gold leaf, bronze, or Dutch metal, in leaf and powder; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SABIN, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 512) granting the right of way and other privileges to the Southern Street Railway and Improvement Company, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. There came to the Committee on Printing a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting copies of the accounts rendered to and settled with the First Comptroller of the Treasury, in pursuance of section 311 of the Revised Statutes. I am instructed by that committee to report back the communication, with the accompanying papers, with the recommendation that the accompanying papers be not printed. They are very voluminous, and we can see that no good purpose would be subserved by their printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 1404) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1405) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Oquawka, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1406) to amend an act to provide for the ascertainment of the market value of certain property in the city of Chicago, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey said property, approved May 27, 1886; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 1407) for the relief of Sallie Carroll; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 1408) to authorize the Independent Automatic Portable Gas Works of Washington, D. C., to construct gas works, lay down pipes, manufacture and sell gas, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1409) providing for the payment of the amounts due the employés in, and the contractors who furnished castings to, the United States Armory at Harper's Ferry, Va., from January 1, 1861, to April 19, 1861, inclusive; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLODGETT introduced a bill (S. 1410) for the relief of Mary Reed; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1411) for the relief of Margaret Engenock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 1412) granting increase of pension to Mary B. Hook; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 1413) to increase the pension of James Coey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1414) granting a pension to Sedgwick H. Gold; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 1415) for the removal of the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles L. Ballis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 1416) for the relief of Harriet A. Womack, administratrix; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 1417) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Ismon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1418) granting a pension to David Peterson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1419) for the relief of Samuel G. Smyth; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 1420) to extend the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, and section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1421) for the relief of A. F. and N. C. St. John; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1422) to provide for paying certain advances made to the United States by the States of Maryland and Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1423) authorizing the President to appoint William English an officer in the regular Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 1424) to amend the act of August 4, 1886, entitled "An act to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1425) to amend section 2931 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1426) for the relief of William H. Young; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 1428) to authorize the appointment of a hydrographer and assistant hydrographer of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 1429) granting a pension to Jane B. Dunn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 1431) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house at Boca Grande Pass, Charlotte Harbor, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1432) for the removal of all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon William S. Walker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 33) to provide for a settlement of the controversy between the United States and the State of Texas relative to the claim of said State to the territory known as Greer County, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

AMENDMENT TO URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Joseph G. Swank be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, there having been no adverse report in the case.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, it was Ordered, That the petition of Isabella W. Adduddell and the accompanying papers be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Caroline F. Ferguson be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 261) to amend the law concerning the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1213) to punish robbery, burglary, and larceny in the Indian Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, the morning business is closed, and the Chief Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar of General Orders.

The bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, was announced as first in order, and the Senate resumed its consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for a vote on the pending amendment. I trust Senators are ready to vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 11, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert "or any other person," so as to read:

Provided, That where the sums, or any part thereof, credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia have been collected by the United States from the citizens or inhabitants thereof, or any other person, either directly or by sale of property, such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. While I do not wish to occupy any time, I desire to state to the Senate again that this bill was carefully prepared by the First Comptroller of the Treasury some years ago. It has twice, I think, passed this body just as it stands. Every word has been carefully studied by the Committee on Finance in all its details. The amendments which were put on the bill the other day I do not think are necessary. Still they are amendments I object to merely because they are surplusage.

It seems to me that it would be better for the Senate to take the bill precisely as it stood, precisely as it has passed this body before, and as it was framed by the Comptroller who has to pass upon these accounts and to execute the law, and as it has been recommended by two or three Secretaries of the Treasury. Still I can not say anything against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont except that it is surplusage; it does not seem to be necessary.

This money is to be deposited with the States in trust, where it has been paid by private individuals, for the States to pay back to them the money. As a matter of course we are to assume that the State as a trustee would carefully perform that trust. It is a trust for the benefit of their own people, and we have no right to assume that any State in this Union would do an injustice to its citizens in the distribution of the money.

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask the Senator from Ohio if the amendment now under consideration does not simply express what we construe the bill to mean without the expression?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly. The amendment simply declares what is the actual result of the language used in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I would prefer that we adopt the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said that I would not delay the Senate on the matter; but I merely make the suggestion so as to avoid such amendments on a bill which has been so carefully prepared.

Mr. GRAY. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 11, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert "or any other person;" so as to read:

Provided, That where the sums, or any part thereof, credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, have been collected by the United States from the citizens or inhabitants thereof, or any other person, either directly or by sale of property, such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to say that, as a member of the Committee on Finance, I agreed to the bill in charge of the Senator from Ohio, and I agree with him that it accomplishes the purpose we desire; but as some Senators have a doubt whether it does or not, I voted the other day for this amendment, and I think it just as well to adopt it. Although I have no strong conviction that it is absolutely necessary, it will relieve the doubts of many, and it can do no harm and may do good.

Mr. BERRY. I think the Senator from Indiana is under the impression that the amendment now pending is one on which a vote was taken the other day. That is a mistake. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's amendment is not now in order, an amendment in the second degree being pending. The question recurs on the amendment just read at the desk.

Mr. HALE. I do not know who offered the amendment that has just been read, but I should be glad to have the Senator, whoever he may be, explain just what he intends as the effect of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the Chair understands.

Mr. HARRIS. No; the amendment was proposed, I think, by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who is not now present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If so, the Chair was misinformed by the clerks.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the obvious intent and purpose of the amendment is that the funds paid to the governors of the States or Territories, if originally collected from individuals and not paid by the States or Territories, shall be held in trust by the governor of the State for the benefit of the persons who actually paid it. That is the intent and purpose of the amendment, and I think it fully accomplishes its purpose.

Mr. HALE. But what particular force, let me ask the Senator from Tennessee, is there in the words of the amendment "or any other persons?" What "other persons" could be comprehended?

Mr. SHERMAN. It refers to persons owning property in but living outside of the State where the tax was collected.

Mr. SPOONER. Land in the State might be owned by a citizen of the State, or an inhabitant of the State, or a non-resident of the State. A non-resident may have paid the tax, and it should be refunded to him as well as to a citizen of the State.

Mr. HALE. Does not the bill as originally drawn cover that?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. We think it does, but others think not.

Mr. HARRIS. There is one class of persons, I will state to the Senator from Maine, that would not be included by the words "citizen or inhabitant." If the property of a non-resident of a State had been sold he would be a person not included by these other terms. The whole object of the measure is that the money, when paid to the governor of a State, shall be held in trust for the benefit of the persons who actually paid the tax.

Mr. HALE. I see the force of the last suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee. The words added by the amendment might be needed to include a non-resident.

Mr. CHANDLER. I inquire whether in case this amendment is adopted, it will be in order to move to strike out the whole proviso and insert other matter?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to move such an amendment at the proper time.

Mr. HALE. It will be in order after the proviso is perfected.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from New Hampshire asks a parliamentary question of the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask whether after the proviso has been perfected it will then be in order to move to strike it entirely out and insert a substitute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], if the Chair correctly remembers, was to strike out the proviso.

Mr. HARRIS. That motion was withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But under the rule the part proposed to be stricken out is always subject to amendment before that motion is put.

Mr. HARRIS. But the motion to strike out was withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware said he was willing to withdraw it. The Chair does not understand that it was withdrawn.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood him to withdraw it. However, the Senator is present and can say whether he withdrew his motion.

Mr. GRAY. I think I withdrew the motion for the purpose of allowing the proviso to be perfected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not necessary that the Senator from Delaware should withdraw his motion in order to allow the proviso to be perfected. The Chair therefore understood it was not withdrawn.

Mr. GRAY. I was content with the proviso after it had been amended by the suggestions of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], so that I was willing to withdraw the motion to strike it out.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to send to the Secretary's desk an amendment which I desire to propose, and have it read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend section 1 by inserting, in line 6, after the word "from," the words "the treasuries of."

Amend section 3 by striking out the proviso beginning in line 8 and inserting the following:

SEC. 4. All moneys assessed as a part of said direct tax and collected by the United States from individuals, either directly or by sale of property, shall be refunded to such individuals or their lawful representatives who may bring suit therefor in the Court of Claims.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to recommit the bill, if that motion is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it may be somewhat sacrilegious to venture to criticise the provisions of a bill which has hitherto passed the Senate or a bill which has been approved by two Secretaries of the Treasury. Nevertheless, bills are not immaculate, and they may possibly be improved by a careful consideration of them.

I find that the case is much worse than I supposed the other day when this subject was under consideration. Of course, I know very well that as there is something in the bill for every State in the Union, it would be very difficult to prevent its passage, if I desired to prevent it, which I do not; and it would be very difficult also to interpose any objections which would materially delay the passage of the bill, which I do not desire to do; but I do wish that the Senate should understand exactly what is proposed to be done.

I find that there has been collected of the direct tax imposed by the act of 1861 from the following States the sums I shall read:

|---|---|
| Alabama | $18,285.03 |
| Arkansas | 184,082.18 |
| Florida | 43,529.81 |
| Georgia | 106,963.17 |
| Louisiana | 268,515.12 |
| Mississippi | 101,717.04 |
| North Carolina | 336,194.45 |
| South Carolina | 377,961.30 |
| Tennessee | 387,734.31 |
| Texas | 130,038.06 |
| Virginia | 515,569.72 |
| Making the sum of | 2,520,560.19 |

which the Government of the United States, through the direct-tax commissioners, has taken directly from individuals, either by forcing them to pay it in money, or by selling their real estate in order to compel its payment. This sum of money has been exacted from private citizens through the agency of Federal officials collecting the money directly and without the intervention of the State in any way or manner.

I submit that while it is just and right, in order to equalize the burdens of this direct tax, to release to the States the sums which they have failed to pay, and to refund to the treasuries of the States the moneys which were taken from those treasuries and paid into the United States Treasury, it is not wise or expedient to pay into those treasuries of the States moneys which never came from them, but which the Government of the United States exacted from individuals.

I take occasion to warn the Senate that this bill will prove a Pandora's box; that if it passes and this money is paid over to the States, and the individuals to whom it belongs go to the States and make demand for it and do not succeed in getting satisfaction, they will come to Washington, to the National Government, to the Congress of the United States, and demand that the governmental organization which took the money from them and has now declared a trust in their favor for that money shall pay it to them, and not send them to the States to collect it.

Only one idea more, Mr. President, and that is this, that all the evidence upon which these individuals will be able to collect this $2,500,000 is on file in the Treasury Department in Washington. I undertake to say that there is not within the States one particle of evidence, one single record of any kind whatever to show the individuals in those States what money they are entitled to receive back from the Government as a part of the direct tax. It is all here in national custody. The books and accounts of the direct-tax commissioners were brought to Washington; they are now at the Treasury Department; and yet it is proposed to send these individuals to South Carolina, to Virginia, to Arkansas, to Tennessee, and to seven other States to make demand for this money from their State treasuries, and to require them to come back again from those States to the Treasury Department to get the evidence upon which their claim is based, and then to take it to the States and get their money, if that evidence is satisfactory to the State authorities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I hope the motion to recommit the bill will prevail; and I should be glad, if it is recommitted, that the committee would take into consideration the propriety of appropriating this amount of money to the States which paid it for the improvement of the rivers and harbors in those States.

I do not believe that we have the right to take money out of the public Treasury and pay it back to the States or to the individuals who paid the tax. Such was the doctrine held in 1836. Not a single Senator at that time on the floor of the Senate believed that without a constitutional amendment we could make such an appropriation of the public money; and hence the Congress of that day passed an act depositing with the States the surplus revenue at that time, because they did not believe there was power to distribute it among the States.

I concur in what the Senator from New Hampshire has said, that if this money is given to the States in trust for the parties who paid it, it will lead to great trouble in all the States. In my own State the tax was collected by Federal authority; not a dollar of it was paid by the State. It was collected by the collector of internal revenue under Federal assessments. The Federal assessments were doubtless made up from our local assessments, but the tax was levied by Federal machinery, the records of which are now in the Treasury Department, and it was collected by the collector of internal revenue. Now, if you send that money back to be given to the individuals who paid it, it will lead to complications in my State as well as in every State which paid the tax.

The reason why my State did not pay the tax at that time was because it had no money on hand, and we had a considerable war debt which we had created for the relief of persons who were drafted into the service and did not want to go, and for bounties to soldiers who did want to go. Therefore we did not have any money in the State treasury at the time, and we did not see proper to issue bonds to raise the money, so we let the Federal machinery collect this tax.

I hope if the bill is recommitted to the committee, they will take into deliberate consideration the question as to whether we have the right to appropriate money out of the public Treasury for any such purpose. It is not the money which was paid by the individuals. That was paid and expended twenty years ago. It is not the money held in reserve in the Treasury for the persons who paid it, but it is proposed to take out money paid by the whole people, paid by men who were not the holders of real estate, and take that money paid into the Treasury by everybody and give it back for the benefit of the persons who were the holders of real estate.

I hope that the bill will be recommitted and that the matter will be properly considered before it is brought to a final vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, Senators seem to forget the main object of this bill. The direct tax was levied at the beginning of the war. Under the Constitution it was apportioned among the States according to the population, and each State was charged with its proper apportionment according to representation. The amount stands as a debt against the State. Most of the States, under the law of Congress, assumed the payment of the debt without having the tax collected from the people. They paid it and were allowed a discount of 15 per cent. Now there is a controversy and a continual source of irritation between the several States and the National Government in regard to this tax. Whenever any money in the course of business inures to the benefit of a State, it is not paid to the State, but it is placed to the credit of this charge. This is a source of irritation. Perhaps the money is due to an individual rather than the State, the State being a mere trustee. These complicated accounts between the State and the General Government have been the source of infinite antagonism and trouble.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him in that connection——

Mr. SHERMAN. I have but five minutes, but I will answer the question. What is it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that this tax was on the States. I do not know of any provision of the Constitution that allows the Federal Government to assess a tax on a State. It was a direct tax upon the holders of real estate, apportioned among the States according to the population of each State.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not say anything to the contrary. I simply said that this tax was apportioned among the States, to use the language of the Constitution, according to representation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator object to my asking a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator said that it became a debt of the State when it was apportioned.

Mr. SHERMAN. I again repeat that this law contained a provision that each State might assume its proportion, that is, the proportion allotted to it by the Constitution, on certain terms which allowed the State a rebate of 15 per cent., and some States did assume it under that law—nearly all the loyal States, as they were then called, did assume it; but the whole amount was charged against the people of the several States where it was not thus assumed by the States, and this stands on the books as a disturbing element, as a disturbing controversy, interfering with the friendly relations between the States and the United States.

It has been the desire, I believe, of every one connected with the Treasury Department since that time to get rid of these accounts, and the only way in which it can be done is to refund to the States the amount they had actually paid, not including the 15 per cent., give to those States the money which they had paid confessedly out of the treasuries of the several States that paid it, and to give to the States whose citizens had been called upon to contribute in the ordinary course of the collection of taxes under the direct-tax-commissioners act the money collected from their people, whether real-estate owners or not.

The only point in controversy between the Senator from New Hampshire and myself is this: Shall we allow those States whose citizens have paid a portion of this tax to assume the control, the custody, and the management and disbursement of this money? The committee thought, in the first place, that there is no obligation on the part of the United States to pay back this money to any one. Nobody has contended that the United States is indebted either to these States or to the citizens who paid the tax; it is simply a voluntary movement on the part of the United States to pay back this money out of the Treasury, to place that which has been paid by the States themselves in the treasuries of the States, and to pay to the States whose citizens have contributed toward this direct tax the amount that they have paid, leaving it to the States to say whether or not this payment to the State whose citizens have paid a portion of the money creates a trust or an obligation which they will be bound to provide for and see to the distribution of.

Now, sir, to require the United States to hold this money in its Treasury until all this trust is settled by the United States would be simply to defeat the object of this bill, which is intended to be a peace-offering to settle controversy in regard to this money; and therefore the money paid by these citizens is proposed to be paid back to the States, with the expectation that each State will do justly and honestly and properly by its citizens.

There is no obligation against the Government or against a State to pay back to the particular individual the tax paid by him—not the slightest legal obligation, scarcely a moral obligation; but that is a question for the State to determine. Some of its citizens have paid this tax and some have not. To the extent that that creates an obligation on the State in receiving this money to its citizens, it is in the nature of a trust or duty; no obligation, however, because the money was legally paid and each citizen only paid his share of the tax levied under the act of the United States through the direct-tax commissioners.

I think, therefore, that this proposition, which has been submitted by several Administrations, to close these Treasury accounts, leaving to each State the proper application of this money, ought to be adopted. As a matter of course, where the State has paid the money it will be reimbursed in gross and the fund will go into the treasury of the State, being paid to the governor or proper executive officer of the State. Where the tax was paid by individuals, then it is for the State itself to determine whether it will undertake to do equal and exact justice by paying back to each individual the amount so paid.

As to the records spoken of, as a matter of course these are public records, just as public to the people of any State as they are to the people of the United States, for they are all the same thing. To speak of the records of the United States as being Government records, as being beyond the reach of any State or the power of any State to get them in order to carry out its equitable obligation, is a misnomer. The governor of any State may go to any office in the United States, any Government office anywhere, and on a proper showing demand and receive a copy of these papers. Indeed they are all in print; they are all the reports of the direct-tax commissioners. These are public records, open and accessible to every citizen of the United States or every citizen of the Southern States who paid this money. There is no difficulty in getting at the proof. The only question is whether we shall keep this account open on the Treasury books until the last claimant shall have come forward and demanded his part of it, and undertake, ourselves, through our organization, to deal out justice between the individuals of these several States.

It seems to me that is a task imposed on the Treasury Department as difficult and much more difficult even than to collect the tax in the first place. It was a very difficult and expensive operation. We can not do it.

Then, besides, the great body of these people are dead; their estates have been settled. How will you get at it, and what will you do with this money that has been collected from the people of these States?

It will be seen that if there is any surplus after the States have provided for those who are living, the balance should go to the people of each State, because they have a greater claim upon it than the whole people of the United States. Therefore this distribution which has been wisely made and proposed in order to settle these accounts and distribute this money, it seems to me, is as fair as it can be made.

As a matter of course, if the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire is adopted and the bill recommitted, the Committee on Finance will regard it as an instruction to provide that the United States shall become the trustee for the payment of money that it does not owe, that it should undertake to deal out all these little sums of money, from 5 cents to $5 or $50, to the people of the different States, and then without any provision being made for the disposition of the balance, which can not be called for, because twenty-five years have swept away a whole generation, and in undertaking to carry out this trust we shall be called upon to deal with the dead, the buried, their children and widows, a task that is utterly impossible for the United States to undertake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator has not removed the difficulty in my mind. I will take for illustration the State of Pennsylvania, which paid its whole quota, say a million and a half of dollars, to the General Government, the government of the State assuming the obligation in behalf of its citizens. That sum was collected by general taxation, as a matter of course. It is a simple transaction, so far as Pennsylvania is concerned, to give back the million and a half. In that way the account with Pennsylvania is satisfactorily closed.

But suppose Pennsylvania were in this condition: that her people were in insurrection, that she had no State government that we could treat with, and we, by reaching certain of her citizens individually, had collected $200,000 of the money? The proposition of the Senator is, in a case like that, to begin by throwing a doubt upon the legal obligation—or denying in toto the obligation—to repay anybody anything, and saying that the whole thing is very difficult to deal with, and proceed to put it off on somebody else. He would say, "Very well; give Pennsylvania the $200,000, but with the intimation that she need not try to pay any individual unless she chooses." If she did not choose the result would be that a mere fraction of the people of Pennsylvania would have paid $200,000 toward a State obligation of $1,500,000, and would be without remedy, though the United States had professed its desire to repay them.

It seems to me in a case like that, we having all the evidence, having the account here, the names and sums all upon our books, the proper thing would be, if we are going to take up the equitable obligation, to say to individual tax-payers, "You are persons whom we caught when we could not find the State; we will pay you directly from our own books here if you present your claim within six years, and if you do not we will then give the balance left over to your State." That is the safe and equitable way. The Senator acknowledges the difficulty of settling these accounts, but he turns the trust over to the States with the intimation that they need not pay anybody anything, and though they have not a page of accounts to govern them in paying.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I wish to say particularly to my friend from Delaware that the question presented by this bill is not that of donating a surplus in the Treasury to States or people. In 1861 an act was passed imposing a tax of $20,000,000 upon the real estate of the citizens of the various States and Territories of the United States. There remains unpaid of that tax by the people of the several States and Territories the sum of $2,646,314.42. That act authorized the various States to assume the payment of this tax, and gave to the State that did assume and pay it a discount of 15 per cent. for such payment.

Now, I would ask my friend from Delaware what he proposes? Most of the States assumed and paid the entire amount of the tax imposed, but a portion of them failed to assume it, and their citizens were compelled to pay a given amount of the tax so imposed. But a balance remains due and unpaid of two million six hundred and odd thousand dollars, as I stated a moment since. Does the Senator from Delaware propose that we shall proceed now, with an overflowing Treasury, to compel the payment of that $2,646,314; or does he propose that it shall be remitted, notwithstanding the fact that other States have paid the assessment in full?

One or the other of these alternatives, it seems to me, the Senator is brought to. He must either compel the payment of the balance remaining unpaid and due, or, if it be remitted, he must permit the State, at least, to be the trustee for those who paid. This bill is simply in effect a repeal of the law that imposed this tax that has been partially but not completely executed. It remits the unpaid tax, and it refunds to the States who paid the amount they so paid under that act, and proposes, through the several States and Territories, to return the money received to the citizens where the citizens have paid it.

In respect to my own State, the assessment amounted to six hundred and sixty-nine thousand and some odd dollars. The citizens of that State have been compelled to pay and have paid $392,904.48, leaving a balance of that assessment of $277,493.52. This bill proposes to remit that unpaid balance, to pay into the hands of the governor of the State the amount already paid, and to give it to him in trust for the benefit of the citizens who were compelled to pay and who did pay it. That is all of it. It is a repeal of the act imposing this tax, refunding to the States and refunding to the people who have partially paid the tax and relinquishing the balance to the States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I suppose the Senator from Tennessee is aware that there is no power in the General Government to collect any apportionment of that tax which has not been paid. There is a limitation, I understand, in the act itself. Those unpaid balances were in the Southern States, and I say to the Senator from Tennessee that the assessment was made on the property in those States, because the Constitution of the United States requires that all direct taxes, as well as other taxes, shall be apportioned equally among the people.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Only for a moment. I wish to inform the Senator from Delaware that it is being collected constantly. Whenever any money is due to the State of Delaware, for instance, it is charged on this account, and that is one of the troubles involved in this matter. The law requires that now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator from Ohio if he does not know that the Supreme Court of the United States, on this very question, has held that the General Government had no right to set up that tax against any claim which a State had against the General Government, for the reason that there was no tax levied upon the State, but upon individuals in the State? The Supreme Court has so held.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that, but still the act of Congress requires to be done just what I say.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That may be, for I am aware that it has been done by the Treasury officials. The valid claims of those States that were in default in the payment of the tax have been set off against this tax, and valid claims which they had against the Treasury have been refused payment on this account. But that question has been brought to the attention of the Supreme Court, and that court has decided that it can not be done. So, then, to the Senator from Tennessee I say, first, there is no tax against the Southern States, because under the operation of the law no such tax can be to-day collected in those States that did not pay, and the Federal Government has to-day no power to collect it under the law of 1861.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to say to him that in every instance where, by act of Congress or by decision of the accounting officers of the Treasury, there is an amount of money due to any one of the States of this Union, no matter on what account, and there remains a balance of this tax unpaid by that State or its citizens, the Treasury has held and holds to-day that the claim of the State should be set off against the amount of the tax, and no money is paid to any of the States upon any such allowance of a claim.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am aware that that has been the practice of the Treasury officials; but that very question has been tried in the Supreme Court, and that court, the highest court in the land, has decided the question, and if the Treasury officers to-day are pursuing that practice towards the Southern States they are doing it in violation of law and contrary to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

So, then, while there may be a nominal relinquishment by this bill of taxes to the States that were in default, there is in fact no remission of any tax, because under the operation of the act of 1861 itself the Government has now no right to collect it. Every Southern State that has a claim against the Treasury of the United States may resist, and successfully resist by appeal to the courts, any attempt to set off the assessment of 1861 against it.

Now, Mr. President, I for one would be glad, if there is a disposition to take this money out of the Treasury and divide it among the States, that it should be done under some power which Congress has. Make appropriations of these amounts respectively to the States for purposes of improvement of rivers and harbors, if you please——

Mr. HARRIS. I would be glad to ask the Senator if he proposes to compel the collection of the balances that stand against the land of the people of these States?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not propose it. I prefer to let it remain in the Treasury, where it is.

Mr. HARRIS. Does not the Senator know that the Constitution requires that this tax shall be equally apportioned, and does the Senator intend to acquiesce in this unequal adjustment of the question, where the majority of the States have paid every dollar of the taxation, and where the minority of them have fallen short to the extent of $2,600,000?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I would say that, in my opinion, in 1861, when that tax was levied, there was not the most distant idea that there would be any portion of the money collected unless there was an adjustment in a very short time of the difficulties existing between the Southern States and the Northern States. It is true the apportionment was made on the Southern States as on others at that time, because the Constitution required that all taxation should be equal. That being the expectation at that time, as I have no question it was, I should think it not at all inequitable now that the Government, if it had the power to remit that taxation, should do so, because it was not expected to be paid. Everybody knows the condition of affairs in the country at that time.

But my especial objection to the proposed measure is that, in my opinion, there is no constitutional warrant for taking the money paid by the people into the public Treasury and using it for distribution among the several States of this Union or among the people of the several States of this Union. It is, in fact, a new policy started in this country.

In 1836 this very question was discussed, not in this Chamber at that time, but in the old Senate Chamber—thoroughly discussed. Mr. Calhoun expressed himself on that question. General Jackson, in his messages of 1829 and 1830, called the attention of Congress to the necessity of providing some mode to get clear of the surplus, but suggested that there must be a constitutional amendment. Mr. Calhoun introduced a bill to provide for an amendment to the Constitution to meet the contingency; but under the tariff compromise of 1832 it became apparent that the revenue would be cut down, so that there would probably be no surplus, and consequently Mr. Calhoun's bill was not acted upon. Finally——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Delaware has expired.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to finish my sentence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will proceed, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAULSBURY. After full discussion Congress came to the conclusion that there was no constitutional warrant for a distribution among the States, but adopted the plan of a deposit with the States on certificate to be issued by the State governments to return the money when called for. Those certificates were made, on the motion of Mr. Tallmadge, of New York, to be enforced by the Treasury without recourse to Congress whenever the money should be needed by the United States. These certificates are in the Treasury to-day, and if the Secretary of the Treasury thought proper, thought there was a pressure on the Treasury, he could realize on them. Of course he will never do it. Nobody expects him to do it; nobody wants him to do it. That was the condition of affairs in 1836, but we have gone away from that. The Constitution has not the same respect to-day in the Senate of the United States that it had at that time. Whenever an appeal is made for an appropriation of money, the Constitution is obliterated to the extent of the amount of the appropriation of money.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio, who has charge of this bill, just as he took his seat adverted to certain conditions which to me disclose the weakness of the committee's bill. In speaking of the claimants, those representing the property taken by the Government to secure the collection of this tax, he said that naturally many of them had disappeared, they had died, they had removed, the tooth of time had eaten them away; and the Senator said that in such case, after the State had been made a trustee of the fund returned to it by the general Treasury, after the State had paid the claims of those living, of those existing and presenting their claims to the State authorities, the balance should go to the States.

I ask why? Here was an act levying a tax directly upon the property of the citizens. As a matter of convenience it was declared that the States might assume it, and most of them did assume it, and as has been said by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] there is no difficulty in dealing with such a case. Another State, for one reason or another, declines and refuses to assume it either in whole or in part, and the Government sets its machinery at work to collect the tax or a portion of it of A, B, C, and D, has got their money in the Treasury and holds it now, and the theory of the bill is that, whatever the legal obligation, restoration should be made.

Mr. President, I fail to see why the State which declined or refused to assume this tax as a State and allowed its citizens to suffer, should be put in the same attitude here as the State that did assume and pay the tax from its treasury and relieve its citizens. There is no reason, if there is an overplus after these private claims have been paid, why the State treasury should be increased one dollar from the National Government; and, as I have said, that discloses the fatal weakness of the bill.

Now, sir, to me it is plain and clear that in the cases where the States assumed the collection of the tax and depleted their treasuries to that extent, the Government should deal with them and should restore the money actually or in accounts; but in cases where there is a claim, a good claim, by the individual for property that has been taken, I deny the right; I deny that it is reputable for this Government to undertake to discharge itself of its obligation by setting up statehood as a trusteeship. The Government ought to deal directly with the individual.

Pass this bill and the amount going to each State goes at once to its governor; but can any citizen of that State support his claim against that State over which that governor presides, without legislation on the part of the State prescribing the processes and giving limitations and making it difficult perhaps to secure an allowance? In the mean time the money has gone; and when at last it is seen that one-half of all these claims, one-half of all these payments either by money or land taken have been destroyed by time, then why should the State that declined to assume this tax receive the benefit of the fund and retain it in its treasury or expend it for other purposes? No, sir; the place for the balance is not in the State treasury to be expended for other purposes, but is in the United States Treasury, until proper personal application is made from the parties who have suffered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope not; let us get through with this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The question being put, it was declared that the negative appeared to prevail.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I shall insist to the point of asking for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Virginia to withdraw that motion for a little while, say half an hour.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I had the floor when I made the motion, and it is not a debatable motion, so I understand; but I will say that I did understand the Senate of the United States to agree yesterday that there should be, after 1 o'clock to-day, an executive session. The motion was made to postpone the consideration of executive business until Monday and it was beaten.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Virginia that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask pardon of the Chair while I make this statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must suggest that the motion is not debatable, and the Senator can proceed only by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the Senator from Virginia proceeding to debate his motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I only ask for the yeas and nays on this motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks for the yeas and nays on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business. Is the demand sustained by one-fifth of the Senators present?

The question being put on seconding the call for the yeas and nays, it was declared that a sufficient number were apparently not up.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish the Chair would count and see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will count.

A count was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A sufficient number rising, the yeas and nays are ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). On this motion I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. Has the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has not voted.

Mr. BERRY. If at liberty, I would vote "yea;" but I am paired with him.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. WALTHALL. Has a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] been announced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that no pair with the Senator from Alabama has been announced.

Mr. WALTHALL. I wish to state that I have a note from him saying that he is confined at home by illness.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I make the point that there is no pair to be announced after the roll-call by the Secretary, and my friend from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] had already announced pairs when the affirmative vote was taken. I think that that was not in order, and certainly no pair made by my friend can now be in order after the roll-call.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—26.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Now, Mr. President, I ask the Chair to say whether the pair announced after the affirmative vote by the Senator from Illinois was in order?

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I see no ground of public policy why this bill should be passed by the Senate. The Supreme Court has decided in the case of the United States vs. Louisiana:

That act imposed an annual direct tax of twenty millions "upon the United States," and apportioned it to the several States of the Union. It directed that the tax should "be assessed and laid on the value of all lands and lots of ground, with their improvements and dwelling-houses." It was assessed and laid upon the real property of private individuals in the States. Public property of the States and of the United States was exempt from the tax. * * * The provisions of the act are inconsistent with any theory of the obligation of the States to pay the sums levied.

The court in its opinion further declares:

The liability was upon the individual land-owners within her limits.

That the State had no obligation, never paid any money by virtue of this law. She was permitted to assume it, and did assume it. The tax when paid by individuals was paid under the law, and the law exhausted itself in two years by its own limitation. The United States bought the property sold under the law, or individuals bought it. The citizens of the State did not buy it; as a general rule speculators bought it. I have here a list of the names of purchasers, and in the large majority of instances they were men buying a tax title on speculation. What became of it? They either compromised with the owners or sold the property under the tax title; and the United States, where it acquired valid title, still has the title to the property bought at the direct-tax sales in all cases where it has neither been released nor redeemed.

Now, there is no ground whatever in anything that has been alleged for the passage of this bill. The Senator from Tennessee says, shall this tax be enforced? The answer is, there is no law to enforce it. The law exhausted itself in two years after its passage. The lien on property was limited to two years. It created no liability on individuals thereafter and provided no means for enforcing it, and it never had any obligation on the States. We have been dealing with this question upon fictitious and imaginary grounds which ought not to have been stated in the Senate. There never was an obligation on the States under the law. As the Supreme Court states, it could not be imposed on States. In the apportionment of direct taxes under the Constitution, to which the Senator from Tennessee refers, there is no obligation upon the States. The apportionment is between the States according to population, meaning, of course, that the tax rests upon the people, and is a direct tax on them by the United States, apportioned between them to secure equality.

Now, upon what ground of public policy, because people in the insurrectionary States failed to pay their portion of the tax which was required by the excise laws during the war, could the matter now be reopened? Why should that be a ground for now collecting from these States this great sum? Why, you should refund the whole taxation paid by the Northern people during that period of time, if the reasons on which this bill is founded are correct.

If such a law be passed as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, because the States are charged with this money on the books of the Treasury Department, and in the settlements between the States heretofore sums of money have been withheld belonging to the States, it is easier to correct that method of keeping the books of the Treasury Department than it is to tax the people of this country fifteen or twenty million dollars to be refunded to the tax-payers of the last generation. There is nothing in that argument, and it remains true that this law never was an obligation on the States, but it was a voluntary assumption by them; and the law executed and exhausted itself within the two years to which its force and effect was limited by its provisions. Then upon what ground of public policy shall we restore to the tax-payers, or the people, or the State, the extra amount of taxation paid by them because of the failure of the Southern States to pay their proportion in the prosecution of the war?

That is a proposition utterly untenable and impracticable, and yet that is the proposition upon which this bill is based, for the other ground stated is entirely unreal.

You can not equalize the burdens of the war period. Why attempt it? It is nothing but a scheme to pay back the money imposed for the prosecution of the war to the extent of this direct tax, and why should that money be returned any more than any other money paid by the people of the Northern States in excess of their proportion during the time when the war was flagrant and it was impossible for the people of the Southern States to have contributed their portion to the prosecution of the war, which was an obligation upon them equally with the others under the Constitution as it is now interpreted and as it was settled by the war?

I will add to my remarks, without troubling the Senate to read them, some extracts from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States vs. Louisiana, decided at the October term, 1887. While I do not acknowledge that the Supreme Court has a right to say to Congress what it shall or shall not do, yet it is a correct interpretation of the law manifestly, and, therefore, is of force in a consideration of this direct-tax law and the extent of its present obligation. The law has expired by its own terms, and nothing remains but the question whether the money collected under it should be returned to the people who paid it, and for this there is no reason more than for any other tax collected during the war.

OPINION OF SUPREME COURT.

Nor do we regard the unpaid portion of the direct tax laid by the act of Congress of August 5, 1861, which was apportioned to Louisiana, as constituting any debt to the United States by the State in her political and corporate character, which can be set off against her demands. (12 Stat., 292, chap. 45.) That act imposed an annual direct tax of twenty millions "upon the United States," and apportioned it to the several States of the Union. It directed that the tax should "be assessed and laid on the value of all lands and lots of ground, with their improvements and dwelling houses." (Sec. 13.) It was assessed and laid upon the real property of private individuals in the States. Public property of the States and of the United States was exempted from the tax. Its apportionment was merely a designation of the amount which was to be levied upon and collected from this property of individuals in the several States, respectively. The provisions of the act are inconsistent with any theory of the obligation of the States to pay the sums levied. It provides for the appointment of officers to assess the property to the different holders, and to collect the tax, and directs with minute detail the proceedings to be taken to enforce the collection, either by a distraint and sale of the personal property of the owners, or, that failing, by a sale of the real property taxed. It allows, it is true, the different States to assume the amounts apportioned to them, respectively, and to collect the same in their own way by their own officers. Many of the States did thus assume the amounts, and in such cases it may well be considered that for the sums assumed they became debtors to the United States, and, so far as any portion of those sums has not been paid, that they still remain debtors. But, unless such assumption was had, no liability attached to any State in her political and corporate character. The liability was upon the individual land-owners within her limits. The act declares that the amount of the taxes assessed "shall be and remain a lien upon all lands and other real estate of the individuals who may be assessed for the same during two years after the time it shall annually become due and payable." (Sec. 33.) Louisiana never assumed the payment of taxes apportioned to her, or of any portion of them. She allowed the Government to proceed by its officers to collect the tax from the property-holders. The amount apportioned to her was $$$385,886.67; the amount collected from the owners of land was $$$314,500.84; leaving only a balance of $$$71,385.83. It is not for us to suggest in what way this balance may be collected. After the war, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to suspend the collection of the tax in any of the States previously declared in insurrection, until January, 1868, and subsequently this authority was extended to January, 1869. (14 Stat., 331, sec. 14; 15 Stats., 260, chap. 69.) The Secretary acted upon this authority, and suspended the collection. It is stated that, since 1869, no attempts have been made by the executive department to enforce its collection in those States. Be that as it may, it is enough for the disposition of the present case that the unpaid balance of the tax apportioned to Louisiana constitutes no debt on the part of the State in her political and corporate character to the United States.

§ Joint resolution February 25, 1867, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer $208,479.65 to the amount originally appropriated to Virginia to the State of West Virginia.

‖ Overpaid.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 29, 1884.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired, under the rule.

Mr. CALL. I will not trespass further on the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Remarks having intervened, I presume it is now in order, under the rule, to again move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I am informed that he would vote "nay."

While on the floor I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. PASCO] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAMPTON. I should like to ask whether the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] has voted?

Mr. CAMERON. I did vote.

Mr. HAMPTON. I thought the Senator was paired with my colleague [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. CAMERON. I have no recollection of having paired with him on this question. I did pair with him on party questions. If that pair applies to this motion, I shall withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] is paired with the other Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is generally, as I understand, paired with the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST]. I do not see either of them here.

Mr. PADDOCK. There was that understanding between the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from California; I have knowledge of that fact.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Illinois, as he made his statement very generally, is the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] paired with the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST]? Otherwise those votes stand off. I should like the Senator to state explicitly.

Mr. CULLOM. I have only announced what I have understood to be the case, that when one of those Senators is absent the other usually declines to vote, if it is a party question. In this case neither of these gentlemen is present so far as I know. I simply announce it as a fact to go into the RECORD, without affecting the vote.

Mr. BERRY. As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has voted, I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL. I have to say that yesterday the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and myself were paired for that day.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—26.

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VANCE. I gave notice yesterday that I should ask the consent of the Senate this morning, during the morning hour, to submit some remarks to the Senate on the resolutions of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. I believe this would be an acceptable time to be heard on that question; and if so, I ask that the pending order be laid aside for the purpose of my proceeding with my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the pending order be dispensed with, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SHERMAN. The pending bill retaining its place on the Calendar, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolutions offered by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The bill (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. HALE, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes;" in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolutions submitted by Mr. BROWN January 4, 1888, relative to internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. VANCE Mr. President, the issue has at last been made up for the American people. It has been tendered by the President of the United States as the accredited head of the Democratic party. I have long desired to see it; and to see it in such a shape as could not be evaded. The contest must now be fought out squarely and the question decided unequivocally on its merits. That question is, shall taxation be enforced for the support of the Government or for the enrichment of individuals? Shall money be collected from the people for public purposes or for private use?

In the situation in which we find ourselves there can be invented no respectable hypothesis which shall present any other phase of the question. The revenues of the Government are largely in excess of its expenditures, therefore those who oppose a reduction of the revenues openly declare that the power of taxation is given to the government of a free people for the purpose of putting money in the pockets of all such as can secure the necessary legislation, at the expense of all such as can not help themselves; and those who reluctantly admit the necessity of reduction propose to do so upon those objects of taxation which yield pure revenue and retain it on those which for the most part yield private wealth. The difference is only in degree; the principle is the same, that A shall be taxed to support B, and A in turn must look for recompense to the generosity of B and the unlimited mercy of God.

In vain is the effort to fix the responsibility for this surplus on a Democratic administration, as was attempted by the Senator from Ohio. The truth will not be put down, that the imposition of war taxes by the Republican party in times of peace, not for the needs of the Government, but for the greed of the protected classes, has brought this surplus into the Treasury; and it is asking too much of the business common sense of the country to expect people to believe it was the President's duty, under a doubtful authority, to pay a premium of 25 to 30 per cent. on the undue public debt to avoid all occasion for reducing taxation and lessening manufacturers' profits. That would have been neither wise nor honest to the people. Now there can be no dodging, and the thing to be done is to reduce this taxation until there shall be nothing left in the Treasury beyond the requirements of the Government. Nearly all agree that this must be done, but the question is, where shall we begin? For the most part the propositions of the Democratic members of this body, following the lead of the President, are to begin and end with the tariff. The Republicans, on the other hand, propose to begin by reducing in part internal-revenue taxes, and by adding to the free-list those things coming from abroad which can not be produced in this country and which do not compete with our own manufacturers. I prefer to begin with both the internal revenue and the tariff on the necessaries of life. So far as they affect my people there is cause of complaint against each as to the tax itself, but far more as to the method of collection, against the revenue taxes. So great offense has this system given to the people of North Carolina that they have again and again, through their accredited political agencies, demanded its total repeal. In vindication of the reasonableness of that expression of their will, I propose before dealing with the more universal evil of the present tariff, to give some of the grounds on which their demand is based.

It will be remembered that under the old Articles of Confederation, which preceded the Constitution, all taxation for the support of the Government was to be levied and collected by the States, in such manner and upon such objects as they saw fit. The apportionment of these taxes among the States was made the duty of Congress by the eighth article; and that was all Congress had to do with taxation, except that the States were forbidden to enforce any customs duties which might interfere with any treaty made with foreign powers. I believe it is admitted that the defective arrangement for securing sufficient revenue was the main cause for the effort "to form a more perfect union," which resulted in the Constitution, and the chief of these defects was the absence of the power to levy customs duties. When this power was conferred by the Constitution and surrendered by the States it was objected by many at the time that by granting to Congress the right to levy direct and excise taxes also, the States would be left helpless as being excluded from the usual sources of revenue. Some of the ablest papers of Mr. Hamilton in the Federalist were devoted to combating this idea, and to showing that whilst it was absolutely necessary that Congress should have all taxing power to enable the common Government to avail itself in cases of emergency of the utmost resources of the country, yet in regard to everything but customs duties the power of the States to levy and collect taxes was coexistent and coequal with that of the Government. He admitted, indeed, that whilst there was no repugnancy in the coequal power, there might possibly be in its exercise. That is, one government might tax a given article to an extent that would render it "inexpedient" for the other to tax it at all. This, of course, would enable the General Government to practically deprive the States of revenue from any objects of taxation it might see proper to tax to such extent.

To quiet all such apprehensions Mr. Hamilton declared that "we must for a long time depend for the means of revenue chiefly on such [customs] duties. The genius of the people will illy brook the inquisitive and peremptory spirit of excise laws." On all sides similar assurances were given by the advocates of the Constitution; and it appears to have been conceded that, as well because of the unpopularity of such a system as because of its restriction of the field of taxation by the States, the General Government would rely mainly on customs duties as the source of its revenues, and would resort to excise duties and direct taxation only in extraordinary emergencies. Accordingly, such has been the course of taxation in our history. The first excise taxes were levied in 1791, to meet the war debt of the struggle for independence. Before 1805 the necessity for their continuance had ceased, and Mr. Jefferson, in his second inaugural address, said:

> The suppression of unnecessary offices, of useless establishments and expenses, enabled us to discontinue our internal taxes. These, covering our land with officers and opening our doors to their intrusions, had already begun that process of domiciliary vexation which, once entered, is scarcely to be restrained from reaching successively every article of produce and property.

In order to meet the extraordinary expenses of the war of 1812–'15 excise taxes were again resorted to, which were again reduced, and repealed, finally, within a few years after the close of the war which occasioned them. From that time until 1862, a period of more than forty years, no excise taxes were levied. Then was begun that enormous system of tariff and internal taxation which has had no parallel in all modern history, which drew from the people within ten years the incredible sum of $3,739,136,870, or an average of $374,000,000 per annum. And though we are now in the twenty-third year since the war closed, and the necessity for extraordinary taxation which closed with it, yet no part of the tariff taxes have been reduced to any considerable degree, but, on the contrary, many have been increased; and while many items have been relieved from internal taxation, the chief objects, spirits and tobacco, have been retained, and the proceeds of income therefrom are almost equal to the average of war times!

Now why should not this tax be repealed? The emergency which called it into existence has long since passed away. It is a violation of the popular understanding that excise taxes shall be resorted to only in emergencies, to say, as the Senator from Alabama said, that the war debt still remains, in part, and therefore the tax must remain. At that rate it never could be repealed during this generation. The test is not, have we had a war, or any other great emergency? but do we need to resort to this odious system any longer? The answer furnished by the Treasury Department is that we do not. In round numbers, and approximately, the surplus coming into the Treasury is just about equal to the receipts from internal taxation. So that if those taxes were abolished to-morrow not another dollar would be required to replace them for the ordinary purposes of the Government.

The increase in population would naturally bring increase of consumption, and, of course, of revenue also. It is not necessary that we should at any time keep a surplus in the Treasury, however slight. Unless there be an abnormal increase of our expenditures, the growth of population and wealth will always keep our receipts ahead of them.

The dislike to these taxes evinced by Hamilton, Madison, Jefferson, and the other great fathers was not an ungrounded prejudice. They gave voice to the public sentiment then, and the same voice seeks to be heard to-day, and, sooner or later, will be heard. I beg to assure Senators that there is more in these complaints than the money which is collected. It involves other and far more important results, much as that money is to a poor people. It involves the right of a man to do what he may please with his own within the bounds of the law of liberty. It involves the right of a farmer to sell the lawful products of his lawful labor to any purchaser who may offer him the highest price. It involves the right of the husbandman to utilize the fruit of his orchards which is rotting upon the ground. It involves the still more momentous question whether the poor man's cabin be indeed his castle, protected from intrusion by organic law and sacred tradition, or whether it may be broken open and ransacked at any hour of the day or night by a petty official dressed in a little brief authority in search of tribute for an overflowing Treasury. It involves the question of a large portion of the people of this country being subjected to that "domiciliary vexation" mentioned by Jefferson, the "inquisitive and peremptory spirit of excise laws" deprecated by Hamilton, in a time of profound peace, without any emergency calling for such invasions of their rights. I claim, sir, that the longer continuance of these taxes, with the oppressive and undemocratic methods of collecting them, is a needless outrage upon a free people. I claim that American citizens have the right to demand that the taxes which they are required to pay should be levied only for the support of their Government, adjusted upon principles of equity and fairness, and should be collected by methods most in conformity with liberty and least offensive to their sensibilities.

The good people whom I represent care little or nothing for the tax on spirits and tobacco; they would cheerfully pay it, and more, if they could be spared the oppressive and vexatious methods and machinery of its collection. Make the tax a reasonable one on spirits and assess it upon the capacity of the licensed distilleries, leaving a margin for revenue to the States from the same source, and I am quite sure all complaints will cease in North Carolina. It is easy to sneer at these complaints and call those who make them "moonshiners." I submit that it would be more statesmanlike to listen to them, and more manly to give an argument when freemen ask redress, than to call them names.

Here I am met by the suggestion that if the internal taxes be repealed or reduced it will force an increase, or at least prevent a reduction, of the tariff duties; and the question is triumphantly asked, "Do you prefer free whisky to free blankets?" Generally this appears to the questioner so unanswerable as to end the argument. It only appears so, however, to those who have not examined the present tariff laws in detail, and who are unacquainted with its practical operations. There is much more to be said. Were the question one in reality between cheap whisky and tobacco and cheap articles of prime necessity, a Christian man could not hesitate one moment as to his choice. But it is not so by any means.

In the first place, as I have said, should the entire internal tax be removed, the revenue accruing from other sources would suffice for ordinary expenditures. Not another dollar would be required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. GRAY. I ask that it be laid aside temporarily, that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. VANCE. But granting that there would be a deficit, the way to raise that sum would be to lessen, not increase, the tariff duties. Does any one seriously doubt that? Surely there is no fact more clearly established in political economy than that as to the great mass of items of human wants the lessening of the price will increase the consumption and consequently the importations of the things consumed. This, of course, will increase the sum total of duties received; and this increase will continue the lower you place duties until the revenue point is passed.

The duties on many articles of general use are now practically prohibitory, and of course they must be lowered to produce revenue. A few articles will serve to illustrate this.

There is no one thing of prime necessity in more universal use than blankets. Of all sorts and sizes there were imported in the year 1887 as follows: 7,570 pounds; worth $3,886.52; duty thereon, $2,789.25, the average duty being 71.62 per cent. I have no later statistics of the amount made and sold in the United States than the census of 1880; naturally the quantity made and sold in 1887 would be much larger. In 1880 there were produced in the United States 1,083,617 pairs and 1,114,827 single blankets. Estimating the foreign blankets at five pounds to the pair, would give about 1,500 pairs, on which the Treasury received $2,785.29, as against about 1,500,000 pairs made and consumed here, the duty on which went into the pockets of the manufacturers, though paid by the people all the same.

Of flannels there were imported of all qualities in 1887, 219,334 pounds; value $185,203; duty paid, $129,624, being an average of 70 per cent. In 1880 there were made and sold in the United States 70,923,196 pounds; worth at an average 60 cents per pound—$42,553,917.60. On this a heavy duty was paid by the people, but the Treasury got only $129,624.

In the article of hats made of wool the discrepancy between imports and domestic manufacture is still more marked.

In 1887 there were imported into the United States 3,273 pounds wool hats; value, $6,594.98; duty paid, $3,561.77, being at the rate of 54 per cent.

In 1880 the number of wool hats made and sold in the United States was 1,391,862 dozens, worth, at an average of 60 cents per pound, $2,783,664.

Small as was the reduction on wool by the act of 1883, the increase of duties received on wool itself and four articles of its manufacture in three years was $11,465,503, under that law.

And so with many other items in the tariff lists; but these will suffice as illustrations of my position. No sane man can suppose that more revenue could be obtained from these articles by increasing the duties thereon. Common sense teaches that the only way to do that would be to lower the duties to the point where the importers could afford to compete. The proposition is too plain to require elaboration. It will hold good as to every item on the dutiable list on which the duty is now above revenue point. It can not be otherwise. I respectfully suggest that Senators who favor an indefinite continuance of excise taxes should spare us their taunts that those of us who favor a modification or repeal of the system prefer free whisky and tobacco to free blankets, clothing, and other necessaries. It is a false clamor. We have high internal taxes now, but no free blankets. The duty on them is prohibitory. It could be no worse if internal taxes were abolished. So it is with nearly every article of prime necessity. I challenge Senators to point out any considerable item in the whole dutiable schedule from which increased revenue could be raised by increasing the duties.

If proof of this were really required, I need furnish none other than extracts from various protection journals demanding that revenues be reduced by raising the tariff so that it would prohibit.

Such being the fact, it is not correct to say that the repeal of internal-revenue taxes would force an increase or prevent reduction of tariff taxes. On the contrary, I firmly believe that their repeal would tend to force a reduction of tariff duties to secure the needed revenue. And I further believe that so long as these taxes remain, furnishing over one-third of the revenues of the Government, the protectionists will keep the duties on woolen goods, metals, and other necessaries so high as to yield little or no revenue. They will, in fact, put in their pockets annually from their profits on those items a sum equal to the internal taxes. Virtually that tax is levied for their benefit. Hence the shrewd protection leaders oppose the repeal of internal taxes, and I suspect the sincerity of those who profess to favor it. They are profuse with their intimations of favor for the simple purpose of creating dissensions and diversions in the ranks of the low-tariff people of the South, who desire at the same time relief from the vexations of the internal-revenue system. That sincerity will be tested when a vote is reached on a proposition to repeal or reduce, and I shall be only too glad to find myself mistaken. They know as certainly as they know anything that but for the one hundred and eighteen millions of the internal taxes they could not resist for one day the popular demand for reduction. Their object, even when sincere, is only to reduce revenue. My object is to reduce taxation also, as well as to distribute it with more equity between producers and consumers and between rich and poor. This never will be done so long as the internal taxes remain, in my opinion.

Of all the excuses, however, for refusing to repeal or reduce internal-revenue taxes the one least entitled to respect is that which affects to treat the tax on spirits as a moral agent. Several Senators, among them the Senator from Ohio, have intimated quite a readiness to remove the tax on tobacco, but hang back on the other branch of the proposition with vague intimations of eminent temperance virtues latent within the tax. I must decline to participate in the effort to create so cheap a reputation for Christian virtue.

The Government of the United States has nothing whatever to do with such a matter. The restraints upon the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits wholly pertain to the police powers of the State; and the advisability of the adoption of sumptuary laws, partially or altogether prohibitory, is to be determined by their discretion alone. Even if we did possess such power here I should doubt the propriety of the Government legalizing a traffic which people think to be injurious and wicked and making itself a partner and participator in that wickedness. As a man of ordinary prudence and friend of temperance, I should always be suspicious of a temperance movement which met the unanimous approbation of the great whisky ring of the United States, as does this present excise law. Whenever the distillers of the land sit in the amen corner of the congregation, applauding the temperance lecturer, and meekly insist on being taxed for their own suppression, I must confess to some degree of doubt as to the saving efficacy of the scheme thus indorsed by saint and sinner. I am happy to see that many leading temperance people of the country take the same view and decline the unholy alliance.

The inequalities of the present tariff duties and their discriminations in favor of the rich and against the poor, in favor of the luxuries and against the necessaries of life, are such as should condemn the scheme in the estimation of all just men. How the party which inaugurated and continues these outrages upon justice and fair dealing in matters of taxation has been able to sustain itself and its work so long in power, is a mystery to the ordinary understanding. It can only be solved by recurring to the fact that these duties were mostly enacted in a period of war, and that since that war ended they have industriously kept alive its bitter memories, behind and under cover of which they have done their nefarious work, artfully distracting public attention by sectional appeals from the fact that they were permitting favored classes to form a partnership with the Government in the taxation of the other classes, and were dividing the proceeds at the rate of one dollar to the Government and four for themselves.

Let us look at the articles taxed by this tariff, first in groups, and then examine those groups in detail.

IMPORTS IN 1887.

|---|---|
| First. Woolen goods: Total woolen goods | $44,235,244 |
| Duty paid thereon | 29,729,717 |

Being an average of 67.21 per cent.

|---|---|
| Second. Silk goods | $31,264,276 |
| Duty paid thereon | 15,540,300 |

Being an average of 49 per cent.

Here it will be seen that goods of wool, which are the principal wear of the poor, are taxed about 18.25 per cent. more than goods of silk, which are almost exclusively the wear of the rich.

Now let us see what difference is made in this tariff between the raw material from which the two kinds of goods are manufactured. In 1887 there were imported of all kinds wools to the value of $16,351,369, on which a duty was paid of $5,899,816, being an average of 36.8 per cent. In the same year there were imported raw silk, cocoons, etc., to the value of $19,640,397, on which was paid no duty whatever. Thus we see that whilst the raw material for the manufacture of clothing for the poor and the great mass of the people was taxed over 36 per cent., the raw material for the manufacture of silks, for the use of the rich, is permitted to come in free.

|---|---|
| Imported in 1887, in value | $68,882,884 |
| Tax paid on the same | 56,507,405 |

Being a duty of 82 per cent.

SALT.

|---|---|
| Imported in the year 1887 to the value of | $1,455,585 |
| Duty paid on the same | 676,865 |

Being in even numbers 50 per cent.

LEATHER AND ITS PRODUCTS.

|---|---|
| Imported in 1887 to the value of | $10,933,569 |
| Duty paid thereon | 3,286,862 |

Being at the rate of 30 per cent.

HATS, BONNETS, STRAW GOODS, WILLOW, GRASS, ETC.

|---|---|
| Amount imported | $4,902,911 |
| Duty paid thereon | 1,051,609 |

A rate of 21 per cent., being 9 per cent. less for fancy straw goods than for the leather which protects the feet.

IRON AND STEEL.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $50,618,985 |
| Duty paid thereon | 20,713,293 |

Being an average of 41 per cent.

JEWELRY AND PRECIOUS STONES.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $10,981,191 |
| Duty paid thereon | 1,102,300 |

Being a duty of 10½ per cent.

This shows, whatever be the excuse for it, that iron and steel, without which no industry can move, and which are an absolute necessity of life, are made to pay four times as much as the adornments of the rich.

GLASS AND GLASSWARE.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $7,301,329 |
| Duty paid thereon | 4,510,312 |

Being a tax of 59 per cent.

FUR GOODS.

|---|---|
| Duty paid thereon | 926,217 |

Being a little over 20 per cent., and one-third of the duty upon the glassware, which constitutes an article of prime necessity.

EARTHEN, STONE, AND CHINA WARE.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $5,708,093 |
| Duty paid thereon | 3,251,881 |

Being a tax of 57 per cent.

FRUITS AND NUTS.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $15,088,073 |
| Duty paid thereon | 4,210,098 |

Being at the rate of 27 per cent.

By this it will be seen that the common stone and earthen ware in the poor man's cottage paid more than double the tax upon the fruits and nuts which formed the dessert on the rich man's dinner table.

COTTON GOODS.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $29,150,058 |
| Duty paid thereon | 11,710,718 |

Being a duty of 40 per cent.

FANCY ARTICLES.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $7,185,908 |
| Duty paid thereon | 2,949,360 |

Being 41 per cent.

CHEMICALS.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $13,285,825 |
| Duty paid thereon | 4,654,165 |

Being a duty of 35 per cent.

FLAX, HEMP, JUTE, AND THEIR MANUFACTURES.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $33,807,282 |
| Duty paid thereon | 9,497,981 |

Being 28 per cent.

SPICES OF ALL KINDS.

|---|---|
| Amount imported in 1887 | $3,315,964 |
| Duty paid thereon | None. |

NUTS, BANANAS, COCOA, PINE-APPLES, OLIVES, ETC.

| Duty paid thereon | None. |

In the foregoing the discriminations of the tariff against the common necessities of life and articles most in use by the poor would be made still more apparent if stated more in detail. For example, the average price on wools is put at 36 per cent., whereas the duty on clothing wools is fully 56 per cent.; the average being reduced by the lesser duty on carpet wools. The clothing wools being used for the raiment of the mass of the people; the carpet wools being designed principally for the service of the rich.

The tax upon wool is evidently designed for the purpose of making a necessity dear, whilst the tax on raw silk serves to make a luxury cheap. The impolicy as well as the injustice of it would seem to be evident when wool and leather goods are contrasted. Everything considered, perhaps no country has cheaper or better leather goods than ours, and yet the duty is but 30 per cent., with the raw material free. The home market is more nearly possessed by our own manufacturers in this article than any other, our exports being fully equal to our imports. But in the case of woolen goods, where the raw material is heavily taxed and the duty on the manufactured articles is double that of leather, our exports are next to nothing and our imports are more than one-third of our whole consumption.

Whilst this grouping shows conclusively a discrimination against the necessaries of life in bulk by a considerable average per cent. of duty, when we come to examine the separate items of each group it will be seen that these discriminations against the poor amount to positive inhumanity. In almost every department and almost without exception the things used by them are made to pay the highest duty. Let us look at some of the items:

|---|---|
| Wool hats: | |
| Valued at 40 cents per pound and under | 75.00 |
| Valued at from 40 to 60 cents per pound | 73.00 |
| Valued at from 60 to 80 cents per pound | 66.00 |
| Valued at above 80 cents per pound | 52.00 |

As the article rises in value it decreases in duty or tax.

| Knit goods: | |
| Worth not exceeding 30 cents per pound | 88.33½ |
| Worth from 30 to 40 cents per pound | 65.20 |
| Worth from 40 to 60 cents per pound | 69.00 |
| Valued at 80 cents per pound and upwards | 62.00 |
| Woolen shawls: | |
| Valued at 80 cents per pound and under | 88.50 |
| Valued above 80 cents per pound | 65.50 |
| Woolen goods, dress goods, etc.: | |
| Valued at 80 cents per pound or under | 88.80 |
| Worth over 80 cents per pound | 64.46 |
| Worsted, alpaca, and so on: | |
| Valued at 30 cents per pound or under | 76.50 |
| Worth from 30 to 40 cents per pound | 69.33½ |
| Worth from 40 to 60 cents per pound | 68.25 |
| Flannels: | |
| Cheapest, valued at 30 cents or under per pound | 73.42 |
| Valued from 30 to 40 cents per pound | 66.20 |
| Valued at above 60 cents and not exceeding 80 cents per pound | 67.05 |
| Women's and children's dress goods, Italian cloths, etc.: | |
| Worth 20 cents per square yard or under | 67.89 |
| All above 20 cents per square yard | 59.00 |
| All woolen goods or mixtures of alpaca and other material: | |
| Weighing 4 ounces or less per square yard | 83.00 |
| Weighing over 4 ounces per square yard | 69.68 |
| Blankets: | |
| Worth 30 cents per pound or under | 79.66 |
| Worth from 30 to 40 cents per pound | 63.85 |
| All worth above 80 cents per pound | 70.00 |

Whilst the woolen shawl of the poor woman is taxed 88 per cent., the silk shawl of her wealthier sister is taxed only 50 per cent.

Whilst the cheap alpaca of the laborer's wife is taxed 83 per cent., the silk or velvet dress of his employer's wife and the laces and ribbons with which it is trimmed are taxed but 50 per cent.

Whilst the plow-boy's coarse wool hat is taxed 75 per cent., the shining silk beaver of the dude is taxed only 50 per cent.

When the overworked banker or merchant refreshes himself with a pint of sparkling champagne he pays a tax of 50 per cent. thereon, and when the tired drayman comforts himself with a glass of beer at the close of the day he pays a tax of 63 per cent. thereon. In the matter of strong spirits it is still worse. If the poor man drinks foreign whisky he pays a tax of 394 per cent., if domestic whisky about 400 per cent.; whilst the wealthier man can drink French brandy with a tax of only 81 per cent.

Files are taxed 56 per cent.; trace-chains, 47 per cent.; horseshoe-nails, 76 per cent.; whilst sporting fire-arms, pistols, etc., are taxed only 35 per cent., and iron rails continue to pay 93 per cent. and steel rails 84.

Comment upon a system of taxation which makes the owner of a cottage pay 93 per cent. on the modest, unpolished panes which give sunlight to his hearth and lets off the owner of the mansion with 20 per cent. on the polished plate-glass which admits his sunlight, is totally uncalled for in a land of either Christianity or common sense. Truly has the wise man said, "The destruction of the poor is their poverty." These discriminations against the cheap goods of the poor are to be found all through the schedules, and time would fail me to point them out. Let the examples given suffice.

And yet the Senator from Ohio, in his elaborate speech, on the 4th instant, used the following language:

> After deducting the free-list, we import goods of the value of $450,000,000, upon which we levy duties. Shall this be a uniform rate? We say no; but by a careful discrimination and classification of rates depending upon the nature and quality of the goods, who are to be the consumers, and the effect the rate proposed will have upon domestic industry; we therefore say that articles of voluntary use, of luxury, ornament, or appetite, not in common use among the people, and which are purchased almost exclusively by the wealthy, should bear a high rate of taxation—the highest rate that experience shows can be collected without excluding them or inducing smuggling. This is founded upon the admitted maxim of political economy that taxes should be assessed upon those best able to pay.

When we look at these beautiful words and flowing sentences rippling sweetly with the virtues of charity, patriotism, and the milk of human kindness, and then look at the fact that by this same tariff the poor woman's woolen shawl and alpaca dress pay nearly twice as much duty as the silk and satin of the rich man's wife, and the plow-boy's wool hat almost twice as much as the dandy's silk beaver, and the common window-glass of the cottage pays five times as much as the plate-glass of the mansion, we can form some judgment of the value of mere words, and we may conclude without looking into the schedule that empty declamation at least is on the free-list.

No wonder that the Senator favors putting everything on the free-list that can not be produced here by reason of climate, declaring, as he does, that because they do not come into competition with domestic industry "a tax upon them would be simply a burden without any redeeming benefit." That is to say, that a tax paid into the Treasury, and which is not divided with the manufacturers, is of no benefit whatever. In other words, it is no benefit to a people to support their Government alone, the "redeeming benefit" of taxation being the support of a privileged class.

Such is the tariff or schedule of customs taxes imposed upon the American people, which its authors and supporters propose to continue without regard to the necessities of the Government. Yielding, as it does, very little revenue in proportion to the magnitude of the tax by reason of its prohibitory character, they propose to let it stand upon all the necessaries of life, and to reduce revenue without reducing taxes by adding to the free-list only those articles the duty on which is pure revenue, or nearly so, and goes into the Treasury. As to those items of prime necessity which, coming from abroad, compete with our manufactures here, and the duty upon which, more or less, goes into their pockets, and not to the Treasury, they refuse to touch them. They put this on the ground of the preservation of American industries, alleging that to reduce duties on any of these items would destroy every industry engaged in the manufacture of them, and all who are dependent thereon.

The Senator from Ohio, as the leader of his party, blows the usual signal trumpet of distress and rings the annual alarm bell that American industries are about to perish and labor is about to be pauperized on this continent because a Democratic President recommends a reduction of the tariff in the face of an annual surplus of more than one hundred millions, and advises that that money should be left in the hands of the people who earned it and who sorely need it, by reducing taxation. That distinguished Senator thinks evidently that the class of our fellow-citizens engaged in manufactures which come in competition with similar articles of foreign make are alone entitled to the first care and consideration of this Government, though they be not more than a tenth of the entire population; that for them, and them alone, laws are to be made, governments are to be administered, and taxation levied and collected. The President's proposition being that no taxation shall be levied except for the use of the Government economically administered, the converse is the proposition of the Senator from Ohio—that taxation shall only be levied for the support of manufacturers; and their necessities, real or pretended, shall be the measure of the taxes imposed by the American Congress. No sophistry can avoid this.

The excuse given always for high customs taxes has been that in the long run, if the productions of the foreigner were kept out, domestic competition would become so great as to bring down prices to their normal figures. But as the natural laws of political economy were not allowed free scope by these tariff restrictions in the exclusion of foreign competition, so they are not allowed their natural tendencies in the domestic competition. Vast combinations or conspiracies against public policy have been formed among the manufacturers to keep up prices. They are denominated trusts, wherein all the manufacturers of a given article pledge themselves to sell not below a minimum price. To enforce the stipulations of these trusts, oaths are exacted from all salesmen and proprietors, and fines and penalties are imposed. Each member of the trust is required to contribute an amount of money in proportion to the extent of his business, to be forfeited and confiscated in case he is found guilty at any time, without consent of the combination, of selling below the minimum price. This price is always regulated by the tariff, and is kept as high as the tariff will permit. In the face of all this, which is and should be indictable at common law as a conspiracy against the public, these shameless cormorants appear before the Congress of the United States and demand that these tariff duties be maintained in the name of American industry and American labor, behind which they may conspire to plunder the American people.

Mr. President, the whole scheme of the present tariff is wrong, unjust, unfair, and unconstitutional. The central theory of it is iniquity, supported, as it needs must be in the fitness of things, by false logic and false assertions of facts. I am opposed to its arrangements out and out. I shall vote to put nothing more on the free-list the tax on which is pure revenue. I shall strive earnestly to reduce taxation on the necessaries of life, discriminating only against luxuries and in favor of the helpless and unprotected.

Mr. BLAIR. I call for the regular order, the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will present some House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1213) to punish robbery, burglary, and larceny in the Indian Territory was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1216) providing for the investment of certain funds in the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the consideration of the unfinished business be resumed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is entitled to the floor on this bill.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, to talk about the Constitution of the United States, its limitations, and the obligations that it imposes upon Senators and Members of Congress would seem to be a natural, a highly proper, and a constantly recurring duty, and yet, sir, I know from my short experience in this body that it is a thing at which some Senators, I fear too many on both sides of this Chamber, shrug their shoulders and show impatience. But I think I can appeal to some at least of those of the same political faith with myself, nay, I think I can appeal to all Senators who regard the obligation of the oath they have taken, when a measure like the one now pending before the Senate is proposed and urged with zeal and ability, and, I must admit, with great sincerity by the gentlemen who are advocating it; I say I think I can hopefully appeal for a candid consideration of the objections that lie on the surface to its passage.

When we hear in this Chamber this new power that is sought to be ingrafted upon the Constitution of our country, advocated, enlarged upon, and referred to as the fruitful source of legislation, I mean the power of money that has been discovered by these interpreters of the Constitution within the four corners of that sacred instrument; when we hear on this floor that the Congress of the United States, nay, that one branch thereof, the Senate of the United States, is invested with power to go into the States and investigate the results of a municipal election, then I say it is time for those who profess to be the friends of the Constitution to examine anew the tenets of their faith and bring to the test of the obligations they have taken upon themselves this or any other measure in which it is proposed that the Federal Government shall concern itself with the functions reserved to the States.

Mr. President, I should content myself with a silent vote against the passage of this bill, resting my justification on the reasons given by me nearly two years ago, when this bill or one similar in its provisions was before the Senate, were it not that the persistence with which it is again urged, and the renewal, Congress after Congress, of what seems to me an attempt to break over the lines of partition between State and Federal authority established by our constitutional scheme of government, demand renewed protest at least from those who believe that the maintenance of those lines is essential to the permanence of our free institutions.

I do not know, Mr. President, that it matters much to some Senators whether constitutional warrant be found for this legislation or not. They believe in a law higher than the Constitution, and, of course, I doubt not their sincerity, they are relieved from any scruples on that score. Salus populi suprema lex, or some other vague and general phrase, satisfies their conscience, and it is always possible for them to conjure up sentimental fears for the safety of the Republic. But to those who recognize the supreme obligations of the Constitution and are governed by its requirements, I address myself when I ask where within this instrument do you find the sanction for Congress, as the depository of the legislative power therein granted, to enter upon this field of legislation.

This matter of education and the common schools is confessedly one belonging to the States, as much so as their roads and highways, their penitentiaries, asylums, corporations, or other institutions which concern their organized societies and are within the purview of that great mass of reserved powers not granted to the Federal Government. This I believe will be denied by no one. The Senator from New Hampshire and those who sympathize with him and the higher-law school to which he belongs, boldly avow that the General Government has the inherent power to enter upon the discharge of any of the functions of the State which Congress may think are not performed, or not properly performed by the States, when the public safety or general welfare demands that it should do so. As these phrases, "public safety" and "general-welfare," are not capable of precise definition, this is of course tantamount to saying that Congress may enter upon the domain of State activities and duties whenever in its discretion it sees fit to do so. In other words, that the Constitution, with its carefully enumerated powers, granted by the States, and its express reservation to the States and the people of powers not granted, is only after all a provisional scheme of government, and the Congress which it created can at any time supersede its provisions and assume powers reserved to the States at its pleasure. A doctrine so monstrous as this is overthrown by its own statement, and needs no argument for its refutation.

But looking at the Constitution itself, the whole scheme of government that it establishes, in its spirit and genius, to what provision can you refer the legislation proposed in this bill? In its essential features, it is the undertaking to supply to the States out of the taxes laid upon the people by the Federal Government annually a sum of money to be applied to the maintenance of common schools therein, upon the condition that the States accept the trust, shall not discriminate in their schools between white and blacks, file their acceptance with the Secretary of the Interior, that their governors shall make annual statements to the Secretary of the Interior showing in detail the application of the money, the amount raised by the State, the number of children, white and black, attending the schools, compensation of teachers, length of school terms, etc., and file copies of all school-books authorized by State boards of instruction with the Secretary of the Interior for examination and approval.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest that the Senator is mistaken in his supposition that there is any approval of any Federal officers provided for in the bill.

Mr. GRAY. I do not find in the bill any express phrase that the Secretary of the Interior is required to approve, but I do find as a condition precedent to the employment of any of this bounty for school purposes in a State that the school-books authorized by State boards of instruction shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GEORGE. And no action of his is contemplated.

Mr. GRAY. No action of his, as I said a moment ago, is expressly provided for in the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Nor by implication.

Mr. GRAY. I take issue with the Senator there, and I ask why this provision is in the bill at all, why these books or copies of them are to be sent from the State of Texas and from the most remote parts of this Union, to be filed here in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, unless it was meant to accomplish something which the advocates of the bill have at heart?

Mr. GEORGE. Will you allow me to answer?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. My answer to that question is, that that provision in the bill was inserted in it by the Senate against my vote. I see no motive in putting it in the bill, and I will add that I see no special harm in it.

Mr. GRAY. Then the Senator so far agrees with me that he has found this provision of the bill objectionable. I am glad that there is something in the bill that will plant a thorn in the pillow of the Senator from Mississippi. I am his friend, but I wish him to take no comfort from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I think I can manage to get along with the bill without the sympathy of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. I have no doubt of that. But to resume the line of the remarks that I was making when I was interrupted——

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just there?

Mr. GRAY. In one moment.

Mr. BLAIR. It is in direct connection with what he has said.

Mr. GRAY. In one moment. To resume the line of remarks I was making when I was interrupted, I say that these conditions or these terms of the general condition precedent that is imposed upon the States before they can enjoy this bounty, do make this bill something more than a mere gift of money to the States.

Mr. BLAIR. I only wish to state that the requirement of filing with the Secretary of the Interior all the school-books used by the States in their common schools was inserted upon the motion of an opponent of the bill, and was not in the original bill or thought of or suggested by any of its friends. It was inserted on the motion of a violent enemy of the bill.

Mr. GRAY. What was the purpose of the amendment, may I ask?

Mr. BLAIR. There was nothing on that point whatever in the original bill itself. It was inserted on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and found its way into the bill contrary to the suggestions of any friend of the bill, so far as I know.

Mr. GRAY. It is sufficient for my purpose that I find it in the bill that is proposed to be passed, and is advocated by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Mississippi. In pursuing the inquiry as to what the purpose of that provision was and is, I should like to know what action should be taken by Congress when the Secretary of the Interior reports to this body that the history of the United States used in the common schools of the State of Alabama or the State of Texas described with the bias and natural affection that those people have for their own blood and kindred the great struggle through which we passed twenty years ago, and did not refuse the meed of praise that all the world is willing to pay to brave men fighting for a mistaken cause—I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he will sit quiet and content that the youth of the South shall learn from such books the lessons that they teach——

Mr. BLAIR rose.

Mr. GRAY. I beg not to be interrupted now.

Mr. BLAIR. I thought the Senator asked me a question.

Mr. GRAY. I will yield in a moment. Or if, forsooth, they find in some of those lately rebellious States that the assassination of the martyred President, Mr. Lincoln, is ascribed in a history of the United States to so-called rebel leaders, as I have seen it ascribed in a school-book in common use throughout the States of the North, I ask whether when that book is discarded on account of the falsehood that it teaches, the State board of a Southern State is to receive the commendation of the Senator from New Hampshire? It may or may not receive it, but it is one of those questions which can be thrown in here by any report of the Secretary of the Interior, and the yeasty waves of sectional debate will run high here many and many a time, if this bill passes, over just such questions as that.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just there?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I have found it to be a very safe rule of conduct in all my life never to cross a bridge until I got to it, and never to trouble myself about difficulties which have not arisen. Whenever an improper school-book is attempted to be forced upon the people of Mississippi under this or any other measure, it will be time enough to take steps against that measure when the evil is threatened or done.

Mr. GRAY. No, no; that is just the point to which I would direct the attention of Senators. I will show further on, I think to the satisfaction of some, that one year or two years hence, when the poison of this bill has been instilled into the veins of the people who have received this money, it will be too late to take the backward step. Nulla vestigia retrorsum.

Here in this bill, with these conditions plainly written upon its face, is a proposal, I submit, to participate not only in the support but in the management and control of the common-school system of the States. It is idle to say that it is only a gift of money with conditions attached to the gift, which may be accepted or not by the States. It is undoubtedly the assumption by the Federal Government of a concern in and a care over an institution that belongs to the State exclusively, and with reference to which we seek in vain in the Constitution for any grant of legislative power.

The friends of the bill on this side of the Chamber, I know, refer to the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, and claim that the first clause of that section is a sufficient warrant for the proposed legislation. What is that clause?

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare.

I do not waste time in showing, for it has been shown abundantly already, that the words "to provide for the common defense and general welfare" do not confer a general or specific power in Congress to provide for the common defense and general welfare, but only——

Mr. GEORGE. No Democrat who sustains the bill contends that they do.

Mr. GRAY. I am just saying that very thing—that no one contends, if that language is universal enough to suit the Senator from Mississippi; but that the words merely indicate the object or intent with which the power to tax was conferred. Mr. Jefferson early pointed out that the clause was equivalent to, and should be read, "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, etc., in order to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," and Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries, as every other commentator and court since then, has adopted this very obvious construction. In that, I suppose, the Senator from Mississippi will agree with me. At section 906 Judge Story says:

> If the clause "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" is construed to be an independent and substantive grant of power it not only renders wholly unimportant and unnecessary the subsequent enumeration of specific powers, but it plainly extends far beyond them and creates a general authority in Congress to pass all laws which they may deem for the common defense and general welfare. Under such circumstances the Constitution would practically create an unlimited national government. The enumerated powers would tend to embarrass and confuse, since they would only give rise to doubts as to the true extent of the general power or of the enumerated powers.

Story calls it a limitation on an otherwise general power to tax. I think that it is more consonant with the structure of the sentence and with the plain natural meaning of the whole section, which contains specific grants of power to Congress, to say that these words declare the general intention in the minds of the framers of the Constitution when they conferred this power upon Congress. They had established a Federal Government, giving to it certain enumerated and specified powers relinquished by the States, and which concern the common defense and general welfare. It was an obvious thing that the taxing power, so necessary and important, but still subordinate and ancillary to the other legislative powers, should be fully given to the legislative body upon which they were conferred.

I call attention to the essential character of this taxing power. It differs from all the other powers conferred upon Congress. It is not a power to be exercised for its own sake. If there were no other powers enumerated there would have been no taxing power. In its nature it is a subordinate, incidental, ancilliary power. I say that it was an obvious thing that the taxing power, so necessary and important, but still subordinate to the other legislative powers, should be fully given to the legislative body upon which those other powers were conferred, and it was so done with the declared intent to provide thereby for the common defense and general welfare, which necessarily depended upon the efficient and plenary exercise of the great powers of government which had been granted. How did the convention that framed the Constitution undertake to provide for the common defense and general welfare? They tell us; we are not left to speculate about it, for in the preamble to the instrument itself they say that in order to "provide for the common defense" and "promote the general welfare" we do "ordain and establish this Constitution," with its enumerated and specified and limited powers.

Mr. GEORGE. That is an interpolation. That is not in the preamble.

Mr. GRAY. What is not in the preamble?

Mr. GEORGE. The phrase, "with its enumerated and specified powers."

Mr. GRAY. I did not say it was. I think the Senator is barking up the wrong tree when he accuses me of interpolating anything into the preamble of the Constitution.

Mr. GEORGE. Did you not quote the preamble as saying, "we do ordain and establish this Constitution, with its enumerated and specified powers"?

Mr. GRAY. I did not, nor did I use language that would justify the Senator's remark.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I withdraw what I said about it. I simply meant to say that those words are not in the preamble.

Mr. GRAY. I said that the preamble to the Constitution declared its purpose to "provide for the common defense" and "promote the general welfare" by ordaining and establishing "this Constitution of the United States of America," adding in my own words, with all its enumerated powers, specified and limited as we find them in that instrument. That is the mode which our fathers took to provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare, that nothing should be left for construction in the emergency when it arose, but that by plain and specific grants of power, written down in that instrument beforehand, there should be for each emergency as it arose the constitutional rule which was to govern.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Suppose the fathers had ordained this instrument and inserted within it the various enumerated powers, and had omitted to provide thus for the existence of a government; and suppose the clause in the tenth section of the first article had been omitted entirely, which in express terms specifies the power of taxation. If the Constitution had been identical with its present language, save only that clause being omitted, would there then have been any power whatever of taxation, or would the Government have fallen for the lack of an express provision to exercise the vitalizing power of raising money to carry the Government into effect?

Mr. GRAY. It has become a trite saying that the fathers builded more wisely than they knew. The hypothesis of the Senator from New Hampshire would have us assume that they might have built with more ignorance and with more stupid want of perception of the needs of civilized government than was ever shown, or could be shown, by any body of intelligent men who could come together for such a purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator then say that the British Government, which has no written constitution, has no inherent power for the reason that there is no written constitution; or is the power of taxation, the power to carry other powers conferred into effect, necessarily implied by reason of the express provision of enumeration of those other powers?

Mr. GRAY. The question of the Senator from New Hampshire only illustrates the difficulty of arguing with that school of politics which makes the Constitution of the United States subordinate to a law higher than is found written within its four corners. There is no more comparison to be made between the British constitution and the Constitution of the United States than is ever to be made between things which are utterly dissimilar.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish merely to disclaim that I belong to the "higher-law" school of politicians, or statesmen, or citizens, or whatever classification of individuals you choose to adopt. I hold that the power which is claimed to be exercised or which will be exercised if the bill becomes a law is within the express provisions of the Constitution itself, not in written words, but as a necessary and inevitable implication from the written powers which are given in their aggregate; for the Constitution is ordained and established as a whole, and if there were no power of taxation conferred in express terms, necessarily the power of taxation would be implied, and implied for all those purposes which are indispensable to the existence of the Government itself.

Mr. GRAY. That will be the argument of the gentleman when he comes to advocate the bill. It is rather beside the argument which I am making at this point. It is almost too general and not specific enough to the point I am making for an answer.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has not answered my question. However, I do not wish to press it.

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand that the Senator asked me a question. I understood that he was making a speech.

Mr. BLAIR. Not at all. I asked a question, which the Senator, I understand, has evaded.

Mr. GRAY. Not at all.

Mr. BLAIR. I thought he evaded it.

Mr. GRAY. No; I did not.

Mr. BLAIR. Very likely it was for the reason that I did not make my question understood. I asked him, had the Constitution contained no clause expressly, that is, in written language, conferring the power of taxation, whether there would have been no power of taxation in the Government of the United States?

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to say a word?

Mr. GRAY. In one moment.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator from Delaware can not answer, then I suggest that the Senator from Texas be allowed to do so.

Mr. GRAY. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that his question is founded upon the hypothesis that there was no specific grant of power of taxation conferred by the instrument we call the Constitution of the United States, and he asks whether in that case there would not have been an implied power to tax. I am not prepared to say that where the enumerated powers of legislation are specific, direct, concerning matters of government which require the expenditure of money, there might not have been an implication that would convey the power of taxation. I am not prepared to say; I am only answering for myself; but I think that to answer the question makes nothing for the position of the Senator from New Hampshire. We are talking about the specific powers conferred upon Congress. I have tried to show that the power of taxation, expressed as it is, differs from all the other powers conferred in that section, and that it is a subordinate power, incident to the other powers, and ancillary, to use the phrase of the books, to their exercise, and is a power which would never stand alone. Imagine a constitution of government which gave the power to tax and no other power in written words! Taxes are not a thing to be desired in themselves. As they are possessed by government they are only to be exercised for the carrying into effect of those other great governmental powers which concern the happiness and welfare of the citizens of the country.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. With the Senator's consent, I will still hold him to answer my question.

Mr. GRAY. I have yielded to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call attention to the fact that the hypothetical question presented by the Senator from New Hampshire contemplates a government where there is no grant of power for taxation, and he offers as an illustration the British Government. That government has no written constitution and it exercises all the legislative powers which the needs of the country call for. In our Government we have written constitutions and dual governments, with powers delegated to the General Government by the written Constitution and with certain rights reserved to the people which are not delegated at all. So there is no analogy between the hypothetical case presented by the Senator from New Hampshire and the case which the Senator from Delaware is discussing.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to reply to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand the answer of the Senator from Texas to the question which I propounded to the Senator from Delaware to be equivalent to saying that unless in the Constitution of the United States which provides in writing for a government, there shall be a written provision granting the power of taxation, the Government of the United States would have no such power. Do I correctly understand the Senator from Texas?

Mr. REAGAN. I have not assumed to pass upon that question at all.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator does not assume to pass upon that question, he certainly does not answer it. If he can not answer the question, that is another thing, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] suggests to me.

Mr. REAGAN. If I did answer it I do not know what application it would have either to the bill before the Senate or to the question now being discussed.

Mr. BLAIR. I will endeavor to show some application——

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. The time is advancing and I do not want to trespass on the patience of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. If the question can not be answered, I will waive it.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator's pardon. I mean no disrespect to him, but perhaps I can not answer satisfactorily a question which seems to be absurd. I do not think that the Senator and I would ever agree as to the nature of this dual Government of ours. I rather apprehend that we argue from different standpoints; that he does not recognize the settled doctrine that the Federal Government is a government of limited and enumerated powers, while the government of each State, or its people, has the great residuum of powers; that to find a power in the National Legislature you must go to the Constitution and see where is the specific grant; while when you go to the Legislature of the State and ask for legislative power, you go to the State constitution and see if there is any restraint, see whether the power is expressly denied to the Legislature. In the States we exercise all the legislative powers that are not expressly prohibited. In this Federal Government we exercise only those which are granted, differing in that respect from the States, which exercise all legislative powers that are not prohibited.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if there were no written provision in the Constitution granting the power of taxation to the General Government, would there be any such power?

Mr. GRAY. I answered that question a while ago. I stated I was not prepared to say that when a Constitution like that of the United States confers specific enumerated powers of legislation and also grants all powers necessary to carry into effect those which are granted, there might not have been a power of taxation incidental to the exercise of the governmental powers that would be inefficient without it; but it makes nothing for the position of the Senator from New Hampshire, because that only admits that the taxing power would be incidental and attendant upon the great powers of government, as I contend that it is here, whether an express grant or not.

This power was added to the great governmental powers and is a subordinate power, granted with the declared intent to provide thereby for the common defense and general welfare, which necessarily depended upon the efficient and plenary exercise of the great powers of government intrusted to Congress by this section. If the power to lay and collect taxes, etc., had been given without more, no one, I think, who brought an unbiased mind to consider this section, would for a moment contend that the power to tax was other than I have stated.

If there had been in the Constitution but the simple phrase "the Congress may lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," no one would contend, I think, that the power to tax was other than I have stated, an ancillary and attendant power, one subordinate to and limited by the other powers.

The power to tax never existed in any civilized government, certainly in no American government, except with reference to the powers and jurisdiction of that government. The statement, therefore, of the general intent with which the taxing power is conferred can not enlarge that power, which is shown by its nature to be incidental and subordinate, because even the most latitudinarian constructionists admit that these words are qualifications and limitations on the power. They are a renewed and express injunction upon Congress that in exercising this ancillary power of taxation, so important and so delicate, with reference to subjects within their jurisdiction, they shall keep carefully in view the "general welfare of the United States"—that is, of the Government, the organized body-politic created by the Constitution. It is this portion of the general welfare which is committed to its keeping.

The words "the United States" are used throughout the Constitution to denote the body-politic or governmental organism. In this same section Congress is empowered "to borrow money on the credit of the United States." "The United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government." "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land;" so that the phrase "the United States" is used throughout this Constitution in lieu of the corporate name and style of "the United States of America."

It is, therefore, with reference to that part of the general welfare which is committed to the keeping of the Government of the United States, and with reference to that part alone, that Congress may, under this section, lay and collect taxes.

Here it may be instructive to refer again to that admirable exposition of this subject made by Judge Cooley in his work on taxation. It has been already read several times in the Senate, and I will only detain Senators by a phrase or two, which carries out my contention that when you speak of the "common defense and general welfare of the United States" you are speaking of the general welfare of the body-politic that is described by that phrase.

Mr. TELLER. And not of the people?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, sir; and not of the people, except so far as the welfare of the people is wrapped up in the welfare of the Government they created. That is my answer to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GRAY. One moment, until I read the extract I was about to commence.

In considering—

Says Judge Cooley—

the legality of the purpose of any particular tax, a question of first importance must always concern the grade of the government which assumes to levy it. The "public" that is concerned in a legal sense in any matter of government is the public the particular government has been provided for; and the "public purpose" for which that government may tax is one which concerns its own people, and not some other people having a government of its own, for whose wants taxes are laid. There may, therefore, be—

I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to Judge Cooley's language—

There may, therefore, be a public purpose as regards the Federal Union, which would not be such as a basis for State taxation, and there may be a public purpose which would uphold State taxation, but not the taxation which its municipalities would be at liberty to vote and collect.

Though the powers granted to Congress are limited in number and specific, they are all plenary, and all paramount and exclusive, when exercised by Congress, of power on the part of the State relating to the same subject-matter. If they have the power to lay and collect a tax for any purpose that they think necessary for the public welfare, the power and the purpose must go together, they can not be divorced, and that purpose can not be interfered with by any lawful authority in the States. There are no imperfect or incomplete powers placed in the hand of the Federal Government. It can not lay a tax without a purpose, and if that purpose be one lawfully within the domain of Federal power it may proceed to its accomplishment over every obstacle, and march through the length and breadth of your States to enforce it.

It is not necessary to say anything further as to that remarkalbe "power of appropriation" which, originating with Mr. Monroe, though inconsistent with all the teachings of his life, has been nursed into a power of such formidable proportions as to threaten to destroy all the landmarks of constitutional government. This indeed would be a solvent of all the limitations which restrain the exercise of unlimited power. Against this poison let us again and again apply ourselves to the antidote supplied by those words of wisdom and of warning uttered by Mr. Madison in the debate on the fishing bounty bill so soon after the adoption of the Constitution by the convention in which he sat as a conspicuous and laborious member. Speaking of this general-welfare phrase, he says:

Taking these terms as an abstract and indefinite grant of power, they comprise all the objects of legislative regulations, as well such as fall under the judiciary article in the Constitution as those falling immediately under the legislative article, and if the partial enumeration of objects in the legislative article does not, as these gentlemen contend, limit the general power, neither will it be limited by the partial enumeration of objects in the judiciary article.

There are consequences, sir, still more extensive, which, as they follow clearly from the doctrine combated, must either be admitted, or the doctrine must be given up. If Congress can employ money indefinitely to the general welfare, and are the sole and supreme judges of the general welfare, they may take the care of religion into their own hands; they may appoint teachers in every State, county, and parish, and pay them out of their public Treasury; they may take into their own hands the education of children, establishing in like manner schools throughout the Union; they may assume the provision for the poor; they may undertake the regulation of all roads other than post-roads; in short, everything, from the highest object of State legislation down to the most minute object of police, would be thrown under the power of Congress; for every object I have mentioned would admit of the application of money, and might be called, if Congress pleased, provisions for the general welfare.

The partition of powers between the Federal and State governments was made with distinct and broad lines of demarkation. Congress can not enter the domain of powers reserved to the States, and prohibited to it, by force. I think the Senator from New Hampshire will agree to that. Neither can it enter the prohibited domain by buying its way there. There is no power in this Federal governmental agent to bargain with the States for a surrender of any of their reserved powers and functions. States can not, by consenting, or failing to resist, confer power when there was none before. Only in one way can the States authorize this new purpose of taxation in the General Government, and that is by ratifying an amendment to the Constitution when properly submitted to them by Congress in the mode pointed out by the Constitution itself.

To show how the view I have taken of the object and effect of this phrase "to provide for the common defense and general welfare" consists with the views of those who framed the Constitution, I will read what is given us by Mr. Madison of the history of its incorporation in the convention very briefly, but sufficient to throw very much light, I think, upon the intention that was in the minds of the framers of the instrument when that phraseology was adopted. I read from volume 5 of Elliott's Debates after the Constitution substantially in its present outline had been agreed upon and when a committee of style had been appointed. I find that on August 25, 1787,

Mr. Sherman—

A member of that convention—

thought it necessary to connect with the clause to lay taxes, duties, etc., an express provision for the object of the old debts—

I should preface what I am going to read by the remark that the sketch of the Constitution as practically agreed upon had simply the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," without more.

Mr. Sherman thought it necessary to connect with the clause for laying taxes, duties, etc., an express provision for the object of the old debts, etc., and moved to add to the first clause of article 7, section 1, "for the payment of said debts, and for the defraying the expenses that shall be incurred for the common defense and general welfare."

The proposition was rejected on the ground that it was not necessary, that it added nothing to the meaning of the grant of power to lay and collect taxes, that the implication went with it and followed that power wherever it was attempted to be exercised, and governed its application. That proposition was rejected on the ground I have stated. The committee on style was then appointed and ten days after Mr. Sherman had suggested this addition to the taxing power clause—

Mr. Brearly, from the committee of eleven, made a further partial report, as follows:

"The committee of eleven, to whom sundry resolutions, etc., were referred on the 31st of August, report that, in their opinion, the following additions and alterations should be made to the report before the convention, namely:

"1. The first clause of article 7, section 1, to read as follows: 'The Legislature shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.'"

And that was adopted. So, then, the inference is very plain, I think, that the gentlemen who composed that convention considered this phrase, "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," as exactly equivalent to the language of Mr. Sherman, that it was to pay the debts and defray the expenses incurred for the common defense and general welfare.

Now, I wish to add to this the high authority of the great Chief-Justice, in the case of Gibbon vs. Ogden, where he uses the language I shall read. Chief-Justice Marshall, in that celebrated case, speaking of this very clause, that Congress is authorized to levy and collect taxes to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, says:

Nor is the exercise of that power by the States an exercise of any portion of the power that is granted to the United States. In imposing taxes for State purposes they are not doing what Congress is empowered to do. Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive province of the States. (Gibbon vs. Ogden, 9 Wheaton, page 199.)

I request the gentlemen on the other side of this question to make their contention with Chief-Justice Marshall.

Aside from the question of the constitutionality of the bill, the policy of such a measure is vicious in the extreme, violative of the best traditions of our history, and full of danger to those principles of home rule and local self-government which have found their highest development and best expression in the rights of the States. What truth has been so clearly established during the last century, a century of such enormous political activities, as that the greatest measure of liberty and the highest types of citizenship and civilization are achieved and maintained by self-government, by a distribution of power and its responsibilities among the people of comparatively small communities? This is the goal of the aspirations of the wisest political philosophers everywhere. What have the centralized governments of the world to show in the way of results that concern human happiness and well-being, enormous as the exhibition of their power and resources has been, to compare with the achievements that have been wrought out on this continent under our American system of home rule? European governments have recognized the beneficence of the principle, and have tried to realize for themselves its advantages by grants of local, municipal, and communal power, but they have fallen short of a full fruition of its blessings from the fact that the right was bestowed from above, and the nexus of dependence was still preserved.

The happy accident in our history of the separate colonies and the independent States has made the difference for us. Our local rights and statehood were not conferred by a central government, but that Government is the creation of the States whose common agent it is. Our local rights are our birthright. They can not be taken away nor be impaired nor diminished by any paramount authority. Force might put them in abeyance, but could not destroy them. It remains to be seen whether they will be surrendered, as the Senator from Texas said the other day, for a mess of pottage.

And so it is that on this continent grew up a new political philosophy whose maxims have for a hundred years been household words: "The Federal Government is one of specified and granted powers." "All powers not granted are reserved to the States and the people." No mystery about this. This philosophy is not the tradition of schoolmen, but the common possession and priceless inheritance of the people.

Who shall estimate the value of the results of this system? Who shall measure the extent of the development among the people of intelligence, character, and manhood, or the educating force which the experience and practice for more than a century of the civic virtues of self-control, self-help, and self-respect have exercised?

Here is an educating influence that this bill ignores, and tends to destroy, to which we owe the best fruits of government by the people that ever resulted in blessing mankind. Indeed, I do not go too far when I say that we owe the common-school system itself to this principle of local self-government. Where on the face of the earth is there such a system of common schools as has grown up in the several States of the Union under the fostering care, under the life-giving influence of the free institutions that are cherished and nurtured and protected by the system of local self-government?

It had no precedent in older civilizations. This common-school system born in one small State, it might have been strangled in its birth had it depended upon a consensus of all the States. Fostered by the intelligence, independence, and patriotism of the separate States, it grew by their generous rivalry and competition among themselves, each stimulated in the pathway of progress by the achievements of a sister Commonwealth, until in all the States the system of public education is firmly established upon the solid foundation of self-interest and State pride. The forces which created it will sustain, nourish, and enlarge it, until the most backward State will have stepped to the side of her most advanced sister. With these splendid results of local self-government, why should the Congress of the United States step forward to meddle in a matter that is not within the domain of Federal power? Why should it be believed, in the face of the facts of our history, that this great work can be helped or promoted by Congressional interference.

If the people of the States find that the money necessary for the support of the school system will be provided in large measure out of the Federal Treasury, without effort on their part, will they not lose some of the interest which responsibility and the necessity of endeavor and self-sacrifice tend to create? And with the loss of that interest, and the absence of motive for endeavor and self-sacrifice, will there not be a relaxation of the energy and civic courage which have heretofore characterized the citizenship of the State? Surely there is ground to fear this result. We are dealing with the forces by which human nature is influenced and affected. Like causes will produce like effects, and we are not without experience and warning as to the effect produced by conditions similar to those that would obtain if this bill should become a law.

The New York Evening Post in one of its exceedingly able discussions of the bill cites an episode in the history of Connecticut which is worth producing here. I ask that the Secretary read what I have marked in the paper which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

One fact counts for more than a volume of theorizing, and it is therefore most fortunate that the demoralizing influence of outside school funds can be conclusively demonstrated from the experience of one of the oldest States in the Union. When Connecticut sold her Western Reserve lands, the proceeds were devoted to a school fund, in the expectation that this assistance would serve materially to elevate the standard of public education. The fund proved quite productive, the income during the early part of this century varying from $70,000 to $100,000 a year, which was a large sum of money for a small State in those days, when the cost of maintaining schools was so much less than now.

Before they had this outside income the people of Connecticut supported their schools entirely by taxation, just as the people of the South are doing now. What was the effect of receiving this assistance? The answer shall be furnished by Mr. C. D. Hine, secretary of the State board of education, who is recognized as an authority in the matters of which he speaks. In response to a request from the Evening Post for a succinct statement of the facts, Mr. Hine writes:

"The school fund derived from the sale of western lands yielded an income last year of $120,855, which amounts to 80 cents for each person of the school age. The average expense of educating each of these persons throughout the State is $10.31, so that the fund now furnishes about 8 per cent. of the total cost. In those towns and cities where the people insist upon good schools no reliance is placed upon these permanent funds. Indeed, the history of our State shows conclusively that at the time when the fund was most productive, yielding $1.40 or $1.50 for each person of the school age, and when towns depended upon it, as they generally did, for the support of their schools, the schools themselves were poor and short. In fact this was the darkest period of our educational experience. A very striking deterioration took place as soon as the fund became productive, and the income began to be distributed. Before that period schools had been maintained at least six months, and at most nearly the whole year, according to the size of the district. After, and not long after, this new source of income was opened the usual length of schools was reduced to only three months, or just the time that this fund would maintain the schools. The sums which came as gratuities relieved the people of responsibility and deadened their interest, until the schools were continued only so long as the charity lasted. Happily, the danger from this direction is passed and can not return. The fund has probably reached its greatest productiveness, and the per capita will constantly decrease. The public schools must draw their sustenance from the people who are directly or indirectly benefited by them."

The Blair bill simply proposes to do for the whole South what the Western Reserve fund did for Connecticut. Human nature is much the same everywhere, and if one were to try differentiating it, he certainly would not find the Southern character less likely to be demoralized by subsidies than the Northern. The men who had this fund set apart for the benefit of Connecticut's schools undoubtedly thought that they were doing the State a great service; but it has proved a curse, and the people are now congratulated that "the danger from this direction is passed," because the growth of population has forced them to tax themselves in order to educate their children.

Mr. GRAY. Senators of the South, representatives of the States to whom the greatest share of this largess will come, I beg you to heed the warning. Does your knowledge of human nature, your experience in life, instruct you that there is any reasonable hope that the people of your States, after eight years of demoralizing dependency upon this golden stream from the National Treasury, will declare again for their independence, or will thrust away the hand that feeds them if it be still held out? The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, who has so persistently and ably and sincerely pressed this bill, has beliefs in regard to the right and duty of the General Government in relation to this subject of education which differ widely from those entertained on this side of the Chamber, and are startling enough to us now. Hear what he says in his report accompanying a similar bill in the last Congress. It has been quoted before, but I will recur to a sentence or two from it again:

Still again. The whole people of the United States, that is to say, the nation, by the primary act of the masses and by the act of their State governments, have commanded in the written terms of the constitutional law of the land that "the United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government." How is that obligation to be fulfilled? Must its performance await revolution, and must destruction precede preservation? Is it a guaranty of possession to stand by while war and tempest obliterate, and then endeavor to restore? Is reconstruction the only or is it the better way in which the obligation to guaranty a government republican in form to the States of this Union can be discharged? Is not the ounce of prevention still worth the pound of cure? Does not the duty to guaranty imply the right to prevent and to preserve even more strongly than to restore? Prevention might be possible when restoration would prove to be impossible.

It is a conceded proposition that where a duty—

And the Senator has argued that the duty is imposed on Congress—

where a duty is imposed all the power necessary to its performance is conferred, and the choice of means, so far as there is no prohibition, goes with the power.

If all this be so, what doubt can there be, not only of the power but also of the absolute duty of the National Government to perform its obligation of guaranty in the only effective way in which it is possible? When does the obligation to guaranty attach? Did it not commence with the adoption of the Constitution, and is it not continuous in its operation? Does it not attach as a right in the Territories, which are inchoate States? Does it not follow every movement of the concurrent life of the nation and of the States, and enter into all their constitutional and inseparable relations?

Mr. President, it is upon grounds like these, it is upon the assertion of a power in Congress such as I have read from the report of the Senator from New Hampshire, that this bill is advocated and pressed. It is claimed not only that this gift, on condition, may be made, but it is claimed by him and by the committee, by leaders of their party, by men high in reputation, of recognized and deserved position, that this duty implies the power to enter a State and impose upon it, whether it will or not, just such a scheme of education as may be prescribed by the peculiar notions of the public demand entertained by the Senator from New Hampshire and his associates. I beg gentlemen on this side who are willing to take from those who are willing to give this bounty of the Government, to take heed when once they have become successful, whether this claim of power will not grow and grow until it overshadows all others.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] did not dissent from this view. On the other hand, he used language which I will not now detain the Senate by reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, stating that he did not stand upon the general-welfare clause. He said in substance, though of course I am not giving his very words, "I do not stand upon any refined construction of the general-welfare clause; I claim that here is a great national danger that overshadows the land, and there must be power in any government to meet it and overthrow it." What a position! Does it not distinctly set up for the observance of the people of your States this great higher law through which they would have all powers surrendered to the National Government? I know you [the Senator from Mississippi] repudiate it. I do not do you the injustice of saying that you are bound by such an assertion and claim of power, but as I said before—and pardon me if I again use the language of warning—beware lest the benefaction, as it appears to you now, received under an assertion and claim of power like this, may not grow into a curse instead of a blessing.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean to say as to the Democratic Senators who repudiate that view of the Constitution and find in that instrument ample ground on other reasons for supporting the bill, that because he finds these extraordinary and objectionable grounds we are to abandon our support? In other words, does the Senator mean to say that when we are on a good sound vessel whose prow is directed to a proper port, we should abandon the vessel because a part of the crew insist that they have a right to take it to some other port to which it is not directed?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, it is dangerous to deal in metaphors and figures of speech in the presence of what one knows to be a great public danger. When such a disposition is manifested by part of the crew, it is unwise to embark on such a voyage. I did not mean that the Senator or those who agree with him, either now or hereafter, will give their consent to this doctrine, but I do repeat that it is dangerous to admit within your States a Trojan horse so filled with the destructive elements that this bill contains, on any plea that you repudiate that doctrine.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to see several Trojan horses come into the State of Mississippi, with a million dollars apiece in their bellies.

Mr. GRAY. I have no doubt of it. The Senator would like to have the dollars expended, as has been said over and over again on this floor, but if this new power that has been discovered in the Constitution, and which I have called the money power, is to become recognized as properly belonging to our scheme of Government, then I doubt not that the Senators will have more occasions than they think to exercise their powers of resistance to gifts that are accompanied with degrading conditions, but of which no refusal will be allowed or taken.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator deny that the power to appropriate money by the General Government outside of the subsequent limitations of the power—I use the word "subsequent" to designate what follows the first clause—is not now followed in the settled practice of this Government, the practice of every day and every Congress?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do deny that there is any settled practice while there is a constant protest against that practice. I deny that there is any precedent established by the former history of this country, which we here to-day have the right to protest against, that can be referred to as authority binding upon my conscience or upon yours.

Mr. GEORGE. Is not money appropriated to maintain the Geological Survey?

Mr. GRAY. I might name a great many things in that category that the Senator refers to with so much unction; but whether I choose to answer such instances in detail or not does not affect the argument I am now making.

There are others who entertain the views I am combating, distinguished, earnest, and influential members of this body, and of the same political faith as the Senator from New Hampshire. He is not singular by any means in the beliefs he entertains. I referred awhile ago to the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in the debate in the Congress to which the report of the Senator from New Hampshire from which I have read a choice sentence or two was made. I have adverted to the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts did not dissent from the propositions of that report, and used language which I could not quote exactly, as I could not lay my hand on the record; but I have it now, and here is what the distinguished Senator said:

> If it be a matter of national concern to provide by national authority that the American people shall be fit in intelligence for a republican government; if we have the right, as we have the right to defend this Constitution in war, to defend it against the greater danger of ignorance in cases where the local instrumentalities, through their own misfortune or through theirown fault, are unable to do it, then this bill is an exertion by national authority of a proper national constitutional function.

It is hardly necessary to remark that when a duty is imposed by the Constitution on the General Government its exercise does not require the assent of the States. My design in citing the opinion of these distinguished Senators and leaders of their party is not now to combat their views or denounce the doctrine of the old Federalist school to which they belong, but to call attention to the danger that lies in the acceptance by the States, from such a quarter, of the aid offered in this bill. There are conditions accompanying the gift, as it is called, which are sufficient now to hand over the practical control of the schools to the Federal Government, but are there any so fond as to believe that when once a foothold is obtained by Federal power for the management of this important function of the State, that new demands will not be made upon the States to surrender more completely their schools to the supervision and control of the Government?

And this demand may come long before the expiration of the eight years provided for in this bill. It may come next year or the year after. What moral tonic do Senators propose to administer to their people that will enable them to resist the debilitating effects of pecuniary dependence? The temptation will again and again be presented to the people of the States as their powers of resistance become enfeebled. If we find the blandishments of the money power of this great central Government, rich in the spoils of unnecessary and unjust taxation of the people, so alluring now, what will be their potency when presented to peoples debauched with their own gold and enervated by the habit of dependence? No, sir; they will be powerless to refuse the imposition of new conditions to their further enjoyment of this rich subsidy, which will have been coming without effort or sacrifice on their part.

A new Congress will more easily than now buy a new surrender, a further abdication of the functions of the State. And I venture to predict that before five years have rolled away we will have a complicated Federal school system in all the States, with superintendents of education in each State appointed here in Washington, the teachers appointed or their appointments supervised by Federal authority, schoolbooks prescribed, and all the features of Prussian bureau government fully developed.

Obsta principiis is a maxim as wise as it is ancient. Oppose the beginnings of this new crusade under the old Federalist banner against the rights of the States. Do not trust to the specious and ingenious reasoning which has discovered a power of appropriation as a distinct and substantive grant of power to Congress. Let us listen rather to the teaching of Jefferson, who from the shades of Monticello on June 16, 1817, with the ripened judgment of a mind unclouded by ambition or passion, for his long career of public service was then all behind him, wrote thus to Albert Gallatin:

> You will have learned that an act for internal improvement, after passing both Houses, was negatived by the President. The act was founded, avowedly, on the principle that the phrase in the Constitution which authorizes Congress "to lay taxes to pay the debts and provide for the general welfare," was an extension of the powers specifically enumerated to whatever would promote the general welfare; and this, you know, was the Federal doctrine. Whereas our tenet ever was, and, indeed, it is almost the only landmark which now divides the Federalists from the Republicans, that Congress had not unlimited powers to provide for the general welfare, but were restrained to those specifically enumerated, and that, as it was never meant they should provide for that welfare but by the exercise of the enumerated powers, so it could not have been meant they should raise money for purposes which the enumeration did not place under their action.

That was Mr. Jefferson's opinion on the power of appropriation which has been so much refined about in this argument.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the date of that?

Mr. GRAY. June 16, 1817. Mr. Jefferson never for a moment entertained the idea that there was any power in the Constitution to do such a thing as this bill contemplates.

But the advocates of the bill say that it is demanded by the startling and alarming condition of illiteracy obtaining in the old slave States; that it is necessary "to preserve the nation;" that the power to pass this bill is the power of self-preservation and the right to save the life of the nation.

How absurd is all this in the face of the facts? Those States have grown from thirteen to thirty-eight, and population has increased from three to fifty millions, and wealth in a greater proportion, until we are the foremost nation in the world in power, intelligence, and natural resources. With this remarkable growth the common-school system of the several States has kept pace. That generous rivalry and competition among the States to which we owe so much, of which I spoke awhile ago, has produced this result. The States most backward are advancing to the front, and illiteracy, even where most prevalent on account of the newly-enfranchised slaves, is rapidly disappearing. Where, then, is this appalling danger which is to fright us from propriety and sense of constitutional obligation?

The lately seceded States have passed through the darkest period of their depression, and are now building up their waste places and displaying powers of recuperation that are the admiration of the world. All the functions of statehood are again in active operation. Thrown back on their own resources, they have asserted the highest qualities of American citizenship and are working out their own salvation, and will continue to work it out if let alone. The great principle of local self-government as displayed in the States of this Union, has never failed to vindicate itself, and we need not to fear that it ever will fail to do so.

What are the facts which are the excuse for all these hysterical and exaggerated statements of dangers that menace our future? Why, simply that the census shows that in the late slave States, owing to the enfranchisement of the colored people, mostly those who had been slaves, an enormous mass of illiteracy was thrust into political power. This was the real danger that menaced our future twenty years ago. And gentlemen who are advocating this bill might well then have paused and appreciated the danger, and delayed the conferrence of the suffrage until this illiteracy was removed. But that burden was placed on those States, and the party in power did not so much as touch it with its little finger. Happily, and thank God, that danger is largely passed. The adults who came out of the old state of things compose the mass of illiterates, and for them this bill has and can have no provision. That percentage of illiteracy is passing away with the generation that was on the stage fifteen or twenty years ago, and the illiterates whom this bill will affect are those who will always be with us North and South alike—I mean the children between the ages of five or six and eighteen or twenty. Does any Senator pretend to say that there is any alarming disproportion between the Northern and Southern States as to the illiteracy of the children? In the nature of things it can not be. And the figures obtainable prove that it is not so. I submit the tables prepared by the heads of the educational department in certain States, at the instance of the New York Evening Post. These show the percentage of school population enrolled as scholars in each of the States named, and the percentage of average daily attendance.

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Maine | 69 | 68 | 104 | $7.75 |
| New Hampshire | 64 | 71 | 100 | 9.63 |
| Vermont | 72 | 68 | 126 | 8.37 |
| Delaware | 77 | 61 | 157 | 6.88 |
| Maryland | 55 | 51 | 182 | 10.09 |
| Virginia | 52 | 57 | 120 | 4.59 |
| West Virginia | 73 | 61 | 100 | 5.99 |
| Missouri | 68 | 75 | 113 | 8.13 |
| Texas | 79 | ..... | 100 | 6.78 |
| Florida | 93 | 73 | 90 | 5.37 |
| Tennessee | 61 | 59 | 78 | 2.73 |
| Minnesota | 62 | 45 | 112 | 12.63 |
| Kansas | 74 | 68 | 115 | 9.50 |
| Nebraska | 66 | 60 | 120 | 13.39 |
| Alabama | 56 | 62 | 83 | 2.30 |
| Mississippi | 60 | 58 | 77½ | 3.01 |
| South Carolina | 63 | 69 | 70 | 2.41 |
| North Carolina | 56 | 62 | 62 | 2.12 |
| Georgia | 57 | 66 | 65 | 2.12 |
| Kentucky | 49 | 63 | 102 | 2.48 |
| Arkansas | 48 | ..... | ..... | 3.67 |
| Louisiana | 19 | 69 | 102 | 4.24 |
| Maine, 1860-'70 | 60 | 78 | 99 | 5.05 |
| New Hampshire, 1860-'70 | 85 | 65 | 97 | 4.01 |
| Vermont, 1860-'70 | 78 | 64 | 119 | 5.06 |

So there is not enough difference to talk about between the percentages of children of school age who attend school North and South. Indeed, the percentage of children of school age enrolled in the State of Florida, 93, is far above that of any Northern State. We are now dealing with the only class who can be reached by this bill, not with illiterate adults, most of them born in slavery and passing away with the generation to which they belong, and hopelessly beyond the reach of any educational system, State or national. Yet it is this class of adult illiterates which swells the census reports, and on which is based the proportion that is to govern the distribution of this magnificent appropriation out of the common Treasury to and among the States.

What warrant in the Constitution, in fair dealing, or in precedent for thus taxing the people of one State for the benefit of another? Why should money be taken from the people of Maine or Massachusetts or Minnesota to be given to the people of Texas to cure an illiteracy of the children of that State not greater in proportion to population than exists in the States just named?

Taking States nearly equal in population, we find that the aggregate of the sums appropriated by this bill for eight years will at the end of that period have been distributed thus: West Virginia, with a population of 618,457, will get $1,057,893, and Maine, with a population of 648,936, only $274,708. Georgia, with a population of 1,542,180, will get $6,448,482, while Michigan, with a population of 1,636,937, will get only $789,592. Minnesota, with a population of nearly 800,000, gets only $428,000, while South Carolina, with a population of 990,000, will get $4,582,792.

I would call the attention of Southern men to the fact, which was made so plain by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], that for every dollar received by them under this bill, they will have to pay two in the shape of indirect taxes. Florida, with a population of 269,493, gets $993,548, while Rhode Island, with a population of 276,531, gets $307,210, and Vermont, with a population of 332,286, gets only $196,236. And yet Florida, as shown by the table to which I have referred, has 93 per cent. of her children of school age enrolled, and 73 per cent. average attendance—a higher ratio than either of the other States. And, to display the inequity of the proposition still further, I quote from the last message of Governor Perry, of Florida, to the State Legislature, which convened in April last. After stating that the public debt had been decreased by $126,800 during the past two years, and that the taxable property had during the same period increased from $60,000,000 to $76,641,409, he goes on to say:

The cause of education and public schools in our State has kept pace with, if not outrun, our material progress.

Again he says that—

In the matter of public schools Florida is fast taking rank with some of the foremost States.

All hail to Florida! I honor her noble sons and daughters who are willing to endure the sacrifice and make the exertion to accomplish these magnificent results. They do not need any help. They have asserted their self-reliance and manhood, and illustrated anew the capacity of our American system of local self-government to answer its great ends, and shame and confusion be on the efforts to take one leaf from her well-earned crown of American statehood.

But what of the States of Vermont and Rhode Island, with nearly equal population, who get of this just about one-ninth or one-eighth as much as Florida, who bear their own burdens of taxation for the education of their own children? On what just ground shall these toiling masses be asked to contribute of their hard-earned dollars to support a school system for the children of Florida? Is this an equal administration of the great powers of this Government, or one that is demanded by any considerations of justice? Is it such a dealing with the common funds of all the people as they all and singular have the right to demand? Is it not forbidden by those principles which control the relation of the States to the Federal Government, and a violation of the fundamental maxims that in our American systems at least lie at the foundation of all just taxing laws?

We are the trustees of an express trust, and have no right to thus prefer one cestui que trust to another.

The financial ability of those Southern States to meet and grapple successfully with the question of education has been, I submit, misrepresented. They are making, as all know, marvelous growth in material prosperity, and the new generation that has come on since the war have felt the stimulus of necessity and have seized with rare energy and courage the opportunities that the abundant natural resources of their States have presented. They have, indeed, "set their faces toward the morning," and the new South, with the lusty strength of a young giant, has responded to the quickening impulse of restored freedom and local self-government, so long in abeyance.

What more magnificent illustration of the beneficence of this great American principle? Pause, and pause long, I beseech you, before you thrust these States back from the high and gloriously-earned plane of self-sufficient statehood to the enervating vassalage of pecuniary dependence. Look at the facts and say whether there is anything in the work done and being done on an increasing scale by these States in the support of common schools to justify this extraordinary and extra-constitutional measure.

In support of the general position I am taking, I read the following article from the New York Evening Post:

The vital question is whether the South is now herself educating her children so that they will not be illiterates when they grow up. Advocates of the Blair bill always insist that it is not, because the South does not have as good schools as cities in the North have. The Evening Post has pointed out that the proper comparison is with thinly settled agricultural States, like Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, and has shown that illiteracy has been avoided in these New England States by a school system no better than that which many Southern States already have, and which the others will soon have at their present rate of progress. It was a great surprise to Northern people when we demonstrated that a number of Southern States keep their children in school more days in the year than New Hampshire does hers; but the truth is at last accepted, even by New Hampshire, and the Concord Monitor, last April, told its readers that "New Hampshire has less schooling than Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, or Missouri"—to which it should have added Texas and Kentucky, while Florida and two or three others are within a few days of the New Hampshire average. In like manner the Monitor might have shown that a larger percentage of the children of school age are enrolled in the public schools of some Southern States than in New Hampshire, while even South Carolina, which has the largest proportion of negroes, falls only a trifle behind New Hampshire in this respect.

I refer Senators also to the significant statements of General S. C. Armstrong, which I read from the Lynchburgh Virginian of January 9:

A CHANGE OF FRONT.

General S. C. Armstrong, principal of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, who was formerly an earnest advocate of the Blair educational bill, has changed his opinion as to the practicability of Federal aid to education in the South, and now comes out against the proposition. In his nineteenth annual report of the operations of the Hampton School, General Armstrong says:

"Many have looked to Government aid as the only relief. I long had that feeling, but since the marvelous educational progress of Virginia and other Southern States, my opinion has changed. The argument for national educational aid for the ex-slave States has unquestionably weakened. * * *

"I believe that two millions, or perhaps more, of our negro population have still very inadequate school privileges, are wretchedly taught, if at all, and are suffering terribly from mental and moral darkness, helpless victims of others' avarice and of their own ignorance. We should hasten to help them. Can it be done? National aid is certainly of doubtful wisdom, if it must extend to all for the sake of reaching these, for it might do more harm than good. I do not believe in the "Blair bill" as a wholesome measure, and indeed do not see how the needed aid can now be given, the crying evils remedied, by any national measure. Every year, however, will brighten the outlook. The educational progressive movement at the South is, I believe, the most marvelous and the grandest fact or feature in this century of American life."

As showing also the effect on reflective minds of the longer consideration of the policy of this measure, I ask to have read the following letter from A. P. Marble, superintendent of the public schools in Worcester, Mass.:

Massachusetts and the Blair bill.—A leading educator declares that the people do not favor the scheme.

To the Editor of the Evening Post:

SIR: I was at first favorable to national aid to Southern schools in some form, but the more I watched the educational sentiment and the activity of the new South, and the more I reflected upon the history of assistance from large funds—instance, the pernicious effect of the Connecticut Western Reserve school fund—the more I came to doubt the wisdom of Federal aid.

In the first place, the people of the South have awakened to the necessity of public education; and they are at work actively and successfully in the right direction. It is only through this public, active interest that a good system of schools can be either established or maintained.

Secondly, the people of the Southern States are as able to establish their schools as any of the new Western States have been, or are to-day, and as well able also as any of the older States were at the beginning. The argument that those States formerly slave are poorer than they were before the war, by the value of the slave, is fallacious, since a free man is worth more, and not less, than a slave to any community.

Thirdly, I feel sure that a large distribution of money from the surplus in the Treasury would not all find its way into the school rooms, but would be to a large extent frittered away in the course of the distribution; and that instead of a healty emulation to see who will do best in establishing schools of their own, and thus attracting business and population, as they do in the West and are doing in the South, there will arise a pernicious strife to see who can gobble up the largest share of the loaves and fishes.

Lastly, I oppose this move, as I do other innovations of similar injurious character, on the general principle that in this country it is the duty and the privilege of the individual to provide for himself and take care of himself; and it is not the duty of the Government to act the fond parent towards the people of this country. If the people can not take care of themselves, and if the Government must then take care of them, we reduce ourselves to an absurdity, since the Government is nothing but the expression of the people's will.

There is no foundation for the statement that the people of Massachusetts favor this bill. They have never expressed themselves. People actively interested in the measure have indeed secured the passage of "resolutions" committing, apparently, large bodies of influential citizens in its favor. This is so only in appearance. To illustrate: The Massachusetts Teachers' Association met in the fall of 1886. This subject was not discussed by the 800 or 1,000 members at all. But at a meeting of the directors the last day, near the close of the meeting, when all but a dozen or twenty had left the hall, some one introduced a resolution in favor of national aid. Objection was made that the subject had not been discussed, and that the few remaining members were not authorized to act in this matter for the association. I have forgotten whether or not the resolution was adopted. If so, it represents nothing but the hasty opinion of a majority of a dozen or two of men.

Last Saturday there was a meeting of the directors of the American Institute of Instruction, a New England body of great antiquity. An indorsing resolution was introduced and lost by a vote of 16 to 11. Subsequently, after a large part of the membership had gone home, it was brought up again and carried against a vigorous protest. This resolution will doubtless be paraded to do duty as the expression of the American Institute of Instruction. That body has not spoken at all; for the directors, even if they had been unanimous, have not been authorized to act in this matter; and what they may say carries with it only the weight which the movers have as individuals.

The department of superintendence of the National Educational Association, composed of State, county, and city superintendents from, generally, three-fourths of the States in the Union, met in Washington last February. This subject was assigned to an evening discussion. The programme was made out, and all the time was occupied by the speakers—selected in advance because they approved the measure in almost, if not quite, every case. No free expression of opinion was had. But at the close, in a promiscuous audience, the resolution was presented and declared adopted. There is no other evidence that it expressed the opinion of the members of that body.

No one has the right to say that the teachers of Massachusetts favor the Blair bill, or any other bill on that subject. And the people of the State have not expressed themselves on the question.

Yours truly,

A. P. MARBLE.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS,
Worcester, Mass., January 9.

Let us not hear after this showing anything more of the extraordinary emergency arising from the inability of the Southern States to deal with the illiteracy of their people. I do not believe that the self-respecting and intelligent people of those States would hear without a blush the appeals in formâ pauperis made in their behalf.

Mr. President, there is in truth and reality no occasion for all this talk about the safety of the Republic being menaced by either the illiteracy of the Southern States or their helpless poverty. Southern Senators, I know, would resent these imputations on their States did they not believe that their people demanded of them not to stand in the way of this magnificent subsidy.

No, sir; the real danger lies in another quarter. It is the harmony of our dual system of government and the experiment of self-government by the States that are really menaced by a danger which threatens all alike—the States that pay as well as those that receive.

Mr. President, I believe myself to be as good a friend of education and the common schools as the Senator from New Hampshire. They have grown up and expanded under the benign influence of our systems of local self-government as they have done nowhere else in the world. While educating the mental faculties they have also taught the responsibilities and duties of citizenship by the efforts and sacrifices necessary to their support. They are valued because they are attained by effort and sacrifice. Who shall say that a hardier manhood and a higher conception of citizenship have not been the result of leaving this matter to the States?

Let it so remain. Teach the children the history of their country, and imbue them with the spirit of her institutions. Let this Constitution be carried in the memory of every child that goes out from the portals of a common school. Let him be taught that the Government that it establishes is as strong in its limitations as it is in its powers; that the structure reared by our fathers, that has withstood the shock of foreign war and the tempest of civil strife, will survive to protect them and their children's children so long, and only so long, as they are true to the principles on which it is founded, and the genius of its structure.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I do not design, of course, at this time to enter upon any reply to the Senator from Delaware, or to any other Senator who has addressed this body against the bill under consideration. I wish merely to place on record the statement of fact that the Southern States contain more than 20,000,000 people, more than one-third of the population of this country. The latest, and, so far as I can judge, the most reliable, statistics of the amount of expenditure in the whole country for the support of the public schools fixes that amount at about $102,000,000, of which $17,000,000 is the highest estimate I have seen as being expended in the Southern States, where over 20,000,000 of the 60,000,000 of our population reside. In regard to the other statistics from the New York Evening Post, presented by the Senator, I shall at the proper time have something to offer.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 16, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 13, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL, ALASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of an appropriation to pay Barton Atkins, United States marshal of Alaska, for expenses incurred in guarding the Chinese quarters in Juneau, Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT F. ARNOLD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of an estimate to pay Robert F. Arnold for services in prosecuting mail-robbers in the district court at Graham, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BUREAU OF LABOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Labor, submitting an increased estimate of appropriations for rent of buildings for that bureau for the fiscal year 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NEWTON M'COY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of an appropriation to pay Newton McCoy for services and expenses as counsel for the United States in the prosecution of fraudulent timber-land entries; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES CONSUL, MANILA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with inclosures, an estimate of the Secretary of State for salary to the consul of the United States at Manila, Philippine Islands, and for clerk-hire at the same post; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL-EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported a bill (H. R. 4881) making an appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural-experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HATCH. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill shall come back to-morrow from the Government Printing Office, I will ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole for its consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know what the bill is, but reserve all points of order upon it.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. FRENCH until Monday, on account of important business.

DUTY ON SCIENTIFIC AND EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask unanimous consent to present a petition of the faculty of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., asking that the import duty be taken off all scientific and educational books. I ask that the petition be read, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The petition will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The petition was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. Why should not this petition take the usual course of petitions, and go into the petition-box? I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports of bills of a private nature.

BENJAMIN M. SIMPSON.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 48) for the relief of Benjamin M. Simpson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calandar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SALE OF INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1406) to provide for the sale of certain Indian lands in Kansas.

The SPEAKER. This is a public bill, but if there be no objection the report will be received.

There was no objection; and the bill was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLOTTE CAROLINE HACKLEMAN.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 120) for the relief of Charlotte Caroline Hackleman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY C. KNIGHT.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 440) granting a pension to Mary C. Knight; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELIZA L. MACE.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 263) granting a pension to Mrs. Eliza L. Mace; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. P. L. WARD.

Mr. GAINES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 611) for the relief of Mrs. P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FOURTH REGIMENT IOWA INFANTRY.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1387) for the relief of volunteers of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STEPHEN M. HONEYCUTT.

Mr. BROWER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 481) for the relief of Stephen M. Honeycutt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEVI JONES.

Mr. BROWER also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 482) for the relief of Levi Jones; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports of a private nature is completed.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me for a moment? I wish to ask unanimous consent to allow the consideration at this time of the bill relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class mail matter.

Mr. LANHAM. Is the bill likely to create discussion?

Mr. BLOUNT. I think not. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. Its passage is desired by the Department, and I trust the gentleman from Texas will allow it to come up for consideration at this time.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his motion for the present, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] asks unanimous consent to take up for consideration at this time the bill the title of which will be read.

PERMISSIBLE MARKS ON POSTAL MATTER.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes."

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to inquire how much time the consideration of this bill will take.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not answer that question. It is a bill recommended by the Department and unanimously reported by the committee. I have no doubt the gentleman from Pennsylvania has considered it as we all have, and I think it will not take up much time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That mailable matter of the second class shall contain no writing, print, or sign thereon or therein in addition to the original print, except as herein provided, to wit, the name and address of the person to whom the matter shall be sent; index figures of subscription book, either printed or written; the printed title of the publication and the place of its publication; the printed or written name and address, without addition of advertisement, of the publisher or sender, or both, and written or printed words or figures, or both, indicating the date on which the subscription to such matter will end; the correction of any typographical error; a mark, except by written or printed words, to designate a word or passage to which it is desired to call attention; the words "sample copy," when the matter is sent as such; the words "marked copy," when the matter contains a marked item or article; and publishers or news agents may inclose in their publications bills, receipts, and orders for subscription thereto, but the same shall be in such form as to convey no other information than the name, place of publication, subscription price of the publication to which they refer, and the subscription due thereon. Upon matter of the third class, or upon the wrapper inclosing the same, the sender may write his own name, occupation, and residence or business address, preceded by the word "from," and may make marks other than by written or printed words to call attention to any word or passage in the text, and may correct any typographical errors. There may be placed upon the blank leaves or cover of any book or printed matter of the third class a simple manuscript dedication or inscription not of the nature of a personal correspondence. Upon the wrapper of third-class matter may be printed any matter mailable as third class, but there must be left on the address side or face a space or face of at least 3½ inches in length and 2½ inches in width on which nothing shall be placed but the name and address of the person to whom the matter is sent. With a package of fourth-class matter, prepaid at the proper rate for that class, the sender may inclose any mailable third-class matter, and may write upon the wrapper or cover thereof, or tag or label accompanying the same, his name, occupation, residence or business address, preceded by the word "from," or may print thereon the same, and any printed matter not in the nature of a personal correspondence, but there must be left on the address side or face of the package a space of at least 3½ inches in length and 2½ inches in width in which nothing shall be placed but the address of the person to whom the matter is sent. In all cases directions for delivery, forwarding, or return shall be deemed part of the address.

SEC. 2. That matter of the second, third, or fourth class containing any writing or printing in addition to the original matter, other than as authorized in the preceding section, shall not be admitted to the mails, nor delivered, except upon payment of postage for matter of the first class, deducting therefrom any amount which may have been prepaid by stamps affixed; and any person who shall conceal or inclose any matter of a higher class in that of a lower class, and deposit or cause the same to be deposited for conveyance by mail, at a less rate than would be charged for both such higher and lower class matter, shall for every such offense be liable to a penalty of $10.

The SPEAKER. The bill is reported with amendments which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, line 24, after the word "wrapper," add the words "or envelope."

In the same line, after the word "same," add the words "or the tag or label attached thereto."

In line 33, after the word "wrapper," add the words "or envelope."

In the same line, after the word "matter," add the words "or the tag or label attached thereto."

In line 35, strike out the words "or face."

In line 36, after the word "space," insert the words "sufficient for a legible address and necessary stamps;" and strike out the words "or face of at least 3½ inches in length and 2½ inches in width, on which nothing shall be placed but the name and address of the person to whom the matter is sent."

In line 45, after the word "from," insert "and any marks, numbers, names, or letters for purpose of description."

In line 49, after the word "space," insert the words "sufficient for a legible address and necessary stamps;" and strike out these words: "of at least 3½ inches in length and 2½ inches in width, in which nothing shall be placed but the address of the person to whom the matter is sent."

In line 53, after the word "for," insert the word "transit."

In line 54, after the word "address," insert the words "and the Postmaster-General shall prescribe suitable regulations for carrying this section into effect."

In section 2, line 7, after the word "affixed," insert the words "unless by direction of the Postmaster-General such postage shall be remitted."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk to have read to the House sections 22 and 23 of the act which prescribes the writing, printing, and other marks which may be placed upon mail matter of the second, third, and fourth classes. After the House shall have heard those sections read it will be easier to explain the reasons for this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. That mailable matter of the second class shall contain no writing, print, mark, or sign, thereon or therein, in addition to the original print, except as herein provided, to wit, the name and address of the person to whom the matter shall be sent, and index figures of subscription book, either written or printed, the printed title of the publication, the printed name and address of the publisher or sender of the same, and written or printed words or figures, or both, indicating the date on which the subscription to such matter will end.

Upon matter of the third class, or upon the wrapper inclosing the same, the sender may write his own name or address thereon, with the word "from" above and preceding the same, and in either case may make simple marks intended to designate a word or passage of the text to which it is desired to call attention. There may be placed upon the cover or blank leaves of any book or any printed matter of the third class a simple manuscript dedication or inscription that does not partake of the nature of a personal correspondence. Upon any package of matter of the fourth class the sender may write or print his own name and address, preceded by the word "from," and there may also be written or printed the number and names of the articles inclosed; and the sender thereof may write or print upon or attach to any such articles, by tag or label, a mark, number, name, or letter for the purpose of identification.

SEC. 23. That matter of the second, third, or fourth class containing any writing or printing other than indicated in the preceding section, or made in the manner other than therein indicated, shall not be delivered except upon the payment of postage for matter of the first class, deducting therefrom any amount which may have been prepaid by stamps affixed to such matter; and any person who shall conceal or inclose any matter of a higher class, and deposit or cause the same to be deposited for conveyance by mail, at a less rate than would be charged for both such higher and lower class matter, shall, for every such offense, be liable to a penalty of $10: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent publishers of the second class and news agents from inclosing in their publications, bills, receipts, and orders for subscription thereto; but such bills, receipts, and orders shall be in such form as to convey no other information than the name, location, and subscription price of the publication or publications to which they refer.

Mr. BLOUNT. The House will observe the terms of the statute and will see that there is great particularity in prescribing what may be put upon the wrappers and envelopes of second, third, and fourth class matter and what may be placed therein. There have been heretofore regulations in conflict with the statute. There have been practices in conflict with it. It did not, however, lie in the power of a Department recognizing the authority of law over it to provide relief for any cases of hardship which had been ignored by the law-making power. I wish at this point to call attention to the definition of the several classes of matter to which this bill relates. Matter of the second class, which is entitled to the pound rate, consists of newspapers or periodicals sent from offices of publication or by news agents for distribution to subscribers, or for sale. The cheap rate of 1 cent a pound is charged in such cases. When otherwise transmitted, matter of this class must pay at the rate of 1 cent for four ounces. Matter of the third class comprises documents, circulars, printed matter, proof sheets and accompanying manuscript copy, and the rate is 1 cent for two ounces or 8 cents for one pound. Matter of the fourth class is all such as is admissible to the mails and not within the other classes; chiefly goods, merchandise, and samples of goods. The rate for this class of matter is 1 cent per ounce or 16 cents per pound. It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that second-class matter is carried at an exceedingly low rate, and that exact conformity to the provisions of the statute in relation to such matter was absolutely necessary in order to avoid a large reduction of revenue.

In reference to the inclosure of any third-class matter in matter of the fourth class, it is observed by the Postmaster-General that there can be no objection to this, because the matter inclosed would thereby pay a higher rate. Still it appears that by the express terms of the statute this is not now allowable. So likewise in regard to merchandise, advertisements and directions for use printed on the same are not allowable under the statute. The Postmaster-General, commenting upon this, says:

The law appears to go upon the theory that advertisements ought not to be permitted upon third or fourth class parcels. I am not able to discern any sound objection to this privilege, if the advertisement be so limited as to leave a sufficient space for the address, for post-marking and rating, and for reforwarding or return addresses. Such printing adds nothing of burden to the mails, and can not be thought to limit their employment otherwise. More probably it increases it.

In reference to violations of the statute, however, he says:

It appears that envelopes have been frequently printed by those who habitually send circulars or merchandise samples, with advertisements ranging from simple additions to the sender's name descriptive of his business pursuits, to very elaborate representations, sometimes pictorially illustrated; and that wrappers of merchandise samples occasionally bore printed communications as explicit in direction as could be desirable in a written personal communication to accompany them, and such as would dispense with necessity for any other first-class correspondence in that connection.

Here is where the complaint comes:

The suspension of the use of these prepared envelopes and wrappers rendered them temporarily valueless for their objects, and caused much annoyance and irritation with those who had been in the practice of using them.

This "practice of using them" is, by reference to the statute, clearly unlawful.

Appeals from postmasters to the Department have presented almost every aspect of these cases. Some are exceedingly trivial in so far as real importance attaches to the added matter, but many are obviously abuses, and between the two extremes the range of transgression extends over innumerable different instances. The majority of wrappers appear very harmless, and no injury to the revenue or the service can be likely to result from their use. With few exceptions all would have been admitted if any rightful power to dispense with the statute were vested in the Department. The want of it has been somewhat painful, because it would have relieved substantially all complaint could the use of only such envelopes and wrappers as had been already prepared have been authorized, the public generally manifesting no unwillingness to comply with the requirements of the law. No such authority could be discovered, nor any line be drawn other than that drawn by the explicit statute, and the Department has been compelled to inaction, except to relieve from penalties in some proper cases.

With the view of meeting these objections, the original bill contained several provisions to which I will call attention; and to these, amendments, which are printed in italics, have been added by the committee.

In line 8 of the bill the words "and the place of its publication," are an addition to the statute. In line 9, after the word "printed" have been inserted the words "or written." After the word "address," in the same line, there have been inserted the words "without addition of advertisement." In lines 12 and 13, the words "the correction of any typographical error" have been inserted. In lines 15 and 16 there has been this insertion, "the words 'sample copy' when the matter is sent as such." The practice of placing upon this class of matters the words "sample copy" has grown up under a regulation of the Department, but is contrary to the statute; and it has been thought proper by the Department that these words should be inserted in order that there may be no room for criticism on this point. The same remark may be made in regard to this addition, "the words 'marked copy' when the matter contains a marked item or article."

In line 24 the words "or envelope" are an addition made by the committee to the bill. In lines 24 and 25 the words "or tag or label attached thereto" are an amendment of the committee. This modification is in the nature of an addition to the privileges allowed under the existing law. In lines 25 and 26 the words "occupation and residence or business address" have been added. Heretofore the sender has been allowed simply to write his own name and address.

In line 29 there have been added the words "and may correct any typographical errors." This has been a matter of practice, but without authority of law. In lines 33 to 36 the following provision is new:

Upon the wrapper or envelope of third-class matter or the tag or label attached thereto may be printed any matter mailable as third-class, but there must be left on the address side a space sufficient for a legible address and necessary stamps.

The following, in lines 40 to 44 inclusive, is also new:

With a package of fourth-class matter prepaid at the proper rate for that class, the sender may inclose any mailable third-class matter, and may write upon the wrapper or cover thereof, or tag or label accompanying the same, his name, occupation, residence, or business address.

In lines 45 and 46 there have been inserted the words "and any marks, numbers, names, or letters for purpose of description." This is an amendment to the bill as originally introduced, but corresponds with the existing law. The words immediately following, "or may print thereon the same or any printed matter not in the nature of a personal correspondence," are also new.

Further on we have an addition in this clause:

But there must be left on the address side or face of the package a space sufficient for a legible address and necessary stamps.

The original bill, it will be observed, proposed to fix by law the space allowed for this purpose, which was to be determined with reference to the size of the packages in which merchandise might be contained. The committee thought it best to insert this provision, allowing the matter to be regulated by the Postmaster-General.

In lines 54 to 56 the committee have amended the bill by inserting these words:

And the Postmaster-General shall prescribe suitable regulations for carrying this section into effect.

This is designed to cover the whole subject of space.

Section 2, which has been read, contains an amendment to this effect: That where mail-matter has been improperly inserted under cover, the effect of which would be to defraud the Government, it may be delivered to the person to whom it is addressed upon payment by him in stamps at the highest rate. In the following terms there is a provision for remission in certain cases:

Unless by direction of the Postmaster-General such postage shall be remitted.

This, sir, covers, as I understand it, the whole ground of complaint throughout the country. It places the legislation in accord with the practice before the recent rulings. Unless some gentleman desires to be heard, I shall ask the previous question on the bill and amendments. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard?

Mr. BINGHAM. A few words.

Mr. BLOUNT. How long?

Mr. BINGHAM. Five minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will yield the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. DINGLEY. I was not able to catch, from the reading of the bill, exactly what it does provide. I desire, therefore, to ask the gentleman whether by this bill, which relates to the sending of fourth-class matter, the sender is allowed to write his name and address on the wrapper.

Mr. LONG. The bill is printed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have not yet received a copy of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to ask whether by this bill the sender of fourth-class matter is allowed to write on the wrapper his name, residence, and business.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, yes.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no question about that.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all. The sender is permitted to write his name, address, and business.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am sure had the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] in charge of the bill been heard on this side of the House there would be no necessity for any further discussion of this proposed legislation. While I take exception to the ruling of the Department under the statute of 1879, I wish to say that the Postmaster-General, at the first opportunity, in presenting his report to Congress, certified his willingness from his standpoint of consideration to broaden and widen the legislation covering the second, third, and fourth class mail-matter. The proposition made in this bill is simply to have the effect of meeting the requirements of every business firm to send through the mails second, third, and fourth class matter; not only to write the name and address, but also the indication of the profession, occupation, or business of the sender.

The amendments of the gentleman from Georgia, contained in this bill, will also cover all the matter which, under the ruling of the Postmaster-General, has either been subjected to fine or rejected from the mail. The law now allows the indication upon the envelope, tag, or label of the name and address of the sender. This law broadens it, and allows the profession, occupation, and the business, and the indication of the contents of a third or fourth-class bundle or package.

This bill comes recommended by the Postmaster-General after careful revision of the law by the law officer of the Department. It embodies the substance of the bills presented by other gentlemen representing large constituencies who have felt the severity of the judgment of the Department. It comes with the unanimous consent of your Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and will cover the demand of every interest which seems to have been severely affected by the decision of the Postmaster-General. Therefore I hope the bill will pass without further debate.

Mr. NORWOOD. I desire to suggest an amendment to my colleague, to insert the word "knowingly" in the second section after the word "shall" and before the word "conceal." As it is, you impose penalty for a mistake where the party may not intend any violation of the law.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does my colleague suggest an amendment?

Mr. NORWOOD. Yes; I move to insert the word "knowingly" in the second section; so it will read: "no person who shall knowingly conceal or inclose any matter of a higher class in that of a lower," etc.

Mr. BLOUNT. I see no objection to my colleague's amendment.

Mr. NORWOOD. As the bill now stands, any one who may unwittingly inclose any matter which ought not to be inclosed is made subject to the penalty here provided.

Mr. PETERS. That is provided for by the words in the bill, leaving such matters to the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to taking a vote on my colleague's amendment, if he desires to have it voted on.

Mr. NORWOOD. Yes, I desire to have a vote on it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question.

The amendments of the committee were severally agreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment of Mr. NORWOOD; and it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before that motion is submitted I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. As our Calendar is paged it contains two lists of private bills. One of these contains the bills coming over from the last Congress, reported from the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act, and the other such bills as are reported from the committees of the House at this session. What I wish to inquire is, which class of bills will take precedence?

The SPEAKER. The bills will be taken up in the order in which they appear on the Calendar.

Under the provisions of what is known as the Bowman act, all reports from the Court of Claims upon matters referred to that court by the committees of the House, and not disposed of, are continued from Congress to Congress, and go over, standing first, as a matter of course, on the Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. But as the Calendar is printed the bills reported from the different committees of the House are put first.

The SPEAKER. Then the Calendar is wrong. These bills which came over from the last Congress will take precedence.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in saying that they come first. They are printed upon one page of the Calendar; but those which came over from the Forty-ninth Congress are under a separate heading on another page.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true; but I always read a book from left to right. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. On page 5 of the Calendar, as printed, the bills reported from committees of the House at the present session appear in the order in which they were reported to the House, and on page 6 will be found the bills which come over from the last Congress. This order of paging should be reversed. The reports which come over from the last Congress should be first considered.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar. The Clerk will read the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4956), Forty-ninth Congress, first session, to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to James H. Ayres, of Baltimore, Md., $945, being the amount due him upon a contract with the United States for expenses incurred in carrying out the same, as found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have the report of the Committee on Claims of the last session, together with the views of the minority, read on that bill.

The report (by Mr. SHAW) was read, as follows:

This case was, during the Forty-eighth Congress, referred by resolution of the House of Representatives, March 28, 1884, to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the act of March 3, 1883, commonly called the Bowman act. On the 11th of December, 1885, the court transmitted its findings of fact to the House, from which the following facts appear:

In the spring of 1862 a light-boat, belonging to the United States, and under the control of the Light-House Board, lay stranded at Lynnhaven Bay, about 160 miles south of Baltimore.

James H. Ayres, the claimant, and a resident of Baltimore, was a rigger and the owner and captain of the Exchange, a schooner of 75 tons burden, duly enrolled.

W. J. Newman was the acting engineer in charge of the light-house district, which embraced Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries, including Lynnhaven Bay.

Said Newman attempted to contract with several parties to go down to Lynnhaven Bay and remove from the beach the stranded light-boat. The lowest terms offered by others than the claimant amounted to $2,000.

He finally contracted with the claimant to undertake the work for $1,500.

In making this contract he represented to the claimant that the bottom where the light-boat was stranded was hard, and it was upon this representation that the claimant entered into the contract at that price.

The claimant collected the necessary apparatus, hired six riggers at $3 a day, and four other men at $1, sailed down to Lynnhaven Bay, and entered upon the work. The bottom, instead of being hard, as represented, was found to be composed of quicksand, in which the light-boat was deeply embedded. This quicksand was constantly moved about by the action of the waves and tides, and the labor of days was often obliterated in a single night. After working diligently for a long time they were compelled to give up the undertaking. The quicksand bottom was the cause of the failure.

Including the time occupied in going and returning, the claimant and his men were engaged upon the undertaking about three weeks.

During this period the claimant's daily expenses were as follows:

|---|---|
| Pay of six riggers, at $3 a day | $18 |
| Four other men, at $1 a day | 4 |
| Services of claimant, each day | 3 |
| Services of schooner and apparatus, each day | 20 |
| Total per day | 45 |

Making a total expense for twenty-one days of $945.

On these findings there is clearly no doubt that the claimant is fully entitled in equity and justice to be reimbursed the expenses actually incurred by him in the work in question. The object of the contract made by the engineer in charge of the district with this claimant was simply to preserve the public property by getting this light-boat from its stranded position into a place of safety. These light-boats are floating light-houses, quite as important in their positions to the safety of navigation as are the more permanent and expensive ones. The absence of any one of them from its accustomed and known position may occasion the destruction of thousands of dollars' worth of property and of any number of human lives, perhaps in a single night. It is of the last importance, therefore, to the safety of navigation that prompt measures be taken to place them in position when they have been disturbed or removed from their proper places. At no time was this of greater importance than in 1862, when the transactions in question occurred, at a time when it was extremely necessary for the numerous vessels engaged in the public service to have proper beacon-lights to guide them on their way. This claimant, it appears by the findings of the court, entered into a contract on terms 25 per cent. lower than anybody else could be induced to undertake the work; took the most prompt and vigorous measures at his own expense, for which he has hitherto remained without reimbursement, for carrying it out, and in every reasonable human probability would have succeeded in doing all he undertook to do but for the facts having been misrepresented to him (no doubt innocently) by the engineer. For a failure to perform the contract under such circumstances no possible fault can attach to the claimant. The contract was for the Government; it was made for a just and proper purpose, and there should be no hesitation in repaying to this claimant his actual expenses incurred in his effort to execute it. It would be unworthy the character of a great and generous Government, which has been so promptly and energetically served at a time of necessity, to refuse repayment of money thus advanced for its interest.

A copy of the findings of the Court of Claims is appended to this report.

Your committee therefore report back the bill H. R. 4956, and recommend that the same do pass.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS.

JAMES H. AYRES } vs. THE UNITED STATES. } Congressional Case No. 79.

CLERK'S OFFICE, Washington, December 11, 1885.

SIR: Pursuant to the order of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the said order and of the findings of fact by the court in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the House of Representatives under the act of March 3, 1883.

I am, very respectfully, yours, etc.,

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

JAMES H. AYRES vs. THE UNITED STATES. } Congressional Case No. 7[illegible].

At a Court of Claims, held in the city of Washington on the 27th day of April, A. D. 1885, in the cause aforesaid, the court filed findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy, duly certified, be reported to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, together with a copy of this order.

By the court.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

JAMES H. AYRES vs. THE UNITED STATES. } Congressional Case No. 79.

This case was transmitted to the Court of Claims by the authority of the House of Representatives, as appears by the following resolution, adopted March 28, 1884:

Mr. Holman submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the pending bill be referred to the Court of Claims, under the act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

This case having been heard by the court (George A. King appearing for the claimant, and the Attorney-General, by his assistant, F. H. Howe, for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States), the court, from the evidence, finds the facts to be as follows:

I.

In the spring of 1862 a light-boat, belonging to the United States and under the control of the Light-House Board, lay stranded at Lynnhaven Bay, about 160 miles south of Baltimore.

James H. Ayres, the claimant, and a resident of Baltimore, was a rigger and the owner and captain of the Exchange, a schooner of 75 tons burden, duly enrolled.

W. J. Newman was the acting engineer in charge of the light-house district which embraced Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries, including Lynnhaven Bay.

II.

Said Newman attempted to contract with several parties to go down to Lynnhaven Bay and remove from the beach the stranded light-boat. The lowest terms offered by others than the claimant amounted to $2,000.

He finally contracted with the claimant to undertake the work for $1,500.

In making this contract he represented to the claimant that the bottom where the light-boat was stranded was hard, and it was upon this representation that the claimant entered into the contract at that price.

III.

The claimant collected the necessary apparatus, hired six riggers at $3 a day and four other men at $1, sailed down to Lynnhaven Bay, and entered upon the work. The bottom, instead of being hard, as represented, was found to be composed of quicksand, in which the light-boat was deeply embedded. This quicksand was constantly moved about by the action of the waves and tides, and the labor of days was often obliterated in a single night. After working diligently for a long time they were compelled to give up the undertaking. The quicksand bottom was the cause of the failure.

IV.

Including the time occupied in going and returning, the claimant and his men were engaged upon the undertaking about three weeks.

During this period the claimants' daily expenses were as follows:

|---|---|
| Pay of six riggers, at $3 a day | $18 |
| Four other men, at $1 a day | 4 |
| Services of claimant, each day | 3 |
| Services of schooner and apparatus, each day | 20 |
| Total per day | 45 |

Making a total expense for twenty-one days of $945.

Ordered, That the clerk of the court transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a duly certified copy of these findings of fact and of this order.

COURT OF CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C.:

I certify that the forgoing are true transcripts of record.

Test this 11th day of December, 1885.

[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

This case has been before the Court of Claims for its findings of fact. The only finding of that court upon which any pretense of obligation on the part of the Government to pay this claim can be based is, that Acting Engineer Newman, representing the Government, "in making the contract, represented to the claimant that the bottom where the light-boat was stranded was hard, and it was upon this representation that the claimant entered into the contract at that price," and that "the bottom, instead of being hard, as represented, was found to be composed of quicksand, in which the light-boat was deeply embedded," which quicksand prevented the claimant from carrying out his contract. It does not appear but that the claimant had ample opportunity to examine the bottom for himself; certainly such examination was open to him. But if he relied upon this representation, and was deceived by it, and was the victim of a fraudulent representation made by the Government official, he had the right upon discovering the fraud, as he must have done, had any existed, upon arriving with his men upon the ground, to at once abandon the work. He chose not to do this, but, affirming his contract, kept on with his work for twenty-one days, and then abandoned the undertaking. Had he succeeded, and at a profit, no one doubts that it would have been the last of the matter. He took his chances, and lost.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can add anything to the facts beyond those which are embodied in the report accompanying this claim and which has just been read.

The claimant undertook this contract, or was induced to undertake it, upon the representation of Mr. Newman, the Government engineer in charge. He represented that the bottom where this boat was stranded was solid. It turned out to be composed of quicksand, whereby, as the report says, "the labor of days was obliterated in a single night."

The claim was referred to the Court of Claims in the Forty-eighth Congress for a finding of the facts, which findings were reported by that court to Congress for consideration.

If the gentleman from New Jersey, who signs the minority report, desires time, I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to have five or ten minutes, and a short time also for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], who also signed the minority report.

Mr. SHAW. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the case before us is simply this: A Government vessel stranded; proposals for floating her were advertised for, and the claimant was the successful bidder. He entered into the contract with the Government to float this vessel for a compensation of $1,500. He did not succeed in his undertaking. He abandoned the project, left the vessel lying where he found her, and comes to Congress for his compensation for such abandonment.

He comes up before the Court of Claims, and the only allegation which that court finds to be true in the case, or that looks at all towards any equitable obligation on the part of the Government to pay one penny to the claimant, is founded upon the fact that the Government engineer represented to him that the stranded vessel rested upon a solid bottom, whereas in fact she rested upon a quicksand.

The moment that man went there to execute his contract it was possible for him to ascertain whether that representation of the Government engineer was or was not correct. When he began to carry out his contract, or his attempt to carry it out, he could ascertain by five minutes' examination whether the bottom was hard sand or quicksand. He kept on at the work for some time, and then abandoned it, and the bill that is brought in here, which he desires the United States Government to pay, is for the service of wreckers, for the service of other men, for his own services at $3 per day, and for the services of a schooner and apparatus at the rate of $20 per day. He not only failed in his undertaking, but he desires the Government of the United States to pay him for that faliure.

The minority of the committee, in submitting its views, uses the following words:

> It does not appear but that the claimant had ample opportunity to examine the bottom for himself; certainly such examination was open to him. But if he relied upon this representation, and was deceived by it, and was the victim of a fraudulent representation made by the Government official, he had the right upon discovering the fraud, as he must have done had any existed, upon arriving with his men upon the ground, to at once abandon the work. He chose not to do this, but, affirming his contract, kept on with his work for twenty-one days, and then abandoned the undertaking.

He chose not to do this, but, proceeding to carry out his contract, kept on with his work for twenty-one days, and there is no pretense but what the bottom was just as much of a quicksand on the first day as it was on the twenty-first.

Mr. LONG. Is there any recommendation from the Department about this?

Mr. BUCHANAN. None whatever, and the Court of Claims only find the facts; and the minority of the committee say further that had he succeeded and had a profit no one doubts that would have been the last of the matter. He took his chances and lost—no, he lost so far as the Department was concerned, but he did not lose his chance to come into this House and endeavor through the medium of Congress to have the Government pay him for work he failed in doing.

Mr. LONG. Did the Government derive any benefit?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Government derived no benefit whatever. He left the vessel stranded as hard as on the day he undertook to remove her. His attempt was an utter and absolute failure in every respect; just as complete as I hope his attempt to obtain compensation from Congress will be. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I reserve that time.

Mr. SHAW. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill involves only a small amount, less than $1,000—$900. If it were not for the important principle involved I would not offer any opposition at all to the bill, for I have no doubt this gentleman did sustain the losses which are specified in it. But there was a public work here to be performed; advertisements were made, he put in his bid, and when he came to do the work he found the conditions were not as he supposed they were, to wit, he supposed the ground upon which this boat was stranded was hard clay and could be easily removed; on the contrary, he found it was quicksand, and as fast as he removed it it was washed back to the same place again. He worked twenty-one days under these conditions and then gave up his contract and abandoned the work entirely. He now wants the Government to pay $45 a day, which was the amount of his actual expenses during the time he was endeavoring to carry out his contract.

I believe the whole contract amounted to $1,500. If the claimant had succeeded in doing what he contracted to do the Government would have paid him $1,500. He failed to do any good to the Government, and now he desires the Government to pay him about $900 for failing in his contract.

If there was anything in the work which it was not possible for the contractor to know for himself the Government ought to reimburse him; but as this was a matter that he ought to have discovered before he put in his bid, or which he ought to have discovered immediately after he began the work, it seems to me the Government ought not to reimburse him. He must have discovered the first day he began this work that the bottom was quicksand. Notwithstanding this discovery he proceeded in carrying on the work for twenty-one days; and he states in his application that the sand was replaced by the waves about as fast as he could remove it, so that he was carrying the dirt up a hill and it was immediately washed down again.

According to his own statement he ought to have discovered the absolute certainty of failure a little sooner, at least; but he kept on, persisting for twenty-one days, and wants to be paid about $900 for failure to carry out his contract. As a member of the Committee on Claims in the last Congress I had intended to unite with the minority in this report, but by some inadvertence I failed to sign the papers.

Mr. SHAW. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] states that the claimant in this case asked the Government to pay him $900 for having failed to perform his contract. It seems to me that he ought to have gone a little further than that, and that he ought to have inquired into the cause of the failure before determining the equities in the case. This claimant failed, it is true, but he failed, in the language of the Court of Claims in their findings of fact, because the bottom where the light-boat was stranded was represented to him by the agent of the Government to be hard, and when he got there he found it to be composed of quicksand.

The place where this boat was stranded was about 160 miles from Baltimore, where the claimant resided, and he was at considerable expense in going to the place. I am not a sufficient expert in these matters to determine how long it would have required after his arrival on the ground to determine whether the bottom was quicksand or solid, as was represented to him. If no representations as to that had been made to him by agents of the Government, and the bottom had been represented to him as it was, he would not have failed in his contract and he would have been entitled to his $1,500 in pursuance of it. It seems to me on every principle of justice, when an agent of the United States Government authorized by law to make contracts of this character represents that a bottom is of a certain character, or, in other words, represents a certain state of facts, and a contract is based on such representations and they turn out to be misrepresentations, and the party making the contract loses because of these misrepresentations, the United States Government is bound by every rule of justice and equity to reimburse him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if no other gentleman desires to be heard upon this question, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that in matters of contract the Government should act precisely upon the same principle as an honest citizen would act; that it should pay its honest debts, and if professing to have superior knowledge of the facts in any given matter it has made misrepresentations, and another party had entered into a contract relying upon the truth of these representations, the facts not being open to his inspection, then, as a matter of justice and right, the Government should pay to that citizen the damages that he has sustained by reason of the false representations made to him. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that is a matter of justice and equity, and certainly it is a principle that is recognized by the law as between citizen and citizen.

But I submit, sir, that in this case there is no finding of the Court of Claims, there is no statement which authorizes this House to find that the engineer did represent to this claimant that he had such knowledge as to the character of the bottom where this boat was stranded, nor does it appear that the claimant himself was ignorant of the character of the bottom. It is true, sir, that he went there and that he worked twenty-one days and expended, as he claims, $945; but I claim, Mr. Chairman, that there is nothing in the finding of the court which makes the Government liable in this case, as one citizen would be liable to another, and I think we should be governed by that principle. I am aware, sir, of the difficulties that beset claimants, and I fully sympathize with parties who have claims against the General Government. Usually they might as well have a claim against a pauper as to attempt to get their pay out of the surplus in the Treasury, especially after a claim has become a stale one; but while that is true, it does not justify us in paying a claim like this, which, as I conceive, has no valid foundation in law or in equity.

Mr. SHAW. I now yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. RAYNER].

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman, if this was a case between individuals there would be no difficulty whatever about the individual who has been misled or defrauded recovering against the other party, but the trouble with this case is that it is the claim of an individual against the Government. If this claimant had made a contract with an individual, based upon false or erroneous statements made by that individual, and had gone to work to execute his contract, he would certainly have a right in law and in morals to recover back the money that he had expended in pursuance of the contract.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Is not the gentleman wrong in his proposition of law?

Mr. RAYNER. I think not.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Before a man can be held responsible for misrepresentations, must it not be shown that they were such as to mislead a party acting with reasonable care and prudence in the premises?

Mr. RAYNER. It must.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Was not your statement broader than that?

Mr. RAYNER. Not at all; because the party in this case acted with all the prudence that any reasonable man could be expected to exercise. The engineer was in charge of the district where this vessel was stranded; he was a Government officer, the agent of the Government; he made this erroneous statement in his character as the agent of the Government. It was his duty as engineer to examine the bottom and to find out whether it was hard or was of quicksand; he did examine it, or at least he ought to have done so, and whether he did or not, he reported to this poor man that the bottom was hard, and upon the basis of that report, or that statement, by an officer of the Government, this man went to work and expended his money. Now, I say that comes within the general principle of law that unless there has been some gross negligence on the part of the party who has suffered he is entitled to recover.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. RAYNER. I will.

Mr. WARNER. Do I understand the gentleman to lay it down as a proposition of law that it was the duty of the engineer to have examined this bottom? Does he take that ground in view of the facts found by the Court of Claims, the only facts before this House? There is nothing here to show that this party went to work relying upon the representations of the engineer, nothing to show that he had not as much knowledge of the nature of the bottom there as the engineer had.

Mr. RAYNER. I think the gentleman does not draw the distinction between a proposition of law and a proposition of fact. What I say as to the duty of the engineer is not a proposition of law. That is a presumption of fact. When a private party is invited to make a contract of this character, and the Government engineer in his official capacity makes a statement to him that the bottom where the boat is stranded is solid and is not quicksand, the party has a right to rely upon that statement.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. RAYNER. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does he believe that when a man is engaged in pulling off a vessel under such circumstances it will take him twenty-one days to find out whether the bottom is hard or soft?

Mr. RAYNER. I do not; but it may have taken him so many days to determine positively whether the boat could be lifted. There is nothing in the report of the minority to show this House that he could have found out before the expiration of twenty-one days whether he could relieve the vessel or not. Where is there anything in the report to show that he did not stop at the first moment when he ought to have stopped?

I come back now to my original proposition—that if this was a case between individuals there would be no trouble about it. If A makes a contract with B, and makes either a false or an erroneous statement, upon the basis of which B goes to work; if, as a matter of fact, that statement is found to be fraudulent or misleading, A can recover the money he has spent or the value of the work that he has done in pursuance of the contract. While I am as much opposed as any man upon this floor to opening the flood-gates of the Treasury to all these private claims, I do hold that the Government ought to be put precisely in the same position as an individual, and that if this claimant would be entitled to recover against an individual he should have the same right of recovery against the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, I have a very distinct recollection of the facts of this case; and I joined with the majority in reporting it favorably. It will be understood by the House that this case has been referred to the Court of Claims for the ascertainment of facts, and that that court has made a report.

The Court of Claims found certain facts which it thought worth while to report to this House. The first fact was that a light-ship belonging to the Government was stranded. Next, that the parties who put in bids for the work of lifting this light-ship from its stranded position, asked, for the most part, the sum of $2,000; but the claimant under this bill proposed to do it for $1,500. The Court of Claims found, further, that this claimant in making his bid for $1,500—a less amount than that for which any other man offered to do the work—did so upon a distinct representation by the Government engineer that where the vessel was stranded the bottom was hard. It was upon this understanding that he undertook to do the work for the sum named by him. It further appears that with this understanding in his mind this poor man collected the necessary apparatus, hired six riggers at $3 a day, and four other men, and sailed down to Lynnhaven Bay for the purpose of carrying out the contract which he had made with the Government.

Now, this man, having put himself to very considerable expense, having visited the light-ship where it was stranded, acting upon the representations which had been made to him by the agent of the Government, undertook to carry out his contract, and found unquestionably that he had a much harder job than he had contemplated. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] says that this man could have ascertained in a single hour whether the bottom was hard or soft. I do not know how that may be. I do not live on the seacoast, and am not acquainted with these matters. But the fact remains that the claimant had expended a considerable amount of money; and if he had abandoned his contract he would have been compelled to come to Congress for relief. But, as has been remarked by the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. RAYNER], this claimant felt that, notwithstanding the Government agent had made a misrepresentation, he might, in pursuance of his contract, succeed in floating the ship from its stranded position. Acting in good faith, he undertook to carry out his contract; but eventually found that the misrepresentation made to him by the agent of the Government was such that he could not possibly float the ship.

Now, I am not a lawyer; I am not versed in the technicalities which some gentlemen always thrust upon the House in the discussion of a question of this kind. I do not know whether this man has, in strict accordance with law, a claim against this Government; but I do say that, upon the basis of common justice and common sense, no man in this House ought to hesitate to vote the pittance of $900 to this contractor, who in good faith undertook to carry out the contract he had made with the Government. I submit that this claim ought to be paid, and no man, it seems to me, who wants to do simple justice to a poor man who is a claimant against this Government, ought to cast his vote against the bill. I hope, when the vote comes to be taken, the House will be practically unanimous in saying that this claimant shall receive the amount which is justly his due, the Court of Claims having examined his vouchers and found that the exact sum named in the bill was actually expended in pursuance of the contract with the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass?

The question being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, when a message from the Senate of the United States, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 274) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point in the county of St. Charles, in the State of Missouri, below the city of St. Charles.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

OWNERS OF STEAMER I. N. BUNTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7211) referring the claim of the owners of the steamer I. N. Bunton to the Court of Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the legal owner or owners of the steamer I. N. Bunton, her cargo, freight, tow, and personal effects, alleged to have been sunk by collision with the pier of the Davis Island Dam, in the Ohio River, on or about the 2d day of January, 1884, be referred to the Court of Claims as a court of admiralty jurisdiction, to hear and determine the same to judgment, with the right of appeal as in other cases: Provided, That no suit shall be brought under the provisions of this act after six months from the date of the passage thereof.

Mr. LANHAM. The facts connected with this bill are very fully stated in the findings of the Court of Claims——

Mr. DINGLEY. Has the report been read?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. Does the gentleman ask for the reading?

Mr. LANHAM. The findings of the Court of Claims give a very succinct statement of this case.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to hear the report read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report be first read, and then the findings of the court.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] yield for that purpose?

Mr. LANHAM. I do.

Mr. BAYNE. In the findings of the court as appended to the report of the committee there is a misprint.

Mr. LANHAM. With reference to the insurance?

Mr. BAYNE. I have here a certified copy of the findings of the court, and when the report of the committee shall have been read I ask that this certified copy of the findings of the court be read instead of that appended to the report, which is in some particulars inaccurate.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] will please send the document to the Clerk's desk.

The report (by Mr. LANHAM), together with the findings of the Court of Claims, was read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom were referred, on December 9, 1885, the petition and papers in the case of Joseph Walton & Co., having considered the same, respectfully report as follows:

This case was originally brought before the House in the Forty-eighth Congress by a bill introduced on the 4th of February, 1884, which was accompanied by a memorial of the claimants. The Committee on Claims in that Congress referred the case to the Court of Claims, under the act of March 3, 1883, 22 Statutes at Large, page 485, commonly called the Bowman act. That court, after hearing the case upon the evidence, made and transmitted, on February 3, 1885, a finding of facts, which is annexed to this report and made a part thereof, and which substantially may be condensed as follows:

On the evening of January 1, 1884, the steamer I. N. Bunton, belonging to the claimants, having on board a full complement of officers, a double crew, and a duly licensed, experienced pilot, about 10 o'clock started down the river from near Pittsburgh. The night was dark and foggy, the water high, and there was considerable ice flowing. Soon after midnight the steamer, with her tow of three coal-boats, approached the Government works at Davis Island Dam, the construction of which is fully explained in the findings of the court, and a diagram whereof is annexed to this report. The part specially material to the present inquiry is a pier called the North Pier, constituting a portion of the work, and situated about in the middle of the river, and which was at the time of the accident about 3 feet out of water. This pier had previously to the time of the accident been uniformly kept lighted, but on the night in question the light was omitted, and the court specially finds that the omission was caused by the oversight or neglect of the officers and employés of the Government. A sharp lookout was kept for the lights, which were supposed to be there, as they had always been before. The absence of a light on the North Pier deceived the officers of the boat, so that they kept her too far to the south, and by reason of this mistake, caused by the unaccustomed absence of the light, the boat struck the piling just above the pier, swung to the left, and collided with the pier next south, crushing a hole in her hull and causing a total wreck of the steamer, which caught fire, burned to the water's edge, and then sunk. Two of the coal-boats, with their cargo, were lost, and the third drifted down the river and sunk, but was subsequently raised and saved. Four lives were lost—the chief engineer, cook, and two deck-hands. The property was not insured.

The claimants, in their memorial and bill originally presented, claimed that their losses amounted to $32,000, and the findings of the Court of Claims fully sustain this claim to its entire amount, and, indeed, foot up $185 more.

With reference to the question of the responsibility for the accident, the court found as follows:

"The loss was not caused by any fault, negligence, or want of skill on the part of the claimants, their officers or employés, but was attributable to the gross negligence of the officers or employés of the defendants in omitting to place a light on the North Pier of the dam at Davis Island."

As the negligence is found by the Court of Claims to be all on the side of the Government, the claimant would be clearly entitled to recover were his contest with a private citizen or corporation. The question is therefore presented whether his right is affected by the fact that the offending party is the Government.

The non-existence of a judicial remedy does not affect the right. The existence of a right as against the Government in cases of tort is fully recognized by that distinguished jurist, Judge Cooley, who, in his work on Torts, says (page 122):

"Even the State or General Government may be guilty of individual wrongs, for while each is a sovereign it is a corporation also, and as such is capable of doing wrongful acts. The difficulty here is with the remedy, not with the right. No sovereignty is subject to suits except with its own consent. But either this consent is given by general law or some tribunal is established with power to hear all just claims; or, if neither of these is done, the tort remains, and it is always to be presumed that the legislative authority will make the proper provision for redress when its attention is directed to the injury."

Cases of governmental tort can not generally be found reported, because jurisdiction has not been granted to courts to afford a remedy in such cases. In one case, however, a question of governmental marine tort came before the Supreme Court, by whom the right of recovery against the Government was maintained, and a remedy under the peculiar circumstances of the case was afforded. It appeared in the case of the Siren (7 Wall., 152) that the Siren was a captured vessel in charge of a prize crew on the way to Boston for condemnation, and that while passing through Hell Gate she sunk the sloop Harper. On reaching Boston the United States filed a libel against the Siren as a prize, and the owners of the Harper claimed the right to have their damages paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the vessel. The Supreme Court said (page 155):

"For the damages occasioned by collision of vessels at sea a claim is created against the vessel in fault in favor of the injured party. This claim may be enforced in the admiralty by a proceeding in rem, except where the vessel is the property of the United States. In such case the claim exists equally as if the vessel belonged to a private citizen, but for reasons of public policy already stated can not be enforced by direct proceedings against the vessel. It stands in that respect like a claim against the Government, incapable of enforcement without its consent, and unavailable for any purpose."

The court therefore allowed the damages claimed, and ordered them assessed and paid out of the proceeds of the offending vessel, the Siren, thus fully establishing the principle of governmental liability for marine collisions.

Congress has steadily recognized the same principle. A large number of special acts have been passed recognizing the duty of the Government to reimburse private citizens for losses sustained by collisions on the high seas or inland waters when the Government vessel was at fault and when no negligence could be imputed to the claimants. We here give a summary of these, which, however, is in all probability not a complete one:

"1. An act for the relief of T. H. Holderness, owner of the British ship Duke of Edinburgh, approved January 27, 1873 (17 Stat. L., p. 717). This act appropriated to reimburse the owner of that vessel for injuries received by collision with the United States steamer General McPherson.

"2. A resolution referring to the Court of Claims claims against the United States for the loss of the schooner William Carlton, approved March 3, 1871 (16 Stat. L., p. 705). This act referred to that court the claim of the owners of said schooner, her cargo, etc., for loss by collision with the United States ram Stonewall on November 23, 1865. That court rendered judgment in favor of the claimants against the Government for $28,526.85. (10 Court of Claims Reports, p. 485.)

"3. An act referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Ada A. Andrews to the Court of Claims, approved June 20, 1874 (18 Stat. L., p. 201). Judgment against the United States was rendered by the Court of Claims for $28,809.35. (12 Court of Claims Reports, p. 480.)

"4. An act referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Flight to the Court of Claims, approved January 12, 1877 (19 Stat. L., p. 503). The claimants recovered $3,975. (14 Court of Claims Reports, p. 425.)

"5. An act granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the schooner Don Pedro, approved March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. L., p. 482). Judgment for claimants for $7,709.60. (19 Court of Claims Reports, p. 684.)

"6. An act for the relief of George R. Dennis, of Maryland, approved June 10, 1878 (20 Stat. L., p. 540). This act directed the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George R. Dennis $2,393.66 for damages sustained by him by the Government steamer General Meigs running into his schooner William J. Dennis.

"7. The sundry civil appropriation act of August 7, 1882 (22 Stat. L., p. 324), appropriated for two cases of similar character, one of them being 'to pay to Isaac A. Sylvester, for the losses and damages sustained by him on account of the collision of the United States sloop of war Lancaster with the drill-platform and sloop Derry, at Gangway Rock, Portsmouth, N. H., $2,000, in full satisfaction thereof.'

"8. The sundry civil appropriation act of 1883 appropriated $19,957 to reimburse the Potomac Steam-boat Company for a collision in Hampton Roads with a United States naval tug.

"9. Three similar claims, aggregating $14,237.92, were appropriated for in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. L., p. 496)."

It is difficult to draw any distinction between these cases and this one. If this pier had been a floating object, its mismanagement would have subjected the Government to responsibility to the injured citizen. Is he to be told that because it was affixed to the earth his damages are to go unredressed? If any such distinction as this can be suggested, it seems to be without foundation in reason.

In the case of Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company vs. Philadelphia and Havre de Grace Steam Towboat Company (23 Howard, p. 209), the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts was sustained, and a railroad company held liable for injury to a steam-boat by the negligent driving of piles in the bed of a river in such a manner as to obstruct navigation. And in the more recent case of Leathers vs. Blessing (105 U. S. Reports, p. 626), the jurisdiction of admiralty to decree damages was sustained, although the vessel in fault was stationary and moored to her wharf.

Now, if in cases just mentioned damages occasioned to vessels by objects negligently placed in the water and adhering to the earth, or damages done by vessels in a fixed and stationary position, were held to be grounds for the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction, and no distinction was made between such a case and one of injury caused by a moving vessel, by parity of reasoning it would appear that such a case as this should be determined on principles of admiralty jurisdiction, and under the same rules governing cases of collision between vessels. As, upon the authority of the numerous precedents above cited, the Government would be held liable if a public vessel in motion caused an injury by unexcused mismanagement, so ought the Government also to be held equally liable when it injures the citizen by means of an object in the water affixed to the soil.

A municipal corporation is the nearest body to the State in its constitution and purposes. Like the State, its existence and acts are solely for the public good; like the State, it can act only through its servants. But it is agreed that a municipal corporation is always liable for damages occasioned by negligence of its servants or agents. Dillon (Municipal Corporations, section 963) says:

"The rule of law is a general one that the superior or employer must answer civilly for the negligence or want of skill of his agent or servant in the course or line of his employment by which another is injured. Municipal corporations, under the conditions herein stated, fall within the operation of this rule of law, and are liable accordingly to civil actions for damages when the requisite elements of liability exist."

See also Wharton on Negligence, section 190, and Wood on Master and Servant, section 457.

In Barnes vs. The District of Columbia (91 U. S., 549) the Supreme Court of the United States say (page 551):

"The authorities establishing the contrary doctrine, that a city is responsible for its mere negligence, are so numerous and so well considered that the law must be deemed to be settled in accordance with them."

Authorities are there cited in full. The case of Mersey Docks vs. Gibbs (L. R., 1 H. L., 93) is the leading English case upon this subject.

We do not see how there can be drawn any valid line distinguishing in this respect between municipal corporations and the State or the United States, so far as the right is concerned. The only distinction is as to the remedy. All governments exist solely for public benefit. A municipal corporation, equally with a sovereign State, is absolutely necessary for the public good. That public good is best served in either case by a strict care for the rights of every citizen. If he is wronged by one, he can compel compensation; if wronged by the other, the duty of the State is to freely render recompense. A State and a municipal corporation each can act only through its servants. The one must answer for their negligence; can the other escape the same liability to the detriment of innocent sufferers?

In the case of Langford vs. The United States (101 U. S., 341), the Supreme Court say (pages 342, 343) that the maxim that "the king can do no wrong" can have no place in our system of government.

"We do not understand that, either in reference to the Government of the United States or of the several States, or any of their officers, the English maxim has an existence in this country."

Whether the Government is liable generally for torts is a question which may well be laid out of discussion in the present case. The principle on which liability in cases of marine collision is sustained is simply that of the responsibility of a property-owner for the management and use of his property—simply a practical application of the sound maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. We might well adopt, with reference to the General Government, the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in a recent case:

"The great principle of the common law, which is equally the teaching of Christian morality, so to use one's property as not to injure others, forbids any other application or use of the rights and powers conferred. (Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company vs. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. Reports, p. 331)."

The same principle applied in the present case would seem to lead to a conclusion favorable to the claim.

The findings of the Court of Claims are annexed to this report, and made a part hereof.

While the equities in the case of these claimants appear to be very strong, and appeal to your committee with much force, your committee nevertheless believe that it would be more in accordance with the precedents established in other cases of perhaps equal justice (see the acts above cited from 16 Stats., p. 705; 18 Stats., p. 201; 19 Stats., p. 503, and 20 Stats., p. 483) to refer this case absolutely to the Court of Claims on the facts and the law than to pass an act for its payment. On such a reference that court can, if it sees proper, re-examine the facts, and upon the facts as finally found apply the law in the same manner as if the suit were in a court of ordinary admiralty jurisdiction.

Your committee therefore report the accompanying bill (H. R. 7211), entitled "A bill referring the claim of the owners of the steamer I. N. Bunton to the Court of Claims," and recommend that the same do pass.

COURT OF CLAIMS—CONGRESSIONAL CASE NO. 68.

JOSEPH WALTON AND ISAAC N. BUNTON VS. THE UNITED STATES.

Findings of fact, filed February 9, 1885.

This case, referred to the court by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives March 14, 1884, under the act of March 3, 1883, ch. 116 (22 Stat. L., 485), having been heard by the court, the Attorney-General, by his assistants, appearing for the defense and protection of the United States, as required by said act, the court, upon the evidence, finds the facts to be as follows:

I. In the year 1884 and previously the United States were constructing a dam and lock at Davis Island, on the Ohio River, about 5 miles below Pittsburgh, Pa. The lock was 700 feet in length, near the north bank of the river. The dam commenced 559 feet south of the lock wall and extended about 828 feet south to Davis Island. There was a pier at the north end of the dam, rising some 3 feet above the water. Between that pier and the lock wall was the channel. There were three other piers in the dam between the first pier and Davis Island.

II. The orders of the Government officers in charge of the work were that a light should be placed every night on the north pier, as well as lights at the east end of the lock wall. This was done uniformly up to January 1, 1884, when on the night of that day the light on the pier was omitted by oversight or neglect of some officer or employé of the defendants.

The workman whose duty it had been to place the light there had been discharged on the 31st of December, 1883, and that duty was neglected for the next two nights without any sufficient cause.

Such lights were necessary for the safety of navigation on the river at that point.

III. On the evening of January 1, 1884, the steamer I. N. Bunton, belonging to the claimants, having on board a full complement of officers, a double crew, and a duly licensed, experienced pilot, about 10 o'clock started down the river from near Pittsburgh. The night was dark and somewhat foggy. The water was high, and there was considerable flow of ice; she had in tow three coal-barges loaded with coal, all of which belonged to the claimants.

IV. Soon after midnight, approaching the works at Davis Island, a sharp lookout was kept for lights, which were supposed to be there, as they had been before. When within about 200 feet of the east end of the lock wall, as was supposed, the lights on that wall were first seen. But owing to the darkness and fogginess of the night it was not possible for the officers of the boat to determine the real distance of the wall.

They kept the boat to the south to avoid the lock wall, and not seeing nor knowing where the north pier was situated, by reason of there being no light upon it, the boat struck the piling just above that pier, swung to the left, and collided with the pier next south, crushing a hole in her hull and causing a total wreck of the steamer, which caught fire and burned to the water and sunk. Two of the coal-boats with their cargoes were lost, and the third coal-boat drifted down the river and sunk, but was subsequently raised and saved.

Four lives were lost, the chief engineer, cook, and two deck-hands. The property was not insured.

V. The loss was not caused by any fault, negligence, or want of skill on the part of the claimants, their officers or employés, but was attributable to the gross negligence of the officers or employés of the defendants in omitting to place a light on the north pier of the dam at Davis Island.

VI. The following are the losses to the claimants:

|---|---|
| Value of the steamer I. N. Bunton | $25,000 |
| Value of 50,000 bushels of coal, at 9 cents, and two coal-boats lost | 4,500 |
| Expenses of raising the third coal-boat | 1,110 |
| Detention of steamer Coal City, belonging to the claimants | 300 |
| Lighting and clothes for men who lost their clothes by the accident | 200 |
| Funeral expenses of the men lost | 75 |

Ordered by the court that a copy of the foregoing findings of fact, duly certified, be reported to the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, together with a copy of this order.

By the court.

FEBRUARY 8, 1885.

A true copy.

Test: this 12th day of January, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to be acted on at the proper time. I move to strike out in line 8 of the bill the words "as a court of admiralty jurisdiction." I believe that under the general principles which should govern the Court of Claims its power would be sufficient without these words.

Mr. Chairman, extraordinary diligence has been observed on the part of the claimants in this case. The destruction of their property occurred on the 1st of January, 1884. On the 4th of February, 1884, a bill for their relief was introduced in this House. During that Congress the case was referred, by the Committee on Claims, to the Court of Claims; and in February, 1885, that court transmitted to Congress its findings of fact in the premises. Those who have listened to the reading of the report or who have examined the findings of the court in this case will have no difficulty in understanding all the facts and circumstances. That the property mentioned was destroyed is found by the court. Further, it is solemnly found by the court that the loss was not caused by any fault, negligence, or want of skill on the part of the claimants, their officers or employés, but was attributable to gross negligence of the officers or employés of the United States, in omitting to place a light on the north pier of the dam at Davis Island.

That is the essential finding of the Court of Claims, upon which we are called to act, and the principal reason which induced the committee to report the bill. Can the Government of the United States resist a suit upon a claim of this sort, when it is solemnly established that by its own agents or employés and their gross negligence the property of a citizen of the United States has been destroyed? Can the Government, sir, run rough-shod over a citizen by and through its agents and employés, and destroy his property and leave him remediless? In the presence of a great wrong and injury of that character, is there no redress for the citizen? Shall he not have his day in court?

Now, sir, the court having found that this was through the gross negligence of the authorities or employés of the United States, without any fault soever upon the part of the claimant, no contributory negligence, nothing of that sort, the court having found this to be the fact, and ascertained the amount of property destroyed, the question simply is, will Congress give to this claimant the right to present that claim in the Court of Claims, and confer jurisdiction upon that court to hear and determine the case to final judgment, with a right of appeal, as in other cases?

The committee in the conclusion of this report say this:

While the equities in the case of this claimant appear to be very strong, and appeal to your committee with much force, your committee believe that it would be more in accordance with the precedents established in other cases to refer this case absolutely to the Court of Claims on the facts and law, than to pass an act providing for its payment.

Now I admit, sir, that it is an important question, is the Government of the United States liable when, by reason of the gross negligence of its agents or employés, an injury is inflicted upon the property of the citizen, and in such an event shall the citizen be compelled to stand without a remedy? This bill proposes simply to send this matter back to the court from whence it came, the court that found these facts, and confer upon it authority to decide the question and to give to the United States or to the claimant the right of appeal. I believe that is right; that the case should be so referred, for judicial determination, and this bill ought to pass.

I have no desire to discuss the matter further at the present time, but will yield so much of my time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. I will reserve my time until I hear if there is any opposition to the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Then, if there be no desire to discuss the question, I shall ask that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask the gentleman from Texas to yield to me for a few moments.

With the conclusions which the committee have reached in referring this case to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal, for the purpose of determining the question of the liability on the part of the United States, I concur entirely. But I wish simply to express my dissent from certain views as to the liability of the Government that are expressed and set forth in the report of the committee, in order that there may be no conclusion reached that such was the unanimous judgment of Congress in regard to this subject.

This opens indeed a new and very important question of the liability of the Government; that is, its liability in case of damage done through the works which it has erected for the purpose of improving navigation.

Mr. LANHAM. Permit me to say that the liability of the Government is to be passed upon, by the terms of this bill, by the highest court in the land.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am aware of that; but I am expressing my dissent from certain arguments that are presented in the report.

If it is finally settled that the Government of the United States is responsible in damages for all injuries that may be inflicted on vessels in consequence of the neglect of the officers of the Government set to care for the works which it has erected to improve navigation, it seems to me that a large measure of liability will be opened. But I wish simply to express my dissent, as I have said, from the doctrine laid down in the report that there is a parallelism between the liability—the maritime liability—the liability of vessels coming into collision, and the liability for damage done to a vessel coming in contact with works erected by the Government for the improvement of a river or harbor.

It seems to me there is a wide distinction between the two cases, and I do not desire to argue the case now, but simply to express my dissent from that conclusion which is reached apparently in the argument submitted by the committee in its report. I concur fully in that view of the question which proposes to refer this to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal, in order that the important question may be settled by the highest court of the land.

Mr. McADOO. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether this work was constructed by contract or by Government employés?

Mr. LANHAM. I understand it was done by the Government and its own employés.

Mr. McADOO. Through a contract?

Mr. LANHAM. Just at this moment I am unable to answer. I will examine the report, and inform the gentleman.

Mr. McADOO. I wish you would ascertain, as I think it very important in connection with the pending question.

Mr. LANHAM. I will state to the gentleman that the court find that it was through the "gross negligence of the officers and employés of the defendant," which is the United States.

Mr. MCMILLIN rose.

Mr. LANHAM. I have not yielded the floor, but if the gentleman from Tennessee desires to be heard I will yield to him.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I prefer to take my own time.

Mr. LANHAM. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has forty-eight minutes.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. According to my conception of this case, Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal involved in this bill which ought to attract the serious consideration of the House before it is passed. This is one of the claims referred under the Bowman act to the Court of Claims for the purpose of ascertaining the facts concerning this transaction. It will not be insisted by any one that thereby the Government has become any more liable for this alleged damage. It is simply a tribunal organized to ascertain the facts by methods which the hurry of the business of the Congress of the United States will not permit us to adopt during the session.

Now, I have never seen the time when I believed the Government was liable on account of this damage; never since the case was referred to the Court of Claims for the ascertainment of the facts by a committee of which I was a member. I have never seen the time, I say, when I believed the Government could be justly made liable, and I agree with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] we ought to enter our protest here against the decision taken in this report, that the Government is liable to these claimants.

What are the facts? A public work was being constructed on the Ohio River for the purpose of improving, as far as might be, the navigation of the river. The Government saw fit to hang out lights on the works pending their completion. Will it be said that that precaution on the part of the Government increased the Government's liabilities? Not by any sane man, I dare say.

Suppose you admit the liability of the Government, what follows? We have light-houses all around our coasts. We have lights on numbers of our rivers. If the position which is taken by gentlemen on the other side of this claim be correct, then the Government will be liable whenever it fails to keep its lights in such manner they can be seen by navigators. On the Ohio River lights have been placed for the purpose of aiding in the navigation. Now, suppose one of the men whose duty it is to hang out any of those lights fails in the performance of his duty, fails to discharge the obligation which the Government has placed on him, will it be insisted by any sane man that thereby the Government has incurred a liability which did not exist before it hung out any lights at all?

Mr. LANHAM rose.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You send it back to the Court of Claims after they have already given you information here as to the gross negligence of the Government. You might as well appropriate the money and have done with it. Suppose, among the light-houses in New York Harbor, for any cause that is attributable to the employés of the Government, one should fail to give the danger-signal, would it be claimed that a vessel going down on account of it is to be paid for out of the United States Treasury?

We are constructing locks and dams on various rivers of this continent. Now, who will insist, when these locks and dams are constructed to facilitate the navigation of our rivers, we have to pay for every accident because of neglect on the part of those engaged in their construction? I ask, who will hold any such doctrine? When once established we would have an end to the construction of works for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

When lights are hung out on the Tennessee and Ohio Rivers, and on many points of the Mississippi River, it will not be claimed by any man that the Government is liable because it has jurisdiction over those rivers. Not at all; but the Government in its magnanimity says, we will do what we can to increase the facilities for safe travel and navigation of those rivers, and for that purpose we will hang out signals. Is the Government, therefore, on account of that magnanimity to be mulcted in costs, and not only mulcted in costs for the vessel which goes down and the cargoes which are lost, but also for the losses of the men who happen to be upon them?

You proceed upon the theory here of no one being in fault on the ground of negligence but the Government, and yet the report of the Court of Claims in a general way states the fact that while the ice was floating in the river, rendering navigation dangerous, rather than tie up and lose a few hours, this man, who was running his own boat, attempted to pass through the channel, and in the attempt met with the loss for which damage is claimed. Are you going to pay for it? Are you going to pay for every case where a light goes out? Are you going to pay the damage incurred in all these cases? If so, your surplus will become beautifully less, and that very vexing and worrying question will cease to disturb Congress.

More than that, there were certain men's lives lost when this vessel went down. If we are liable for the loss of the vessel and for the loss of the cargo, we are also liable for that loss of life. If we are liable in consequential damages for the loss of the vessel, and also for the loss of two coal-boats for which claim is made, we are also liable in damages for these lives which were lost, and you may look to the next Congress to see the widows and orphans coming forward to make this, not only a property-insurance Government, but a life-insurance establishment. I protest against the liability. It does not exist, and to establish it is establishing a precedent that leads only to ruin.

Mr. BAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. When this bill first came up for consideration in the Committee on Claims, I must say I regarded it with some disfavor. In the first place the fact was presented that the Government of the United States was improving the navigation of the Ohio River for the benefit of all parties transacting commerce on that river, and that one of those parties thus engaged in commerce on that river suffering from the beneficial act of the Government sought reclamation at the hands of the Government. But upon further consideration it seemed to me it was time that the liability of the Government in cases of this character should be settled by some competent tribunal.

So far as the report commits this House or the committee to the doctrine that the Government is liable, I dissent from it. So far as the report is in favor of sending this question to a tribunal for decision, I am heartily in favor of it.

It has been said that this case has already been before the Court of Claims, and that the Court of Claims has decided in favor of the claimant. But the proposed action sends it to the Court of Claims with the right on the part of the Government, if the decision of that court be against the Government, to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that is the proper forum to settle questions of this character, in my judgment. Whether this man should be deprived of his property or not under the circumstances, when the facts are not disputed, it seems to me is purely a question of law; and as between the Supreme Court of the United States and the House of Representatives, I prefer the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States every time. If the Supreme Court lay down a rule which in the judgment of the legislative branch of the Government is too broad and comprehensive, the remedy is still in the House's hands to limit that rule by a legislative enactment.

It seems to me, sir, that we ought always to be willing to send these claims to the tribunals which we ourselves have erected for the determination of questions of law.

Mr. BAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

Mr. TARSNEY. I have paid particular attention to the reading of the report in this case and the remarks of the gentlemen who have preceded me, and for a particular reason. It so happens that for seven years of my life I filled the dangerous, the trying, and the arduous occupation of a marine engineer. I may fairly be presumed to know a little something of navigation trials and dangers.

I have read this report, and while I am not here to attempt to overrule the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States before it is rendered, I am here as a Representative from the State of Michigan, and simply say, let us refer the case to the United States courts and put it on the line where it may get there, so that the highest judicial tribunal in this land can define the limits of responsibility on the part of the Government.

I do not, for my own part, know why the doctrine of respondeat superior should not apply in this case as in others. I am not here to decide. But having in mind the responsibility that the Government has assumed, I desire to say to my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] that while the Government perhaps was under no obligation originally to improve our channels or build our light-houses, yet it assumed to do so, and it has placed upon our shores and upon our rivers its white and green and red lights for the purpose of guiding the mariner; and these lights are implicitly relied upon by the people who sail.

They find the light-house there. They look for it. They have looked through their glasses and they see another resembling it. Suppose the light on which they have a right to rely has gone out through the negligence of the Government employés; and suppose that ship to go on the breakers and life should be lost and property destroyed; tell me where the redress is, if you please, for those poor mariners who go down to their graves in the sea. And where is the redress for people who own that property?

I appeal to the House as a sailor and ask them to let this bill go back to the Court of Claims with the right of appeal, and let it go to this tribunal over here, and when they make their decision the people of the United States will obey it; and I reckon that it may differ from the judgment of some of the gentlemen on this floor to-day.

Mr. BAYNE. The statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] was misleading—unintenionally so, no doubt, but still it was a misleading statement. The purpose of this bill is not to pass upon the Government's liability for this loss, unless there be now existing law fastening that liability upon the Government. The bill proposed does not create an obligation on the part of the Government to pay this claim. It simply refers the facts to the Court of Claims that that court may enter judgment, if they believe that there is now existing law fastening upon the Government liability for this loss; and that in such an event the United States on the one hand or the claimant on the other may have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to have this question settled.

I trust that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] with all his anxiety to preserve the Treasury from spoliation or from an effort on the part of citizens to recover money that is due to them, will not deny to these claimants the right to present their arguments, their facts, and their law, and to go into the Supreme Court and ascertain whether there be now any existing law by which they are entitled to recover from the Government for the losses which they have sustained.

The illustration presented by my friend from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] was not exactly pertinent to this case. This is not a question of a light-house on a river, as stated by him, and as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]. Before this improvement in the Ohio was begun there was a free open channel for purposes of navigation. The vast quantities of coal that leave Pittsburgh and go to Louisville and Cincinnati and New Orleans and other cities along the Ohio and the lower Mississippi traversed that channel free and uninterrupted. The Government, in its endeavors to promote and facilitate the commerce of the country, chose to construct a dam about 4 miles below Pittsburgh. In constructing that work it placed piers out in the channel of the river. That dam was in progress of construction on the night of the 1st of January, 1884. This navigator of the river, with his boat and his fleet of coal-barges, started down the river; there had been lights kept on these piers and the other piers in the navigable channel before, and the boat had successfully passed those, but on this occasion the pier which projected farthest into the channel and which was most dangerous to navigation was not lighted, and when the claimant got down there with his boat and his barges they ran against the pier in consequence of the light not having been placed upon it. The boat was sunk with two of the barges, and four persons who were on the boat lost their lives. This case was referred to the Court of Claims; over forty witnesses were examined; over two hundred pages of closely printed testimony were taken.

Mr. LANHAM. And the Attorney-General was present, by his representative, to protect the interests of the United States.

Mr. BAYNE. And, as the gentleman suggests, the Attorney-General was present, through his representative, to protect the interests of the Government. The case was argued, and the Court of Claims reported the facts which have been read to the House. They reported the fact of the loss, that it occurred without any negligence whatever on the part of the claimant, and that it was the result of the gross neglect of the Government agents at that point. Now, the proposition of this bill is simply that the whole matter shall be referred back to the Court of Claims, in order that it may enter a judgment on the facts which it has already ascertained, or which it may see fit to further ascertain.

If the Attorney-General of the United States deems it important or necessary for the protection of the interests of the Government that, in the event of the decision of the court being in favor of the claimants, the case shall be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, that may be done under the provisions of this bill, so that the Supreme Court can decide whether there be or be not existing law under which the Government can be held responsible. That is the whole case. I deem it proper to say on this occasion, as I have said in advocating the Bowman act and other acts in past years, that the Government of the United States ought to deal more justly with its citizens than it does. There is not a Government in Christendom, excepting only the despotic Government of Russia, which does not deal more fairly with its people than the Government of the United States. England, a monarchy, the empire of Germany, every Government of Europe, every Government of Christendom, excepting only the Russian, affords to its citizens an opportunity to seek redress for grievances against the Government as well as for grievances against their fellow-citizens, and when I find such a state of facts as in this case, where, if the parties to the transaction were private individuals, or if the transaction were between an individual and a private corporation, there is not a court in the country that would not grant the redress sought by the claimants; when I remember that the Government makes its laws, and exacts from the people strict obedience to those laws in their dealings with each other, yet refuses to obey its own laws or to be responsible to its citizens for wrongs done by its agents; when I remember these things I begin to feel a sense of shame for a Government whose boast it is that none other under the sun recognizes and protects so fully the rights of the people.

To-day in the despotic empire of Germany, in France, in monarchical England, in Switzerland, in every civilized country of the world, a citizen having a claim such as this to present may seek redress of his grievance in a tribunal established by the Government, in order that just claims of this character may be paid. I say it is greatly to the credit of these other governments of the world that they are ready to do unto the citizen as they require the citizen to do unto the government.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that in the Congress of the United States the poor privilege at least will be accorded to citizens of the country of taking their cases to the Court of Claims in the first instance, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, in order to determine whether there is any law by which the Government is bound to compensate the citizen for loss sustained in consequence of gross negligence of the Government's servants.

I relinquish the floor to the gentleman who has so kindly yielded to me.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BAYNE. I have no objection to answering it.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that there is any government in the world that allows a claim of this kind for the mere negligence of its officers to be presented against itself?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What government?

Mr. BAYNE. There have been cases in England decided to that effect.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What case?

Mr. BAYNE. I have reference to cases. I will turn to them in a few moments and furnish them to the gentleman.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, in response to the question raised awhile ago by the gentleman from New Jersey, I wish to say that upon a re-examination of the findings of the Court of Claims, I discover this language:

In the year 1884, and previously, the United States were constructing a dam and lock at Davis Island, in the Ohio River, about 5 miles below Pittsburgh, Pa.

* * * * * * *

The orders of the Government officers in charge of the work were that a light should be placed every night on the north pier, as well as lights at the east end of the lock wall.

I assume from this that the work was being conducted by officers of the United States.

Now, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, I wish to say that in the findings of fact by the Court of Claims there is no sort of adjudication upon the liability of the Government. The court simply finds a given state of facts. I do not know that it can be assumed that upon those facts the court would find the Government of the United States liable. The gentleman seems to believe that such would be the result. The whole purpose of this bill is merely to let this matter go through judicial channels and reach a decision by the highest court of the Government, so that there may be a distinct adjudication as to the question of responsibility on the part of the Government.

Mr. BAYNE. In reply to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] who asked me to cite a case which had been decided in the English courts, I refer him to the case of The Athol, 1 W. Robinson, 382.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Was that an admiralty case?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir; a case analogous in all respects to this, and the liability of the Government for the negligence of its officers was sustained.

Mr. LANHAM. If there be no desire for further discussion on this proposition, I ask that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia such time as he wants.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, in support of the proposition which the gentleman from Tennessee has so lucidly presented to the House, I desire to cite an authority which is, I think, respectable among all lawyers. I read from Broom's Legal Maxims, page 62. In explaining the doctrine of respondeat superior this learned writer says:

The ordinary maxim respondeat superior has, then, no application to the Crown, for the Crown can not, in contemplation of law, command a wrongful act to be done. It may be stated, moreover, as a rule of the common law, that the Crown can not be prejudiced by the laches or acts of omission of any of its officers.

It is also laid down by the same authority that the individual who happens to have official relation to the Government may be personally liable to any one injured by his acts of negligence or omission, but not the Government that employs him. I think this is a fundamental doctrine which has been universally accepted.

Mr. LANHAM. May it not be safely inferred that the court which would pass upon this question would give due consideration to the authority cited by the gentleman from Georgia as well as all other legal principles bearing upon the case?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. In response to the last inquiry made by the gentleman from Texas, I wish to say that the high court to which reference has been made has now ample jurisdiction and abundant business to occupy it, and there is no propriety in submitting to it cases which it is no part of its proper province to determine.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, my experience in matters of this kind inclines my mind to the conclusion that there is justice in the charge frequently made that the Congress of the United States as well as the courts and other officers of the Government are frequently derelict in reference to the payment of just claims. Upon any claim which leaves little doubt as to the propriety of its payment I would always cheerfully decide in favor of the claimant on the hypothesis that the people of the country are better able to bear the burdens for which the claimants are not altogether responsible than are individual claimants themselves.

But this case, in my judgment, presents to us certain peculiar considerations. It involves the determination of a policy upon which I doubt the propriety of our entering at this time. This bill proposes to refer this claim to the Court of Claims, conferring upon that court admiralty jurisdiction.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, that I have offered an amendment to strike out that clause of the bill which proposes to confer upon the court admiralty jurisdiction.

Mr. TAULBEE. I had not caught that proposition. I shall be under obligations to the gentleman from Texas if he will inform us whether the Court of Claims upon the reference of this case under the pending bill would have the right to render judgment.

Mr. LANHAM. That is the purpose of it; that judgment shall be rendered, with a right of appeal.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then, Mr. Chairman, the effect of the bill will be the same, even with the gentleman's amendment; and the objection which I have to the bill as reported is applicable also to the bill as amended.

This bill proposes to refer this matter to the Court of Claims with the object of rendering judgment. The Court of Claims has already signified, by its report, what will be the result of its action on the final consideration of this case. The question must be determined by the House now whether or not we will hold the Government responsible for property destroyed by the Government, or through the neglect of its officers, in pursuance of the legitimate purposes of the Government. I dare say the passage of this bill will reopen to us the consideration of war claims which Congress invariably rejects, and the officers of the Government reject on the ground that the Government is not responsible for the destruction of property even in times of war when the emergencies are great and when the life of the nation is at stake; when armies must be moved and cities besieged in order to maintain the life of the nation.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not consider it is settled when there are so many acts of Congress to the contrary.

Mr. TAULBEE. Granting that this tends to strengthen the precedent already established, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], and that precedent when carried to its ultimatum must, as he knows, result in tearing open war claims the demands of which would exhaust the money in the Treasury and involve us in debt far greater than that which the Government now carries.

I have in my mind a case precisely parallel in point in my own district. During the Forty-ninth Congress the engineers of the United States were constructing a lock and dam on the Kentucky River in my district. The act authorizing the construction of that dam was at the earnest solicitation of the citizens where it is located. But under the plans of the engineers, even after the completion of the dam, persons transporting timber from above found it difficult to get by it. Many floats of timber were torn to pieces and destroyed, not because of any neglect on the part of the parties who were transporting this merchandise, but by reason of the construction of the dam.

Now, if this bill is passed it will be an incentive to the people of my district to charge up against the Government of the United States the thousands of dollars of loss they have sustained by reason of the Government undertaking to do that which it was asked to do.

I maintain it is our duty to adhere to the policy heretofore adopted by the Government in reference to paying by the Government for property destroyed by the Government for legitimate purposes, and that the cases which have been settled shall not be reopened and reconsidered. I insist that if the Government takes my property, takes it and converts it to its own use, I am entitled to compensation, and I deny to any gentleman on this floor a greater or swifter desire in bringing about the payment of such claims than I have myself.

Mr. BAYNE. You stated that you agreed to the doctrine that if the Government takes private property for public use it is obliged to pay for it. Do you not agree to the other maxim with that, that the Government shall use its own property so as not to endanger the property of others?

Mr. TAULBEE. I agree that it is correct in theory, that it is the duty of the Government to do it, and if the officers of the Government should promulgate a policy contrary to that, they would be subject to impeachment or prosecution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. I yield five minutes longer to the gentleman from Kentucky, if he desires it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Thank you.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he is opposed to allowing an injured party a day in court in which to be heard?

Mr. TAULBEE. I certainly am not, when that day in court is had for the purpose of the ascertainment of such facts as will enable him to have full and fair justice.

Mr. LANHAM. What is the use in ascertaining the facts, as in this case, where they have been already ascertained and transmitted to us, without going a step further and allowing the courts to pass upon the question of liability?

Mr. TAULBEE. The most important use that I can conceive for putting the facts ascertained by the court before us is that the Government is not responsible, and upon those facts we may determine that proposition. If the Government had taken this vessel for the purpose of constructing the works upon the Ohio River, if it had converted it to its own use in the course of such construction, payment for the use of the vessel, or if destroyed by the Government during the time in which they used it, payment of the claim for the price of the vessel itself would have been a legitimate demand. But this bill presents a very different case. Here is a damage sustained by the claimants by reason of the dereliction of an officer of the Government. That dereliction is chargeable to that officer individually, in my judgment. It can not be put upon the same footing, or held as strong, as many cases presented to Congress from time to time where private property was taken and destroyed by the Federal Army during the war to maintain the unity of the country.

Mr. LANHAM. If the individual is liable, would not the court decide that fact?

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not understand that this bill authorizes the Court of Claims to render judgment against the individual; but the only reasonable inference that the court can place upon the purpose of this Legislature, after the passage of this bill, is that it was our intention, in the event the Court of Claims believed the complainants to be entitled to pay for their vessel, that the court should render judgment against the United States as the defendant in this action. I think that is a fair construction of the bill, and I am opposed to its passage on that ground.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman having this bill in charge if the bill should pass here and become a law, and if his theory is correct, why it is that the friends of these men who were killed in this accident—and I believe there were five of them—why their friends have not a standing in court and the right of action against the Government because of the destruction of their lives, just as well as these parties have for the destruction of their property? I would like to find some gentleman willing and able to draw a distinction between the two cases.

If the damage had been brought about by some railroad corporation, that corporation would have been held responsible by the courts for the destruction of this property. If the lives of these men had been lost as the result of the act of that corporation, or an individual, that corporation or individual would have been responsible for the lives of the men when the property was destroyed. Now, I maintain that if the claimants are entitled to relief, the widows of the men who lost their lives are also entitled to damages by reason of it. I am unable to understand any distinction between the cases. I am unable to see how it is that the owners of this vessel are entitled to a standing in court, when the Government, by its authorized agents, gave no directions for any procedure in the premises which resulted in the destruction of the property.

For these reasons I feel constrained to vote against the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill. It seems to me that its passage would be a marked departure from precedents heretofore prevailing in this House.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. Did the gentleman from Illinois present any minority report to the report of the committee in this case?

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not.

Mr. LANHAM. Was it not the unanimous action of the committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no recollection as to the case at all. I do not remember any report upon it.

Mr. LANHAM. I have a very distinct recollection of its being reported from the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not mean to say that the case was not reported from the committee. I know the case was before the committee, and possibly I was present when it was reported. But what I mean is that I have no distinct recollection of the facts.

Mr. LANHAM. On the contrary, and I do not know whether it is proper to state it or not, my recollection is clear that the gentleman was present when it was considered and reported.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very possibly I was. I do not remember.

Mr. OATES. You may have gotten new light since then, even if you had agreed to the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. My friend from Alabama suggests that there may be some new light. It is very possible that if I had agreed to the bill then I might find reason to change my opinion on receiving new light; and certainly the able arguments which have been presented here to-day ought, in any unprejudiced mind, to induce a change of sentiment, or an inference at least that the bill ought not to be passed. If in committee I had agreed to the bill, after the hearing to-day I think I should be strongly inclined to change my mind, even if formerly in favor of it.

Mr. BAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield for a question, but I would like to have an opportunity of beginning my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to ask whether the gentleman does not think there is a legal liability on the part of the Government to pay the claimants here?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think not.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well. Does this bill go a bit further than to leave the question to the Court of Claims first, and then to the Supreme Court, to ascertain whether there is such a law fixing the liability upon the Government? Does it go a step further?

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand it does, and I will show the gentleman wherein it does. I understand this to be a case sounding in tort, and it being a case sounding in tort, the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction of it and can not have unless jurisdiction is specially conferred.

The statute passed at the last session of Congress, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by Mr. Tucker, contains this provision in regard to suits against the Government:

First. All claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States, or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract expressed or implied with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States, either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty, if the United States were suable.

All such claims shall be cognizable in the Court of Claims. The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims heretofore was as follows, and the gentleman will see the distinction the committee drew last session:

The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the Government of the United States, and all claims which may be referred to it by either House of Congress.

Now, the difference between these two statutes is, that the new statute enlarged the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims so as to extend the claim "for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States, either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty, if the United States were suable."

Those words were put in the new law. Now, if the proposition the gentleman maintains is correct, that this does not confer any more jurisdiction on the court than the court now has, then there is no necessity for the passage of this bill, because this statute gives the court jurisdiction of the case, and it is not yet barred by the statute of limitations, as the cause of action occurred on the 1st of January, 1884. Only four years up to this time have elapsed, and the case may be brought in the Court of Claims unless it be one sounding in tort; but if it be a case sounding in tort, the court can not have jurisdiction unless jurisdiction be specially conferred upon it.

Mr. BAYNE. This is merely giving the court jurisdiction?

Mr. SPRINGER. It gives the court jurisdiction in a case where it has not jurisdiction; and when it has jurisdiction it will merely have to determine whether the Government is liable or not. If that be the question, then the court would have jurisdiction conferred upon it for that purpose.

Mr. BAYNE. It must find the law.

Mr. SPRINGER. If it goes back to this law, the law says it has not this jurisdiction, because this is a case sounding in tort, and unless you amend this law the sending of the case to the Court of Claims will amount to nothing. But if you confer this special jurisdiction on the Court of Claims there will be a judgment in the case.

Mr. BAYNE. Is there anything in the Bowman act which makes the Government responsible for the torts of its agents?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not speaking of that act, but of the act passed in the last Congress in which jurisdiction was conferred on the Court of Claims. The gentleman recognizes the fact that by the law as it is the court has no jurisdiction in this case. To give the court jurisdiction it is necessary to pass a special act. Where are you under the terms of the law of last session unless you give the court jurisdiction? The court would say this is a case sounding in tort, and therefore the court has no jurisdiction. This is the statutory limitation upon the liability of the Government in admiralty cases, passed after due reflection and deliberation by Congress, and if it had been the intention of Congress to make the Government liable in cases sounding in tort, as this bill does, that jurisdiction would have been given generally in the statute of last session; but not having been given generally, here is a proposition to give it specially; and the only effect of this statute will be to cause the court to take jurisdiction in a case in which it has no jurisdiction and to render judgment in a case sounding in tort, which it could not do without this special act.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. If this case be not one sounding in tort the court would have jurisdiction?

Mr. SPRINGER. It would under the statute I have read.

Mr. BAYNE. Next to the last paragraph, on page 4 of the committee's report, I find this:

Whether the Government is liable generally for torts is a question which may well be laid out of discussion in the present case. The principle on which liability in cases of marine collision is sustained is simply that of the responsibility of a property-owner for the management and use of his property—simply a practical application of the sound maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. We might well adopt, with reference to the General Government, the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in a recent case:

"The great principle of the common law, which is equally the teaching of Christian morality, so to use one's property as not to injure others, forbids any other application or use of the rights and powers conferred. (Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company vs. Fifth Baptish Church, 108 U. S. Reports, p. 331.)"

Now, the corollary is inevitable that if the Court of Claims had jurisdiction of this case, eliminating from it altogether the question of tort, it could have found a judgment, instead of making the return it did make of the facts, and the Court of Claims decides that very point.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield all but one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] to give me a little additional time.

Mr. LANHAM. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish the gentleman from Illinois would answer what I have just said.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am going to do it. The gentleman concedes that, as the law now stands, the Court of Claims has not jurisdiction of this case?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not believe it has.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman concedes that the Court of Claims has not jurisdiction. Now, this is a bill to confer jurisdiction and to confer it in a direction where, when Congress was dealing with the subject generally, it expressly said it would not confer jurisdiction. This bill proposes to confer jurisdiction in a direction in which Congress never has conferred it, namely, jurisdiction to hear and determine cases where the Government may be liable for the negligence of its agents in the carrying on of public works. That, as I have said, is a jurisdiction which never has been conferred by Congress upon any tribunal, and which ought not to be conferred. This Government has always recognized the English doctrine of respondeat superior, which has been cited by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], and when the bill was passed in the last session we went farther than we had ever gone before in the direction of making the Government liable, but we expressly excluded cases of this kind, so that now we are asked to make an exception to the general law, although we passed that general law for the express purpose of covering all these cases.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman does not wish to misrepresent the facts, I know, and certainly he can not intend to state that Congress has not passed a number of bills to pay for torts committed by the servants of the Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. I presume that Congress has passed a great many bills for the payment of money out of the Treasury by special appropriations and by conferring special jurisdiction. That is one of the things I have complained of ever since I have been in Congress. I think we ought to deal with these matters upon general principles. In the last session we did undertake to deal with this question in that way, and we fixed the principle of liability, and now here, in the very first session after that general law has gone into effect, we have presented to us a special act to take this case out of the general rule and allow the Government to be mulcted in damages in a direction where no general jurisdiction has ever heretofore been conferred upon any court.

I undertake to say that if the proposition were made here to-day to confer upon the Court of Claims, generally, the jurisdiction which this bill proposes to confer in this special case there would not be half a dozen gentlemen here who would vote for it.

Mr. BAYNE. There ought not to be half a dozen who would not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then why did not the gentleman when we were considering the general bill at the last session move to strike out the words which denied this jurisdiction?

Mr. BAYNE. I did, sir. I tried my best to have them struck out.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the gentleman understands that Congress at its last session refused the request generally which he now asks specially to have granted to his constituents. I think this business of special legislation ought to be curtailed instead of being enlarged. We were told by the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee last session that the bill we then passed was for the purpose of doing away in great measure with special legislation, but, instead of that, it seems to have invited special acts, such as have not heretofore been considered in this House. Instead of doing away with the special cases which were incumbering our dockets, it seems to have invited these appeals to confer jurisdiction where Congress has always expressly declined to confer it. I hope this bill will not be passed, because it opens up a line of legislation the end of which no man can foresee. If you begin with this case you must treat every other claimant in the same way hereafter, and agree to pay whatever damages may arise from the negligence of the agents of the Government.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGG], who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOGG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Let the bill continue as follows, after the last line:

"And provided further, That the Court of Claims is hereby empowered to decide all questions of law and fact that may be presented by, or arise upon, any petition that may be filed in this case, and to decide whether the facts presented by such petition do in themselves constitute a legal claim or demand against the Government; and the liability of the Government is hereby expressly reserved by this act."

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment is to enable the court to hear argument, and to consider more deliberately and thoroughly the very questions which we are considering here. With such an amendment I do not think the bill will be objectionable.

Mr. LANHAM. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. When the discussion first arose I had the notion that the bill intended to appropriate the amount of money necessary to pay the loss incurred by these claimants, and in that form I should have been perfectly willing to vote for it. I belong to that class of men in the community, increasing in number I hope, who are not afraid of a precedent if the precedent rests upon principles of plain justice.

It is admitted in this case that if this pier had belonged to an individual, to a private corporation, to a municipal corporation, or to a county, there would be a plain remedy at law, and all the argument on the other side is that we, the great United States of America, should shield ourselves behind our sovereignty and refuse to pay the damage. State after State in this Union—England, from which we take our common law, has been gradually doing away with the principle that because the state is great and powerful she can inflict injury upon an individual and not be obliged to pay for it. We have modified the common law by allowing every person who has a claim sounding in contract to bring it before the courts of the United States. Is there any difference between taking a man's property for public purposes, paying him a just compensation therefor, and destroying his property and paying him for it? My friend from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] says that the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply. That is true, but if it did apply in this case, you would not find this claimant coming to Congress for relief.

But it is because the hard, iron rule of the common law bars these people from a remedy that they come here asking justice from the body that has the power to change the law. When an individual or a corporation, private or municipal, would be obliged to grant redress I do not believe that the Government of the United States should stand back and say it will not give relief.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will my friend from Massachusetts permit a question? Suppose that Wells, Fargo & Co. or the Adams Express Company should undertake to carry for an individual a package such as is generally carried in the mails, and should fail to deliver it. The gentleman will agree with me that the company would in such a case be liable. Now, if the Government fails to deliver a package through the Postal Department, is the Government liable?

Mr. COLLINS. In answer to the first point of my friend from Tennessee, I will simply say that there is no occasion for stating an undisputed proposition in so solemn a manner. As to the other branch of the gentleman's question, the Government of the United States in that case also shields itself behind its sovereignty and refuses——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does it not justly do so?

Mr. COLLINS. That is a question which I shall be prepared to discuss with the gentleman from Tennessee, or any other gentleman, when it comes up. Let us take one case at a time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I simply wished to see whether the gentleman would follow his premises to the absurdity to which they necessarily lead.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman's range of vision as to reaching "absurdities" is very different from mine. Mine may be either narrower or broader than his. But I do not allow my logic to carry me to any absurdity or to any meanness toward people who are injured by this Government or by an individual.

My friend from Illinois quotes law which is perfectly applicable to another state of facts. We are seeking to make a law to cover this case. I come from a State which is liberal enough and great enough to refuse to shield itself behind its sovereign power when it does injury to an individual. If the United States Government had seized this vessel and appropriated it as a part of the naval force of the country—had used it for Government purposes—the Government would have to pay for the vessel. Everybody concedes that. But the United States Government, by the negligence of its servants and agents, sends that boat to the bottom of the river or burns it to the water's edge, destroying at the same time human life. In such a case the Government ought to be responsible.

My friend from Tennessee says that perhaps the representatives of those people who were killed in that disaster—I will not say accident—owing to the culpable carelessness of the agents of the United States, might bring suit. In the name of God, why should they not? What right have the agents of the United States to be so culpably careless as to destroy not only property but human life? If this bill is establishing a precedent—and I do not believe it is—it is a precedent which rests upon plain principles of justice, which ought to be followed in every case where like circumstances arise.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman will allow me to ask him one question. Upon the same principle which he advocates, would he favor a bill giving special jurisdiction to the Court of Claims, so as to allow the heirs or administrators of the deceased persons to whom he has referred to sue the Government?

Mr. COLLINS. I certainly would. The United States Government has no business to kill anybody except in war or in the punishment of crime.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE].

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I have never in my life heard it maintained, even in the court of a justice of the peace, that the Government is liable for the neglect of its officers. A bridge may break while you are passing across it; a State or a county may be charged with the construction and maintenance of that bridge; its insecurity may have been known by the officer having the bridge under his charge, but in no such case has a State or a county ever been held liable. If the law imposed such liability, the State could not exist. The legal doctrine denying such liability has been well established in England for one hundred and fifty years, and it is recognized as law throughout the States of this Union.

In matters of this kind there is no parallel between the Government and individuals.

It seems to me as a business man that this is a very plain question. There is no dispute about the facts of this case. They are reported to this House by the Court of Claims. We are asked to refer the claim again to that court—for what? In order to obtain its opinion of the law! Is there any officer of this Government who has the right to advise this body as to its legal duties? This is a simple legal question. Is this claim just? If so, it should be allowed. We are the judges of the justice of this bill. If this claim is right, let it be allowed; if wrong, let it be rejected. Members here have no right, when their legal knowledge fails, to appeal to the Supreme Court for its decision upon a question of law.

The facts of the case are not disputed, and I insist no lawyer can claim for a single minute that the Government of the United States is liable for the neglect of its officers. In the very horn-books of the law the contrary doctrine is laid down. Whether just or unjust, that is the law.

The equity of the case is a different thing. If this is presented as an equitable claim upon some special reasons, then it is proper for the advocates of the bill to present their equitable grounds. But as a legal proposition it can not be claimed that the Government is liable for the neglect of its officers. It is not an insurer of property or life. Gentlemen fall into confusion in this matter. When, for example, a city under its charter assumes to do a thing, it must do it well. If it undertakes to light the streets it must light them properly. But the same considerations do not apply to a State or a county, nor to the General Government. If the United States Government undertakes to light the harbors or coasts of the country its action is altogether voluntary. Should there be a failure to do the work properly the party who suffers thereby may have an action against the officer who has refused to do his duty; but he can not bring suit against the Government. In such a case the Government can not be sued, because it is sovereign and independent. Hence, in this case the appeal of this party must be simply to the equitable judgment of this House. If a majority of the House should think that a sufficient equitable claim is presented, then the bill should be passed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. I suppose all the discussion which is desired has been had in opposition to this bill, but if any other gentleman wishes to be heard I will yield the floor to him.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask leave to offer an amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BYNUM. I submit the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 7, after the word "eighty-four:"

"And the claims of the heirs and personal representatives of the persons whose lives were lost by reason of the loss and destruction of said steamer."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. The parties to which it refers are not named in the bill. It relates to parties not here asking for anything. It adds another and distinct party. In other words, it is another claim, differing entirely from that included in the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. It is clearly not in order to unite two claims in one bill.

Mr. BYNUM. It is clearly in order to include in this bill claims on the part of those whose lives were lost at the time this steamer was sunk. I never heard it attempted before to decide another claim may not be included in a pending bill, and especially in the case of a man claiming damages growing out of the same transaction. If that were true, I apprehend no appropriation bill could be amended by adding another item, and the only amendment which could be made to it would be to increase or decrease the amount. But such has never been the ruling in this House on the question of order. The amendment is perfectly germane to the bill, as it arises out of the same transaction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read a passage from the Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is also out of order to ingraft on any bill for the relief of one individual a provision for the relief of another.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. HOGG. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Let the bill continue as follows, from the end of the last line therein:

"And provided further, That the Court of Claims is hereby empowered to decide all questions of law and fact that may be presented by, or arise upon, any petition that may be filed in this case, and decide whether the facts presented by such petition do in themselves constitute a legal claim or demand against the Government; and the legal liability of the Government is hereby expressly reserved by this act."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 87.

Mr. MORGAN. No quorum has voted.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MORGAN and Mr. LANHAM.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 106.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The only question is the liability of the Government, as all the questions of fact have been obtained by the Government. That is purely a question of law. The tribunal established by Congress has ascertained what the facts in this case are, and the question of law which arises therein is, is the Government liable? Now it seems to me that the proper committee to take that question into consideration is the Committee on the Judiciary. It is an important precedent which we are about to establish, and which, I confess, I am not willing to establish without careful determination.

Mr. COLLINS. Is not the gentleman willing to trust the question to the Supreme Court?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Indubitably I agree with the gentleman, the Supreme Court of the United States is entirely competent to decide the question. But the precedent we are to establish is whether we will let this class of cases be sent to the Court of Claims to be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a question for the Committee on the Judiciary, and therefore if that question is to arise, as we all know by the particular mode in which this particular class of cases goes to the Court of Claims is one which ordinarily does not give the Government a fair chance and a fair hearing, I wish it to be referred to that committee.

If it be true that this House ought to establish the precedent that the Government is in a certain sense an accident, fire, and marine insurance company on all the rivers and water-courses it undertakes to improve; that every time it undertakes to improve and make navigation better it thereby becomes the insurer against all accidents caused by the negligence of public officers, I prefer to have that, as a preliminary question, submitted to me after consideration by the Law Committee of the House.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. To refer any private bill to the Judiciary Committee is a burial of it so deep that there is no hope for resurrection.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. Is this proposition debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not want to occupy the time of the committee by debating it. I only want to say that the Committee on Claims is composed of lawyers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And very good ones.

A MEMBER. Better lawyers than the Judiciary?

Mr. BAYNE. Very good ones, I am sure, and capable of dealing with any such questions.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is understood, of course, that we limit that to the present Committee on Claims, saying nothing of their predecessors in former Congresses. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. The present Committee on Claims took the same view precisely of it; and I think it is due to this claimant that he should have his case passed upon by the Court of Claims, and then the Government of the United States will be perfectly safe when its Attorney-General, if he wishes, can take it up to the Supreme Court to decide whether there is or is not a legal liability on the part of the Government. It will bring it to a judgment and conclusion; whereas the motion of my friend from Kentucky simply places it beyond hope of being reached during this Congress, and I hope he will withdraw it.

But I want to suggest another reason why his amendment, if adopted, would place this bill in a most anomalous position. This claim was reported from the Court of Claims and placed on the Calendar, and is now in a position where it has the right of consideration. If it goes to the Judiciary Committee and they ever make a report upon it, it falls away back and must take its chances at the bottom of the list for consideration.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I can not imagine that if it is referred to the Judiciary Committee it will be to bury it beyond the power of resurrection. That, however, is a question between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and its members, as to whether they can be presumed to do their duty and report the bill back.

As to the anomalous condition in which it leaves the bill, I know of no remedy for that. It is rather an anomalous bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Many bills of a similar character have been passed before. I imagine, however, that they must have come from a different section of the country.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know anything as to where this claim comes from. I do not know the geography of the bill. The law question involved is not a geographical question with me.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish it was not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Law questions are not usually matters of geography.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. As the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary seems to be out, I only wish to say, in response to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, that I am convinced all of that committee believe in the resurrection. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. Under the rules of the House the Committee on Claims of the last House, as well as the Committee on Claims of the present House, is the committee charged with the jurisdiction of determining the legal questions involved in this claim.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me say a word in regard to the pending amendment. This bill as it stands refers this case to the Court of Claims, to hear and determine the same to judgment, with the right of appeal as in other cases. If it passes the Court of Claims, and goes to the Supreme Court, they will understand, as they now understand, that it is to hear and determine a case to judgment, and that you have given jurisdiction over the subject.

Now, the committee refused to determine the question of limiting the liability of the Government a moment ago by refusing, by a decided vote, to accept an amendment proposed by the gentleman on the left [Mr. HOGG]; and the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky now is that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee will determine the legal question as to whether the United States is liable in a case of this kind, and it can determine that question as well as the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court. I therefore favor that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly, if I can have the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to ask why the gentleman did not bring that proposition forward in the committee when this bill was under consideration?

Mr. SPRINGER. I explained that once before.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I happened to be out when that was explained. I am glad it was, and I hope it was explained satisfactorily.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was not present at all the meetings of the Committee on Claims last session.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the gentleman was present when this bill was considered, as I happen to remember.

Mr. SPRINGER. If so, I have changed my opinion.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am glad to know the gentleman is still learning. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Wise men change their opinions; some others never do. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 98, noes 103.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, and Mr. LANHAM were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 105.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that the bill as amended be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 108, noes 100.

Mr. SPRINGER called for tellers, but after a pause said: I withdraw the demand for tellers, and will ask for a vote in the House.

The motion of Mr. LANHAM was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration bills on the Private Calendar, had instructed him to report back to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

JAMES H. AYRES.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (H. R. 4956 of last session) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHAW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OWNERS OF STEAMER I. N. BUNTON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (H. R. 7211 of last Congress), referring the claims of the owners of the steamer I. N. Bunton to the Court of Claims. The bill was reported with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

In line 8, strike out the words "as a court of admiralty jurisdiction."

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MILLS. Not for any purpose of filibustering, I desire to make the motion now that when the House adjourn to-day it will be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HATCH. If gentlemen of the House appreciated the importance of the bill now on the Calendar, they would be willing to come here to-morrow to consider it. The Committee on Agriculture has been pressed from all sides to have it brought before the House.

Mr. MILLS. I think it will keep until Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HATCH. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 157, noes 91.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is not the assignment of the agricultural-experiment-stations bill for to-morrow?

Mr. HATCH. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The inquiry of the gentleman from New Jersey is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 75 members voting therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 154, not voting 80; as follows:

YEAS—89.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The following-named members were announced as paired:

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. GEST, until further notice.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, until Monday.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. FITCH, for this day.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. WEST.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR.

Mr. FRENCH with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. HUNTER.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. MAFFETT.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, with Mr. ARNOLD.

Mr. MERRIMAN with Mr. KEAN.

Mr. KENNEDY with Mr. DIBBLE.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, during the day a number of gentlemen on both sides of the House came to me and asked whether there would be any business transacted to-morrow, intimating that they did not desire a session on Saturday. [Cries of "Regular order!" on the Republican side.] I inquired of other gentlemen whether they wished to have a session to-morrow——

Mr. STRUBLE. I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is out of order.

Mr. MILLS. Then, sir, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLS. I am going to state it now, as I was proceeding to do when I was interrupted. I gave my word to several gentlemen on both sides of the House, as far as I could give it, that there would be no meeting to-morrow. They supposed that, placed in the position I was, this House would follow me in the matter, and I only want to say now that I am not responsible for the refusal of the House to carry out the promise that I made. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman will do me the justice to say that he never mentioned that fact to me. I knew nothing about it.

Mr. MILLS. I did not understand that the House was expected to follow your lead in that matter.

Mr. HATCH. I trust the House will always follow me when I am right.

Mr. MILLS. With the aid of the gentlemen on the other side. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] has moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to submit a report.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman.

CALIFORNIA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Elections, submitted a report in the matter of A. E. Redstone claiming to have been elected a member of the House from the Fifth district of California; which was referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me to make a report?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield for that purpose.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT MELBOURNE.

Mr. MORROW, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a joint resolution (H. R. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW], who desires to submit a report.

CONDUCTORS FOR HOUSE ELEVATOR.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back, with amendments, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint and employ two conductors for the new House elevator, at a salary of $1,100 each, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add after the word "House," in line 8, the words "who shall be under the supervision and direction of the Architect of the Capitol."

Mr. SHAW. I ask the immediate consideration of this resolution.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to, and the resolution as amended adopted.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, without consulting the friends of the measure which I had expected to bring up to-morrow, but in view of the statement made on the floor by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], that the adjournment till to-morrow places him personally in an awkward position before members of the House, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the motion submitted by him was lost, and I hope the friends of the measure of which I have charge will vote for it.

Mr. MILLS. I object; and I now move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question) said: On the motion of the gentleman from Texas the ayes are 106 and the noes 118.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 116, nays 104, not voting 103; as follows:

YEAS—116.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call Mr. HATCH said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that in antagonizing the motion of the gentleman——

Mr. MILLS. Regular order.

Mr. HATCH. I ask to make an explanation.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to make a single statement.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. HATCH. I ask, then, to change my vote from "no" to "ay." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania. I ask to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am paired on political questions, and if this is considered to be of that nature I will withdraw my vote.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, for the rest of the day.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. WILLIAMS, for the rest of the day.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. LAIDLAW, for the rest of the day.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. HOUK, for the rest of the day.

RUFUS FLETCHER.

On motion of Mr. HOUK, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Rufus Fletcher without leaving copies.

JOHN M. HIGGINS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a substitute a bill (H. R. 254) for the relief of John M. Higgins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

A. GATES LEE.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 297) for the relief of A. Gates Lee, with a substitute; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF C. M. BRIGGS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 4909) for the relief of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATHANIEL M'KAY.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 4910) to amend section 14 of the act approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year 1880, and for other purposes," and relating to second-class mail matter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

On motion of Mr. BUCHANAN, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. 1639) for the erection of a public building at Atlantic City, N. J., and it was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

And then, on motion of Mr. LANHAM (at 5 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday next.

---

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 16, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 15, 1887, the letters, dispatches, reports, etc., of the Bureau of Indian Affairs relating to the business intrusted to Mrs. Charlotte M. Clark, as special agent to inspect the schools of the Chippewa Indians; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the mayor and general council of Mobile, Ala., the Buffalo (N. Y.) Business Men's Association, the Kansas City (Mo.) Commercial Exchange, the Lynchburgh (Va.) Tobacco Association, and the Los Angeles (Cal.) Board of Trade, in favor of the proposed world's exposition to be held in Washington, D. C.; which were referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of Frank P. Baum and 30 other citizens of Benzie County, Michigan, praying for the passage of Senate bill 553, to regulate immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of Daniel D. Sanford and 30 other citizens of Hillsdale County, Michigan; the petition of G. A. Mosey and 54 other citizens of Barry County, Michigan; the petition of John McNitt and 59 other citizens of Muskegon and Ottawa Counties, Michigan; the petition of E. M. Johnson and 170 other citizens of Calhoun County, Michigan; the petition of David Sanders and 15 other citizens of Ingham County, Michigan, and the petition of J. T. Russell and 92 other citizens of Branch County, Michigan, praying that the patent laws be so amended as to protect innocent users of patented articles; which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. FARWELL presented the petition of Chancy M. Payne, late second lieutenant Company I, First Illinois Artillery, praying for certain legislation correcting his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of the city council and Chamber of Commerce of Grand Forks, Dakota Territory, praying for permission to build wagon bridges over the Red River of the North; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Grand Forks, Dakota Territory, praying for the division of the third judicial district of Dakota; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of teachers and superintendents of North Dakota, praying for legislation to protect school lands in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MANDERSON presented resolutions adopted by the Dairymen's Association of Nebraska in favor of an appropriation to eradicate pleuropneumonia and in favor of what is known as the Miller-Carey bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Alden Speare, E. R. McPherson, and others, members of the Boston (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, and of Scull & Bradley and other insurance companies, praying that an appropriation be made for the construction and maintenance of a submarine cable from Pasque Island to Gay Head, thus connecting Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard, Mass., with the mainland; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUTLER presented a petition signed by the speaker of the house of representatives and 112 other members, senators, and officers of the General Assembly of South Carolina, praying that an appropriation of money be made to improve the navigation of the Congaree River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the letter-carriers of Charleston, S. C., praying that increased compensation be allowed letter-carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the board of health of Charleston, S. C., praying for the proper equipment of outer quarantine refuge stations; which were referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. BUTLER. I will read an extract from a letter from a citizen of Charleston, S. C.—it is a private letter, and therefore it is not necessary to give his name—calling attention to what he claims is an evil in the management of the Post-Office Department under the law:

I am requested to use whatever influence I may possess in having changed the present law which enables paper-back novels, blood-and-thunder stories, to be sent through the United States mails as second-class matter at 1 cent per pound, while all school, law, scientific, and religious books, Bibles, etc., are made to pay 8 cents per pound. Most of the novels sent at 1 cent per pound are said to be trashy and injurious reading. It is desired to make all pay alike, say 8 cents per pound. The objection to the existing laws appears to me to be well taken. If you agree with me in this respect, I should be glad to have you use your influence to bring about the desired change.

I read this in order that it may go into the RECORD, and I invite the attention of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to it.

Mr. HALE. I present a memorial of the American Forestry Congress, indorsed and approved at the annual meeting of the Maine State Grange, which represents more than 15,000 patrons of husbandry, together with an accompanying bill.

I wish to say in regard to the bill that I have examined it and do not commit myself to all of its provisions. I think it ought to be in some respects recast; but the question of the preservation of our forests and the rapidly disappearing timber lands in every manner that it is proper for the General Government by legislation to interfere with the matter is a very serious one; and I hope that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will give the subject its early attention and endeavor to mature legislation to meet the wants of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table until the order for the introduction of bills is reached, and the memorial will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SPOONER presented the memorial of A. O. Wright and others, of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the admission of Utah as a State so long as the local civil power of the Territory remains in the hands of the Mormon priesthood and the people evade or refuse obedience to the present laws of Congress against polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. STEWART presented a memorial of citizens of Nevada, remonstrating against any reduction of the tariff on imported wool, or any legislation placing wool on the free-list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Avis J. Hockey, widow of William Hockey, late corporal of Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, praying that her name be placed on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the board of supervisors of Montgomery County, Illinois, and resolutions adopted by the board of supervisors of Edgar County, Illinois, favoring the enactment of legislation now pending in relation to swamp lands; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the petition of the Knights of Labor, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, containing the memorial adopted at their last national assembly at Minneapolis, Minn., signed by T. V. Powderly, A. A. Carlton, William H. Bailey, Thomas B. McGuire, T. B. Barry, and Ira B. Aylsworth, and by J. W. Hayes, secretary of the general executive board.

In the resolution adopted by the national assembly, and authenticated to Congress by the executive board, they set forth at considerable length and with much minuteness strong and definite charges of incapacity, or worse, in the management of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the printing of the Government securities.

The petitioners also brought to me specimens of the recent work of the Government, some bank notes and silver certificates which had been in circulation but a very few months, and which had the appearance of having been in circulation for many years, looking, in fact, very much like the remnants we see occasionally of the circulation of the ancient State banks of twenty-five or fifty years ago.

They go on in this petition to specify the causes of complaint and to show wherein it has reference to the work of the Knights of Labor; and they also accompany the petition with a bill to be introduced and referred to the Committee on Finance; and they pray for an investigation.

I can not make a statement of the contents of the petition briefer than the petition itself, which comprises some 12 pages in type-writing; I therefore ask that it be printed in the RECORD, as the memorial of this organization, and that the accompanying bill and the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the petition be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I object.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I will take the petition and explain it more fully.

The general assembly passed first this resolution:

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor, That we demand that all Government securities, notes, bonds, checks, and stamps shall be printed in the highest style of the art of plate printing from hand-roller presses, so as to secure the Government and the public against loss by wear and counterfeiting; and the general assembly or any persons or committee appointed to represent the order before Congress are hereby directed to do all that is practicable to give effect to this resolution.

Then they proceed to pray for an investigation into the management of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, and also for such legislation as will prevent the debasement of the currency notes, silver certificates, national-bank notes, internal-revenue stamps, and other Government obligations issued by that bureau; also that an investigation be made into the present method of supplying the Government with postage-stamps and postal-notes.

The petitioners set forth abuses which they understand and which they believe to be occurring in that bureau of the Government, and they are quite specific, occupying several pages.

They set forth other investigations which have taken place in the same bureau and the result, a law that has been enacted requiring certain specific things to be accomplished there, which requirements of law, they say, have been violated. They say, among other things——

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee will state his question of order.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the fourth clause of Rule VII be read by the Secretary. That will state my point of order a little more tersely than I can do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause referred to will be read at the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Before any petition or memorial shall be received, it shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist, and a brief statement of its contents made by the Presiding Officer or Senator presenting it. But no petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power shall be received, unless the same be transmitted to the Senate by the President.

Mr. BLAIR. The petitioners further state the remedies which they think should be applied, and they specify——

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Chair hold that a brief statement is being made of the contents of the petition?

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARY

Mr. BLAIR. I am making as brief a statement as possible. I have omitted to read the larger part of the petition, and I am nearly through. I think it would have been better to have had the whole of it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee having raised the point of order under the rule, he asks the opinion of the Chair. The uniform practice of the Senate has been to permit Senators to exercise practically their own discretion under the rules in the presentation of contents of petitions, and unless there is an evident abuse of discretion on the part of Senators the Chair would be unwilling to interfere. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw his objection to the printing of the petition. It is comparatively brief and it is on a very important matter. I am really stating it quite as briefly as I can, and I am omitting more than I ought. Will the Senator withdraw his objection and let it be printed in full?

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot withdraw the objection. I think it probable I am in sympathy with the objects of the petition which the Senator is presenting, but I can not consent to have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD lumbered up with every petition upon every subject, and at all lengths. We have gone very much too far in that direction already. I feel bound to insist upon my objection, and I expect to repeat the objection just as often as these applications are made.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I will proceed and do the best I can with it.

In requesting the investigation, the petitioners state:

First. That by printing the backs of the silver certificates on steam presses the note is inferior and discreditable to the Government.

Second. That the internal-revenue stamps printed on the steam printing-presses are greatly inferior; are not as good as many trade labels, and are a disgrace to the Government.

Third. That economy and not security is the primary object of the present management.

Fourth. That at the suggestion of the present chief the law has been so framed as to prevent the employment of a sufficient number of plate printers to perform the work of the bureau in the manner contemplated when the transfer of the entire work to the bureau was made.

Fifth. That the same law which limits the number of printers to be employed has enabled the chief to increase the steam printing-presses nearly threefold.

Sixth. That the steam printing-presses are not furnished by the owners of the patents, but the right to construct them is purchased by the Government. A royalty is also paid on every impression made.

Seventh. That the steam printing-presses are so easily put out of order that it requires the whole force of machinists to be employed in the effort to keep them in repair, to the neglect of other and more important work.

Eighth. That the Milligan press, the one most in use, has been condemned repeatedly.

Ninth. That an employé of the bureau who claimed to have made certain improvements on the said presses was required to furnish his drawings and specifications to the manufacturers, the owners of the patents reaping all the benefits and the Government being at all of the expense.

Tenth. That no expert with any regard for his reputation will hesitate to pronounce the work done by said presses as inferior.

Eleventh. That unless Congress interferes the attempt to force the steam printing-presses on the Government will succeed, and every kind of Government obligation will be printed on them, rapid, cheap work being substituted for good but more costly work.

They specify, to the number of some sixteen or eighteen, their causes of complaint and reasons for praying for a remedy.

I hope that this matter, which is, from my examination of it, of very serious importance, will receive the attention of the Committee on Finance. Certainly the work that was shown to me is of such inferior quality that an ordinary silver certificate would readily be taken for a counterfeit note after a few months of circulation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR. It is accompanied by a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table until that order is reached.

Mr. BROWN. I present the petition of Messrs. Hutchinson & Brother and a number of other druggists of the city of Atlanta, Ga., who beg to call attention to the fact that the present internal-revenue tax on alcohol which is used in the manufacture of medicines is a great hardship; that most of the drugs used by the poor and by everybody else are made in a great degree of alcohol, which is the menstruum or basis in use in making up drugs. They say, for instance, that alcohol which is 95 per cent. pure pays a tax of $1.70 per gallon, which is 22 cents per pint, and the menstruum of paregoric is just one-half alcohol. This would make the cost of the menstruum of a quart of paregoric 32 cents, while without the tax it would be only 6 cents, making 240 per cent. tax on paregoric, for instance, on account of the present tax on alcohol. The same, they say, is true of laudanum, Bateman drops, and most other tinctures used in prescriptions. In another class of tinctures, as tincture of capsicum, capsicum compound, spirits of camphor, and the like, there is even a larger proportion of alcohol. The petitioners say that the tax on alcohol is very oppressive on the people, and they ask that it be repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of 30 citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., praying for legislation to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases among cattle; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 49 citizens of Hermitage, Davidson County, Tennessee, praying that increased compensation be allowed fourth-class postmasters; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BOWEN presented a memorial of the Leadville (Colorado) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the proposed removal of the present duty on lead ores; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of tobacco manufacturers of the ninth internal-revenue district of Pennsylvania, praying for the abolition of the internal-revenue tax on cigars and cigarettes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented additional papers to accompany the petition of Joseph G. Swank, of Columbia County, Pennsylvania, praying for legislation granting him certain relief; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHACE presented a petition of citizens of Rhode Island, praying for the passage of the bill for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1157) to correct an error in the description of certain lands entered and patented to the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, by authority of an act of Congress approved May 21, 1872, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889," and for other purposes, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the bill reported by him may be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

Mr. PLATT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut objects, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 281) making an appropriation for the extension and enlargement of the United States custom-house at Kansas City, Mo., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1377) for the relief of Henry Pickett, of Washington, D. C., asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 434) granting a pension to Mrs. Hettie K. Painter, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1468) granting a pension to John Stiles; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 1469) for the relief of the settlers upon lands along the Des Moines River, above the Raccoon Forks, in the State of Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SHERMAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1470) creating a commission to inquire into and report upon the material, industrial, and mental progress of the colored race since 1865, and making appropriations for the same; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the bill is referred I wish to say that it comes to me, as the papers show, from clergymen in the State of North Carolina, of the colored race, who take a very flattering view of their hopes and expectations, and of their progress in the last twenty years.

The papers which accompany the bill show that this is an honest and earnest effort made on behalf of the very best people of the colored race, to appeal to the white race, to their neighbors, for aid and assistance, not in money, but by such moral support as will enable them to advance their condition and become worthy citizens of the United States.

To express their ideas, the bill provides that the President of the United States shall appoint a commission of eminent persons of both races to examine into certain matters. In order to show the scope of it, I will read a single paragraph from a letter I have received:

> The whole country is interested about the negro's adaptation to the lofty forms of civilized life as the Republic of the New World epitomizes them. No Federal census embodying all phases of society can meet the purposes of this act. The negro is a part of the nation, with separate, distinct, and wholly dissimilar characteristics. He has but little social intercourse with his white fellow-countryman. There are no interchanges of strictly social amenities. There are few joint copartnerships in any vocation formed by black and white citizens. Intermarriage is under the ban of both races. Ecclesiastically there is no commingling. The negro has a world of his own. Into this world the nation does not often enter, while the nations are oblivious of its existence. He (the negro) lives to himself, marrying within race limitations, moving in his own social, industrial, and religious sphere—a sphere, by the way, peculiar by reason of past environments to the negro, and hardly realized in all its tremendous magnitude by the higher phases of American society.

The letter then proceeds to appeal for an impartial examination by a commission of men of both races, to be appointed by the President, to look into their condition, into the progress they have made, and into their ability to adapt themselves to the highest forms of civilization.

I introduce the bill with great pleasure, because I think such an investigation as that proposed, made in a non-partisan and non-sectarian view, without regard to contests of race, would be a benefit in instructing the people of the United States as to the condition and progress of seven million of our fellow-citizens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 1471) to regulate the compensation of per-diem employés of the United States Government; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1472) relating to the printing of Government securities, Treasury notes, national-bank notes, checks, drafts, and internal-revenue stamps; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 1473) to authorize the Chicago, Kansas and Western Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 1474) to grant an American register to the foreign-built bark Nordstjernen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 35) appropriating $20,000 for the Subtropical Exposition at Jacksonville, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 36) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HALE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 37) to authorize the admission, duty free, of the products of certain North American provinces, which may have applied for admission into the Union; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the special deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. PUGH submitted the following concurrent resolution; which, with the accompanying letter from the Commissioner of Education, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1886-'87 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 25,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

WEIL AND LA ABRA CLAIM.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate, in addition to the information asked for in the Senate resolution of the 21st of December, 1887, relating to moneys remaining in the hands of the Secretary of State, paid in by the Government of Mexico upon or applicable to the awards in favor of Benjamin Weil and of La Abra Silver Mining Company, respectively, and of all correspondence between said Secretary and said two respective awardees, or between said Secretary and the respective attorneys of such awardees, in regard to the submission of said claims, respectively, to the Court of Claims, under the twelfth section of the act of Congress approved the 3d of March, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," and in regard to the payment by said Secretary of said moneys upon said awards, respectively.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise to a personal explanation. There has been an item of rather a jocular nature circulating around in the papers since last Thursday. I cut the slip I have in my hand from the New York World of its issue of Saturday last, though I think it was not published perhaps for the first time in that paper. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The article will be read at the desk, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Senator GRAY, of Delaware, has not yet recovered from the surprise which overcame him Thursday afternoon. He was entitled to the floor of the Senate to deliver a speech on the Blair educational bill. His effort to fill a "long-felt want" was defeated by Senator MITCHELL, of Oregon, however, who politely asked Senator GRAY to grant him a few minutes that he might submit a few observations on the Chinese restriction bill. Senator GRAY courteously gave way, and MITCHELL talked for two hours and a half. Senator GRAY now thinks of introducing a bill restricting Senator MITCHELL from indulgence in sharp practice.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, so far as that item attributes to me any discourtesy on that occasion towards the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and so far as it conveys the impression, as it does very clearly, that I resorted to some species of sharp practice in order to obtain possession of the floor to deliver a speech, I simply desire to denounce it in every essential particular as being absolutely false.

Moreover, the man who inspired that item, whoever he may be, is guilty of either a willful or an ignorant misrepresentation of facts. Whether the Senator from Delaware has recovered from any supposed surprise which he experienced at any act of omission or commission on my part upon that occasion I do not know. One thing, however, I do know, that when I addressed the Senate on that occasion, neither the Senator from Delaware nor any other Senator in this body was entitled to the floor as against myself. Nor is it true, as stated in the item, that before proceeding to make my speech I requested the Senator from Delaware to give me a few minutes, that I might submit a few observations, as stated in the item, upon the Chinese restriction act. I neither requested the Senator from Delaware nor any other member of this body to give me permission to address the Senate at that time; it was not necessary.

The facts, Mr. President, are simply these, as every Senator here knows: The unfinished business on that day was the Blair educational bill. That bill, under the rules of the Senate, was not in order in the Senate until 2 o'clock of that day, as every Senator knows. At that time, in case the bill had been taken up, the Senator from Delaware was entitled to the floor to speak to that bill.

On the 12th day of December I had introduced a bill relating to the exclusion of Chinese. I then asked that it might lie on the table, and I gave notice that at some convenient time at no distant day I should ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration for the purpose of enabling me to submit some remarks before it was referred to the appropriate committee.

On Monday last I again gave notice in open Senate that on Wednesday, at the conclusion of the morning business, I should ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill for the purpose of enabling me to submit some remarks in support of the measure before it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. When Wednesday morning came, at the conclusion of the morning business, as I was about to rise, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] rose and moved to proceed to the consideration of the resolution introduced by him on the same day that I had introduced my bill, and which had also laid upon the table. That resolution was taken up, and he proceeded to make a political speech, and a very good one. That speech continued until after 2 o'clock, when, of course, the regular order coming up, I made no effort to get up my bill.

On Thursday morning, the day referred to in this item, at the conclusion of the morning business, which was concluded at about half past 1 o'clock, I rose in my place without resorting to any sharp practice, and addressed the Chair. The Chair in its discretion recognized me, and I moved to proceed to the consideration of the bill; my motion prevailed, and it was taken up without a dissenting vote. I again addressed the Chair, and was recognized and proceeded to discuss the bill.

At that time neither the Senator from Delaware nor any other Senator was entitled to the floor as against me. The educational bill was not in order until 2 o'clock of that day. I had about half completed my speech when 2 o'clock arrived, when the educational bill was in order. Then the honorable Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] rose in his place, and, as is the universal custom under such circumstances, asked the unanimous consent of the Senate that the regular order, the educational bill, should be laid temporarily aside to enable me to conclude my speech. To that request no objection was made by any member of the Senate. The Senator from Delaware could not have objected to that request unless he had been guilty of a discourtesy that was never known in this body, and a discourtesy which the honorable Senator from Delaware is not capable of committing. The regular order having been temporarily laid aside, I proceeded with my remarks and concluded, and then the unfinished business came up.

That is all there is to it, and all that there was of it. If there was any sharp practice in that, or any want of courtesy to the Senator from Delaware, or to anybody else, I fail to see where it comes in.

Mr. President, I am not in the habit of resorting to sharp practice in this body for the purpose of either obtaining the floor or retaining it after I have obtained it. While the item proceeds in a rather jocular vein, it contains a covert attack on me of a most contemptible nature, as I regard it, and I should be not only very much surprised, but very much pained if I should ever learn that it was inspired in any shape, manner, or form by any member of the Senate, and I am quite sure that no honorable member of the press would publish a thing of that kind against any member of the Senate unless he had been misinformed. That is all I have to say.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not know that I am called upon to say anything except, if a disclaimer is necessary, to disclaim anything like a grievance against the Senator from Oregon.

I was entitled to the floor when the morning hour expired on the day on which the Senator spoke. He began during the morning hour and on its expiration went on with his speech by the permission of the Senate, and I was glad to extend to him the courtesy which he has correctly stated is a usual one. The Senator having the floor when the morning hour closed was allowed to go on and conclude; and it gave me great pleasure to listen to the Senator's speech. It was a very good speech, and I do not know that he gave us too much of a good thing, but I can assure the Senator that I have not the slightest knowledge of this article, nor have I had any connection with it, nor have I any suspicion as to who is the author of the paragraph he has just read. It seems to me rather like a little fun.

However, seriously, I only want to say that so far as I am concerned I have not the slightest grievance against the Senator from Oregon about the matter. He had a perfect right to avail himself of the courtesy of the Senate, or my courtesy, if you choose to put it so, and I shall be always glad to extend to him a like courtesy, if it is in my power to do so.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4911) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 261) to amend the law concerning the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4911) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If the business of the morning hour is over, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and thirty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 17, 1888, at 12 m.

SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

William F. Vilas, of Wisconsin, to be Secretary of the Interior.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 16, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

IMPORTATION OF OPIUM.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a draught and recommending the passage of a bill to prohibit the importation of opium in certain forms; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON LITHOGRAPHIC PRINTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the counsel of the Manufacturing Lithographers' Association of the United States in relation to the duty on lithographic prints; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

JANITOR AMIDON SCHOOL-HOUSE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia in relation to a clerical omission from the District of Columbia appropriation act of March 3, 1887, and asking that provision be made for the pay of a janitor for the Amidon school-house; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCIES, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriations to supply deficiencies for contingent expenses of the Treasury Department, freight, telegraphing, etc., for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY, POSTAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the postal service for the fiscal years 1887 and 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting list of employés of that Department, showing their compensation and the time actually employed, stating that they have been usefully employed, and that the services of all are required for the prompt disposition of the public business; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill of the following title; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, namely:

A bill (S. 274) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point in the county of St. Charles, in the State of Missouri, below the city of St. Charles.

AGNES AND MARIA DE LEON.

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3121) for the relief of Agnes and Maria De Leon, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, under the rules of the House, when a bill is improperly referred through the petition-box, as in this case, the committee to which it is erroneously sent is authorized to make a proper indorsement and send it to the appropriate committee without the necessity of asking a formal order of the House.

In the present case the order will be made.

BILLS ON THE CALENDAR FROM THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit for immediate consideration a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to give to the bills now on the House Private Calendar and reported to the Forty-ninth Congress from the Court of Claims with its findings, as they are passed by the House, the number to which they would be entitled if introduced at the time of their passage, in lieu of the number they now bear; and that the bill numbered 4956, entitled "A bill to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres," and passed by the House on Friday, January 13, 1888, be given the number 4911, in lieu of 4956.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, the object of this resolution is to obviate——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I object. Let this go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman will hear me for a moment I think he will withdraw his objection. I think at all events this is a privileged resolution, and entitled to immediate consideration.

It is a resolution relating simply to the business of the House, and is intended to obviate a difficulty which the clerks find, arising by reason of the fact that bills reported from the Court of Claims in preceding Congresses, and now upon our Private Calendar, bear the same numbers they bore in the Forty-ninth Congress; and the bills introduced into this Congress must of necessity bear corresponding numbers, if we introduce enough bills to correspond with the numbers they bear. We thus have two sets of numbers.

The only object of the resolution is to change the numbers of the bills coming over from the Court of Claims and reported to the last Congress as they are passed, in order to obviate this perplexing difficulty into which the clerks find themselves driven. I do not think, in view of the object in view, that any gentleman will oppose it. It is asked by the clerks of the House and the officers whose business it is to keep these numbers in order, to avoid confusion. That being the only object of introducing the resolution, I trust it will commend itself to the House; and I ask an immediate vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. NELSON. I withdraw it.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] whether this motion relates to all bills which have been brought over in that anomalous way and placed upon the Calendar. My reason for asking the question is that I fear it may give rise to confusion if a particular resolution is adopted with regard to one bill when the difficulty which the gentleman refers to applies to all. I am myself of opinion that any member of this House may object to the position of any of those bills on the Calendar, because a statute of last Congress can not establish the rules for this Congress; and any of those bills might be referred to a committee as if it were just introduced.

But the gentleman from Kentucky will see that there being here a certain number of bills—about forty-five bills—brought over from the last Congress, and having the numbers, by accident perhaps, which they bore in that Congress, the entire number should be given, if they are to have a place on the Calendar of the Fiftieth Congress, a series of continuous numbers. They ought, perhaps, to have been numbered from 1 to 45, because they do, in fact, take precedence of any bill introduced in the Fiftieth Congress.

As I have said, I think it is by mere sufferance that this takes place. But if it takes place in regard to any of those bills it should take place in regard to every one of that class of bills.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman from Illinois had caught the reading of the resolution he would have known that it covers all the bills of that class on the Calendar. It does not give them a continuous series of numbers for the very reason that the gentleman states himself, and that is that when these bills are pending on the Calendar they may be subject to the point that they are referable to committees, and in that event they will not be given numbers until they are reported back from the committee. The resolution does not give them any status whatever on the Calendar other than that they now have. They are to be numbered only as they are passed, and then the bill is given the number to which it would be entitled if introduced at the time of its passage. I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROOMS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and which, I think, presents a privileged question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be, and is hereby, instructed to ascertain and report whether there are sufficient unoccupied rooms in the Capitol for the accommodation of the committees of the House, and if not, where and upon what terms the necessary rooms can be procured.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If the House will allow me, I will make what is in the nature of a personal statement. As gentlemen are aware, I have been assigned to the chairmanship of a new committee. Upon appealing to the Speaker for an assignment of a room, and upon talking with the Architect of the Capitol, I have ascertained that no room is to be had either for my committee—if I may so call it—or for certain other committees. Hence it is impossible to organize not only that committee but several others.

Upon appealing to the Speaker, deeming it was within his functions to make this assignment, he, after a personal examination, suggested to me the adoption of the course presented in this resolution. I trust the House will give it, immediately, favorable action; otherwise very important committees of the House will be without the power of discharging the duties imposed upon them by the House. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is privileged. The question is on agreeing to it.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATIONS BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on a resolution referred to them.

The resolution referred to the committee is as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the House copies of any correspondence, reports, or other information in possession of any department of the executive in reference to alleged discriminations in tolls or charges by the Government of the Dominion of Canada against vessels or cargoes passing through the Welland Canal and destined for ports of the United States on the Great Lakes; and also in reference to any system of rebates by the Government of the Dominion of Canada whereby a less toll or charge is in effect imposed on cargoes for export passing through the Welland Canal when transported to the seaboard by the St. Lawrence River than when transported by routes through the United States.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred House resolution in reference to alleged discriminations in tolls or charges by the Government of the Dominion of Canada, having considered the same, respectfully report the same back with the recommendation that it pass with the following amendments:

In line 1 strike out the word "President" and insert the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

In line 4, after the word "in," insert the word "his."

In line 5 strike out the words "of any department of the executive."

Mr. MCMILLIN. We found on investigation that the information sought here was in the Treasury Department, and the amendments proposed confine the call to the Treasury Department for the purpose of making it more expeditious. We found that upon complaint being made proper correspondence was entered into on the part of the Government, and that the information is now being printed. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] who introduced the resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this resolution of inquiry has been commented on by Canadian officials, and their comments have been printed in the newspapers of this country, it is fitting that I should take this opportunity to call the attention of the House and the country to their admissions and their defense.

In order that the House may understand the point at issue, I send to the Clerk a special dispatch from the capital of the Dominion of Canada, which embodies views so nearly identical with several other specials from the same capital that I am justified in concluding that it presents the position of Canadian officials. I will ask the Clerk to read the dispatch.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Special dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, January 5, 1888.

In explanation of the alleged discrimination in tolls by the Canadian Government against vessels passing through the Welland Canal destined for the United States lake ports, regarding which Mr. DINGLEY has introduced a resolution in Congress, a prominent official in the inland revenue department stated to your correspondent to-day that if Mr. DINGLEY took the trouble to study the twenty-seventh article of the Washington treaty he would find that no discrimination had been made.

The discrimination alleged to have been made is the result of the following order in council, under date of 28th March, 1887, and similar orders which have been passed every year for the past three years:

"For the forthcoming season of navigation, and no longer, the rate of toll to be paid for passage through Welland and St. Lawrence Canals only, of the undermentioned food products, when shipped for Montreal or any other Canadian port east of Montreal, is fixed at 2 cents per ton, namely, wheat, Indian corn, peas, barley, and rye."

This is a reduction from 20 to 2 cents a ton.

The object of the Dominion Government in promulgating this order was to encourage trade over the St. Lawrence route instead of allowing it to go to American ports. American vessels passing through the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals to Montreal would be entitled to the same rebate of tolls as Canadian vessels receive.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the attention of the House to,

First, the admission that the Canadian Government imposes a toll of 20 cents per ton on vessels laden with grain passing through the Welland Canal and bound to lake ports in the United States, and only 2 cents per ton on such vessels bound to Montreal, Quebec, and foreign ports.

Second, the admission that this discrimination is made to encourage the movement of grain from Chicago and other western lake ports by Canadian transportation routes instead of American transportation routes.

Third, the claim that a "study"—I emphasize the word—a "study" of the twenty-seventh article of the treaty of Washington will show that "no discrimination has been made" against the United States in conflict with that article.

The clause of the twenty-seventh article of the treaty of Washington referred to, reads as follows:

The Government of Her Britannic Majesty engages to urge upon the Government of the Dominion of Canada to secure to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland, St. Lawrence, and other canals in the Dominion on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion.

I do not propose to argue the question as to whether a toll of 20 cents per ton on vessels bound to a port of the United States and only 2 cents per ton on vessels bound to Montreal, Quebec, and foreign ports, does "secure to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland Canal on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion of Canada," either in the letter or the spirit of the treaty.

The suggestion of the Canadian officials that there is no discrimination against the citizens of the United States, because the discrimination is not against American vessels as such, but against all vessels destined for American ports, must have required patient and persistent "study."

Imagine two neighbors, A and B, entering into an agreement by which B engages to allow A the use of the former's private way on equal terms with B for an equivalent. Having received his compensation, B proceeds to adopt a regulation that all persons passing over the way to his own house shall be free, but all persons passing over the way to A's house shall pay a toll of 10 cents per person. A remonstrates, but B replies, "This rule is not in violation of our agreement, as A can use the way on the same terms as I can. I can not pass over the way to A's house without paying a toll, and A can pass over the way to my house without payment of toll, in the same manner that I can."

How long, Mr. Speaker, would it take a court of justice to remind B that an engagement to allow A the use of the way on terms of equality with B carries with it the equal right to use the way to go to his house?

It certainly does not require much "study" for a fair-minded man to understand that the engagement of Canada to secure to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland Canal on terms of equality with the inhabitants of Canada carries with it the right to take the vessels and cargoes to ports of the United States on equal terms.

The United States gave the inhabitants of Canada, as compensation for the use of the Welland Canal, the privilege of using the Sault St. Marie Canal, at the foot of Lake Superior, on equal terms with the citizens of the United States. How have we performed our part of the reciprocal agreement?

The United States have permitted all vessels passing through the Sault St. Marie Canal and bound for Canada to do so without payment of any toll, because we allow our vessels going to our own ports to do so. If we had attempted to pass vessels bound to ports of the United States free of toll, and to charge vessels bound to Canadian ports a toll of twenty cents, would not the Canadian authorities have remonstrated—and justly, too—against such an infraction of the treaty? But I will not at this time pursue the subject further.

If the official information that shall be furnished to Congress in response to this resolution shows no further discrimination against the United States by the Dominion Government than what is already admitted by their officials—and it is alleged that the discrimination has gone further—I doubt not that the President will promptly call the attention of the British Government to this infraction of treaty obligations, and, if the discrimination is continued at the opening of navigation in the spring, will inform Congress, in order that such discrimination against the United States may receive appropriate attention.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me a question? Is it not also a fact that to-day the Canadian Government refuses re-entry to Canadian goods transported over United States railways, hoping thereby to secure the entire carriage of those goods over Canadian railways?

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand such is the fact; but that matter is not embraced in this resolution.

I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon agreeing to the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. McMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committe on Printing, reported back without amendment a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 20,000 copies of the President's last annual message for the use of the House.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The resolution of the House that there be printed 20,000 copies of the President's last annual message for the use of the House has been considered by the committee; who have directed that the same be reported with a recommendation that it pass. The estimated cost of printing 20,000 copies with paper covers is $178.75. The approximate cost of printing previously estimated upon for Congress within the present fiscal year is $60,682.95.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DELAY IN FURNISHING CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Printing, submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

On the 12th instant this committee was directed to inquire into the reasons, if any exist, why the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not furnished to members at an earlier hour, and to report their findings in the premises to the House.

The committee forthwith caused a copy of the resolution in the case to be sent to the Public Printer and the Postmaster of the House, and invited these officers to answer the inquiry set forth therein.

The Public Printer appeared, made a verbal statement, and submitted also a written statement to the committee. The written statement is in the following words:

"GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., January 13, 1888.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt at your hands under to-day's date, of the following resolution, adopted in the House on the 12th instant, to wit:

"'Resolved, That the standing committee of this House on printing be requested to inquire into the reasons, if any exist, why the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not furnished to members at an earlier hour, and report their finding in the premises to the House.'

"I am pleased to answer your request for information, so far as it is within my power, by the presentation of the following facts:

"The daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD referred to I assume to be the morning delivery of the RECORD through the Washington city post-office. Since the meeting of Congress on December 5th last I understand that there have been two failures on the part of this office to deliver the RECORD at the city post-office in time for the usual morning delivery, on the part of said office, at the residence of members of the Senate and House. The failure in each instance was due to the fact that this office was embarrassed in the work on the RECORD by the late arrival or the difficult character of the copy received from the Clerk's desk of the House of Representatives, which rendered it a mechanical impossibility to issue it in the usual time. I understand that on one other occasion, January 12, the RECORD was not received in the morning mail by the members of the House. The failure in this case was not due to this office, as the issue of that day was delivered at the Washington post-office in ample time for proper distribution, as the correct delivery of the Senate copies that morning attest. I can not give the reason for this failure in the delivery of the House copies.

"I will add that this office has met every requirement within its power to secure the early and regular delivery of the RECORD.

"Most respectfully, yours,

"TH. E. BENEDICT,
"Public Printer.

"Hon. JAS. D. RICHARDSON,
"Chairman Committee on Printing, House of Representatives."

The Postmaster of the House appeared before the committee and submitted the following answer:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
"Washington, D. C., January 14, 1888.

"During the present session of Congress the RECORD has failed to reach the members or the morning delivery on three occasions, two of which were on account of its failure to be delivered to this office in time for distribution, and once it was thrown at the usual place upon the platform at the city post-office at an early hour in the morning, before daylight; by accident it was covered over with mail sacks and not discovered until too late for the 7.30 delivery.

"The latter trouble has been remedied and will not occur again.

"I am, very respectfully,

"L. DALTON,
"Postmaster House of Representatives.

"Hon. J. D. RICHARDSON,
"Chairman Committee on Printing."

The foregoing statement of the Public Printer indicating that possibly there might have been delay in forwarding material for publication in the RECORD, or some irregularity as to the copy or manuscript furnished, the committee called upon the Clerk for a statement. It was furnished in writing, and is as follows:

"CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
"Washington, D. C., January 14, 1888.

"SIR: The letter received by you from the Public Printer of the 13th instant, and referred to me, states that since the meeting of Congress on December 5 last there have been two failures on the part of the Government Printing Office to deliver the RECORD, and that the failure in each instance was due to the fact that that office was embarrassed by the late arrival and difficult character of the copy received from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, which rendered it a mechanical impossibility to issue it in the usual time.

"I presume that the two occasions referred to were January 4 and 9, respectively, upon which dates there were introduced of public and private bills 1,939 and 1,000.

"Under a rule recently adopted by the House, it becomes the duty of the Clerk to furnish to the Official Reporters a transcript of the bills of a private nature. This being an additional duty to that heretofore performed by the Clerk, it became necessary to detail clerks who had never performed that kind of duty to assist in preparing the copy. In doing so a number of sheets were written on both sides, which was not discovered in time to be corrected for that day's RECORD. The copy furnished by the Clerk was not of a difficult character, except as mentioned above. As far as this office is concerned, the delay could only have occurred from the lateness of the hour at which the copy was delivered, which was, respectively, on the two occasions mentioned, 11.30 p. m. and 1.30 a. m. The work was performed as rapidly as possible under the circumstances and the copy furnished to the Public Printer without unnecessary delay.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"JNO. B. CLARK,
"Clerk House of Representatives.

"Hon. J. D. RICHARDSON,
"Chairman Committee on Printing."

The committee are of opinion that the delay referred to is such as will of necessity sometimes occur, and is fully explained by the foregoing letters. The committee submit this report, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject or matter involved.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to add anything to the report which has just been read. I believe it explains the delays which have occurred, and answers the inquiry proposed in the resolution referred to the Committee on Printing. This is a unanimous report of the committee, and we ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if it be in order I move to recommit this report to the Committee on Printing, with instructions to make inquiry why there is such delay in the printing of bills, reports of committees, and communications from executive bureaus or Departments which are presented to this House. I am informed that over two thousand bills which have been introduced here have not yet been printed, and members of the House know the trouble we have had in regard to the printing of reports upon bills which have already been reported, the result of which has been that Representatives not belonging to the committee reporting a bill have been unable to obtain information necessary in determining what action they should take in the premises.

I understand also that the printing of reports from different bureaus of Departments, which have been sent to the Government Printing Office, has been delayed not only for weeks but for months. It is my fortune or misfortune to have been assigned to a place on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and hence I have some knowledge of the effect of this delay upon the business of that committee. The Commissioner of Navigation is required to make to Congress a report relating to American shipping. I understand that such a report was made by that officer nearly two months ago and that it has since been lying at the Government Printing Office; and I am credibly informed that even to-day not a line of it has been set up. We do not know when we can get that report; we do not know how much longer it is to be delayed.

Inasmuch as there is some dispute as to the cause of the delay in the furnishing of the RECORD, it seems to me it is best to enlarge the powers of the committee so that while inquiring in reference to the RECORD they may also ascertain for us why reports upon which members must rely for their information connected with pending measures are so long delayed.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] reduce his motion to writing, or shall the Chair state it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will it not suit the gentleman just as well to offer his proposition as an independent resolution without recommitting this report? If he will embody his inquiry in a separate proposition, the Committee on Printing will faithfully consider the subject and make prompt report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me for one moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think, Mr. Speaker, I can answer one of the inquiries of my colleague without the necessity of referring the matter to the Public Printer. Since this House reassembled on the 5th of this month, there have been introduced four thousand nine hundred and five bills, to say nothing of the large number of bills which have been introduced in the Senate. If members then will consider this enormous amount of work suddenly imposed upon the Public Printing Office, requiring them to print five thousand bills, they will understand the failure which may have occurred in reference to the furnishing of some other documents.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, for a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Do you happen to know of your own knowledge, or by report of others, whether bills introduced into this House and ordered to be printed have been printed at the Government Printing Office in the order in which they have been introduced, or whether the report is true that members have procured the printing of their bills and reports out of the order in which they were presented, and printed far in advance of others presented before them?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no information on that subject, but I am willing the statement of the gentleman from Ohio shall come in and go for what it is worth. If the gentleman is satisfied, from the information which he has received, that any such thing has been done, I suggest he ask the gentleman from Tennessee to have an inquiry made on the subject.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What is the matter with the Public Printing Office, or with the Public Printer, that there has been such delay in furnishing these documents?

Mr. SPRINGER. I was trying to state what the difficulty was, and I will proceed to do so if gentlemen will not interrupt me further.

The SPEAKER. It is impossible to hear, there is so much conversation on the floor and in the rear of the seats.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty of the Public Printing Office is just this: We have in one or two days imposed upon the Government Printing Office almost a month's work. That is the difficulty, and they can not be expected to get it out in the same time they would an ordinary amount of business, for there is no power conferred upon the Public Printer, when such a vast amount of work has been cast upon him, to go out into the city and employ an additional force of printers.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But has not that always occurred at the beginning of a long session of Congress? Even conceding that to be true, and that there is some excuse for delay in the printing of these bills, why is it we have not received documents ordered eleven months ago?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, these difficulties always occur at the beginning of a new Congress or a new session of Congress. I wish to say here now that I regard it as a great abuse to order the printing of such a large number of bills, private as well as public, costing thousands of dollars to the public Treasury.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois, who says we have imposed on the Public Printing Office the printing of thousands of bills and documents, whether the same thing does not occur at the beginning of every new session of Congress? And while such is the case, as he admits, I ask him whether there has ever before been such delay in printing bills and documents at the Government Printing Office?

Mr. SPRINGER. That has always occurred, so far as my recollection is concerned, at the beginning of every session.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Not since I have been a member of Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. So far as I know those employed at the Government Printing Office have exerted themselves to the fullest extent to supply all the printing ordered by Congress.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then why does not the Public Printer supply the bills and documents which have been ordered to be printed?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is such a thing as physical inability to supply at once what has been ordered to be printed in such vast numbers. I believe there is no body of men in this city who work more hours out of the twenty-four than the printers in the Public Printing Office. Since this Congress assembled they have been doing all men could do to keep up the printing which has been ordered by the two Houses of Congress. If there is anything wrong in the matter, I can say the proper remedy is here in the House. In the first place, we ought not to impose so much work upon the Public Printer. These thousands of bills and public documents cost the Government millions of dollars every year; and in my judgment if careful investigations were made—and I served one Congress on the Committee on Printing—it would be found at every session of Congress we have ordered printing costing millions of dollars in the aggregate which might have been dispensed with on a more careful consideration of the matter and that amount saved to the Treasury.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why does not the gentleman, then, if he is satisfied in this regard, introduce that reform himself?

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Maine, now that he has given his attention to the subject, will look into the matter himself.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I introduced the original resolution of inquiry, but had no idea at the time that it would take so wide a range as it seems to be taking now under the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. I had no knowledge at the time that any other department of the printing of the House was in this sort of condition; and in presenting the resolution I only wanted to inquire, and if possible ascertain, why it was that we could not, or did not, get the copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the morning at the proper time. I am bound to be satisfied with the report made by the Committee on Printing, because I have not any ground to dispute the conclusions reached by them.

I have this to say, however, that if, during the session of the present Congress up to this time, it has been found difficult or impossible for the Printing Office to furnish our official RECORD on two occasions, what may we reasonably anticipate will be the condition of things before the session closes? I judge of the efficiency of the present printing department of the Government by what I have seen of other administrations of that office. I have seen this House hold a session until 11 o'clock at night, and in the regular distribution of the mail in the morning the RECORD was there and perfect, containing all the proceedings up to the hour of adjournment. I regret, and look forward with a great deal of foreboding to, what is to come in the future.

Now the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] states that the overwhelming number of bills introduced into the House at this session explains and defends the condition of affairs to be found in the Public Printing Office. I am not quite prepared to yield my judgment to his upon that subject. Looking back at the RECORD of the Forty-ninth Congress I find that there were quite as many and probably more bills introduced in that Congress during the same period than we have reached in the present session, and yet I have no recollection that there was any such delay, or any complaint such as we now find, and by reason of which the original resolution was presented.

But again, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's statement, I hold in my hand a part of a very valuable and indispensable public document that, it is the theory of the Government at least, shall be furnished to Congress some time during the early part of the first session. I refer to the report of the engineers of the War Department for the year 1887.

Gentlemen can see all there is of it up to the present time. Here it is in my hand. Where the balance of it may be I have no knowledge. It may have been thrown upon some platform, and covered up with mail-bags too, as the RECORDS were. And there are only fifteen or twenty, as I understand it, advanced copies even of this part of it. About one-third or less, therefore, of the report has been furnished to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors instead of the whole document, as we had reason to expect. This portion refers also to an appendix. Appropriations are here recommended which are based upon certain other recommendations made in the appendix.

If anybody has seen that appendix he has had much more success in that direction than I have had. So we find the committee about to proceed to prepare a river and harbor bill without any information whatever; all its work to be done over again when hereafter, if ever, the opportunity comes when we are able to get the whole work in our hands. Two years ago not only was the whole report in the hands of the committee, but earlier than this we had time to have it bound and furnished for our use in committee.

I am not objecting to the report of the Committee on Printing. They have thoroughly investigated the subject, and the assurance is given to us that we shall have no more delay. That is as far as the scope of my resolution went, and it is an answer to the whole of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. It is easy always to find fault, but we ought to deal honestly with ourselves as well as with public officers.

I am not an old member of the House of Representatives, but I have served in two previous Congresses. In the Forty-eighth Congress there was no change in the rules, and the introduction of bills came on in their regular order. The Public Printer had the right and opportunity to use all the holiday recess for the publication of the bills introduced before that date. He therefore had ample time for the accomplishment of that work, and I do not remember any serious complaints in that Congress, though I do remember there were some delays.

In the Forty-ninth Congress there was a complete change of the rules, and we debated them, as gentlemen will remember, day after day for a considerable time. But the bills were introduced before the rules were settled, and the result of that proceeding was inextricable confusion on the part of the officers of the House in regard to the printing and reference of bills. In the Fiftieth Congress—the present Congress—we have also had under consideration the reformation of our rules, and to avoid the error into which we fell in the Forty-ninth Congress, by the introduction of bills before the adoption of the rules, we postponed their introduction, and therefore the Public Printer did not have the opportunity of using the holiday recess for printing them. So that upon the reconvening of Congress after the holidays this whole batch of bills is precipitated upon the Public Printer, and then gentlemen rise under these circumstances to condemn him because he can not do everything in a minute, as if the world was made in a minute.

Mr. Speaker, this is only a part and parcel of the arraignment of the Democratic party of which we heard so much before it came into power. The whole country was to go to the "demnition bow-wows" if the Democratic party ever got into power. Well, we got into power, and we have wagged along for a couple of years or more without any very serious complaints. The Treasury has not been raided; the soldiers have been taken care of; we have paid off the public debt; few defalcations, if any, have occurred, and the country seems to be entirely safe; but yet somebody is always ready to find some little thing or other to quarrel or complain about.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. ROGERS. After I have got through.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to ask the gentleman a question at that point.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not yield. I have but a little more to say, and I will then yield the floor.

We ought to deal fairly with the public officers. That is all I have to say about that. These gentlemen, if they want to investigate these officers, ought to do so in a manly sort of way. You have presented the resolution that brings before the House the subject now under discussion. You have got an answer to the resolution from the committee and can discuss it. That is a legitimate discussion. But do not take up for discussion things about which nobody has information, and put before the country a discussion of this kind without any opportunity having been offered for investigation.

There is a principle of common law which should obtain here as well as elsewhere—to give every man against whom a charge is brought his day in court. If any of these officers have been derelict in the discharge of their duties, introduce your resolution, investigate them, and if they are found to be subjects for condemnation you will always have my co-operation in doing what is right in the premises. But you can not get my co-operation if you attempt to condemn a man without first giving him a day in court.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. If gentlemen would give proper consideration to this matter they would find out very speedily that the great trouble connected with this printing business is with the House of Representatives and its committees. The present Public Printer, in the last fiscal year, ending June, 1887, has disposed of a large amount of printing ordered by previous Congresses; and most of it ordered here improvidently, not merely by the vote of the majority of this House, but by the unanimous vote of this House. All sorts of printing have been sent to the Public Printing Office, scientific printing, printing about agriculture, printing of books of various kinds that come in competition with the work of private publishing houses. The great trouble is in printing enormous numbers of volumes, which in the end often find their place in the junk-shops of the country.

The present Printer has practiced economy. He deserves encomium, not reproach. We must accept his statement that the total expenditures of the office the last fiscal year were $2,500,076.35; in 1886, $2,762,560.07; in 1885, $2,634,469.71; in 1884, $3,056,067.51; in 1883, $2,888,374.92. This year he asks for $2,489,622.23. It is based on the most heedful estimates. Let us endeavor to aid his efforts, for he tells us that he has inherited documents yet to be printed from four former Congresses, $150,000 worth of which he completed the past year.

The Printer, in his last report—I have here a memorandum of the figures, although I do not have a copy of the report before me—states that while he has disposed of a large amount of printing that had accumulated in his office, he has saved the sum of $262,000 as compared with the cost of printing of the previous year and the sum of $555,000 as compared with the cost of printing of the fiscal year ending in June, 1884. If we expect more printing from him we must give him more money. Or if we do not give him more money we should begin the economy right in this House here. Whenever a motion comes up to print a number of copies of a report, or to enlarge the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the insertion of superfluities, then is the time for gentlemen on both sides to exercise their economy and thus relieve the Printer.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who was chairman of the Committee on Printing in a previous Congress, came in here with others this session and asked that an unlimited amount of printing be done for the Committee on Territories, including, I suppose, all the discussions before that committee connected with Utah and Dakota and Oklahoma.

A MEMBER. And "No Man's Land."

Mr. COX. Yes; and "No Man's Land," and all our outlying Territories. That would run us into an excess that no man can number. My friend, therefore, who was chairman of the Committee on Printing in a previous Congress, is himself more or less responsible. It is for the gentleman himself to call a halt. I have often heard him state that the remedy for this matter lies here in the House.

This proposition having been made on behalf of the Committee on Territories, a motion was offered here the other day to authorize the printing of everything that goes on before committees in case the committee required it. This, sir, is a thing unexampled. It would include all the debates before the committees and all the papers referred to them. It is in such propositions that the mischief begins, and the remedy should begin here. It was applied the other day on the motion of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, that all these motions were referred to the Printing Committee. That is the proper place for the consideration of these matters. But if you insist on the Public Printer printing large numbers of reports you will have to give him more money. But if you want economy begin here and now.

Mr. RICHARDSON rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], whose motion is now under discussion, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he will agree to submit his motion as an independent resolution.

Mr. HOPKINS. I prefer to submit it as an amendment to the pending proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

To recommit, with instructions to inquire the cause of the unusual delay in printing and furnishing to members and committees bills and reports of committees and communications from Departments and bureaus of the Government.

Mr. DUNN. I hope in connection with that the report will be read.

The SPEAKER. The report has been already read, but it may be again read.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to say in answer to the strictures of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that however true his remarks may have been in regard to previous Public Printers, they can not apply to the present Public Printer. As I understand it, there was appropriated to that department all the money that was asked by the Public Printer. He had had experience in the department and had had an opportunity to make thorough investigation, and he applied for an appropriation which he said would be sufficient for all his purposes; therefore the fault instead of being with the House is with him. He should have known whether he had a sufficient force to furnish the House with the bills and reports at the proper time, and should have considered that in asking for an appropriation. So much in answer to that argument.

Now, in regard to the strictures of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]. I did not suppose that in presenting a resolution of this kind I was raising a political question. I supposed that the gentlemen upon the other side of the House were equally interested with the Republicans in having these bills and reports returned promptly, so that members of the House can proceed intelligently with the work of legislation. But the gentleman seems to think that this smacks of politics. I do not so understand it, Mr. Speaker. I understand that this is purely a matter of business, because I think that every member of this House who desires to discharge his duty intelligently and with fidelity is anxious that these reports shall be returned to the House as promptly as possible, that we may proceed to act upon the various measures pending before the House as they are brought up for consideration. The gentleman says that it is an easy matter to find fault; to that I reply that it seems equally easy for some gentlemen to make excuses.

The gentleman says that in the Forty-ninth Congress the reason there was no such delay as we are experiencing now was that we had a long debate in settling the question of rules, and that during that time the Public Printer had the opportunity to print the bills, etc., and return them to the House. The record, Mr. Speaker, is against the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas. I have before me the RECORD of the Forty-ninth Congress, which shows that the rules were settled and adopted upon the 18th day of December, and that the bills were not introduced until the 5th or 6th day of January. I was a member of the Forty-ninth Congress, and I, for one, can testify that we did not experience the inconveniences and delays in that Congress which we are now experiencing. Again, if all these arguments were good, so far as our bills and reports are concerned, still they would not apply to the departmental reports made to Congress from the heads of the different Departments.

Now, sir, I repeat what I said when I was first upon the floor, namely, that so far as the report from the Commissioner of Navigation is concerned, I am credibly informed that it has been in the hands of the Public Printer for weeks, if not for months, yet no action has been taken upon it, and I ask gentlemen how they can expect that the members of that committee can act intelligently upon the recommendations of the Department when those recommendations are kept back by the Public Printer in the manner I have indicated. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is highly proper that instead of approving of this report which has been made by the Committee on Printing this morning, we should recommit it, as proposed in my motion, with instructions to make a wider and more extended inquiry into the causes of these delays, so that if the Public Printer has any adequate excuse, it may be received, and if, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] says, the trouble is with the members of the House, that trouble may be corrected.

It is certainly in the interest of public economy that some action should be taken in this matter, so that we may get these bills and reports before us for use in our daily work here. I now ask the previous question upon my motion.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Will my colleague withdraw that for a moment?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I withdraw the demand for the previous question, and I yield five minutes to my colleague.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this: I served on the Committee on Commerce when it had jurisdiction over the subject of rivers and harbors, and I have also served on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the last two Congresses, and until the last session of Congress I do not remember that the committee was ever delayed in getting the engineers' reports so as to be prevented from getting on with its work. But at the last session of Congress we were obliged to have advance copies printed, and even then we suffered great inconvenience because they were not properly indexed; and now again, at this session, we find ourselves in the same condition. Out of four volumes of the reports we have only one stitched, not bound and not indexed. Now, sir, I know that these inconveniences have not existed heretofore until last winter, and there must be some serious fault somewhere. I am not prepared to say where it is; but either the Public Printer is incompetent or inefficient, or else there is some neglect about furnishing him with these reports and other documents, and we should inquire and find out where the fault is and have it corrected, for there can be no good excuse for the failure to supply these documents to the committees and to members as they have been supplied heretofore.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I yield now to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, what has just been said by my colleague of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. HENDERSON] is correct as to the delay in furnishing the reports of the engineers which are used by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in making up its bills; but in making this statement I wish to do justice to the Public Printer. So far as the reports of 1887 are concerned, I am in a position to speak. I called upon the Public Printer and asked the reason for the delay in printing the reports for 1887; and from the explanation given me I am satisfied that the cause of this delay is the fact that the manuscript had not been received at the Public Printing Office as early as it should have been. For instance, the voluminous manuscript of the engineers' report relating to rivers and harbors, which will form four printed volumes, was not received at the Public Printing Office until late in November. Yet up to this time the Public Printer has had printed and has furnished to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors some 700 or 800 pages of that report.

Take another instance—the report of the Commission on the Mississippi River. That document did not reach the hands of the Public Printer until about ten days ago, yet the report is now needed in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in connection with the work intrusted to them. So that, while there has been delay in printing these reports, and while it is true that the work of the committee is retarded by this delay, I am inclined to believe the fault does not lie at the door of the Public Printer.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It certainly lies somewhere; and it is very proper that the matter should be investigated so that we may know where the fault does lie.

Mr. BLANCHARD. There should be legislation requiring the heads of Departments to get their reports into the hands of the Public Printer as early as September 1 or October 1 of each year.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN. I wish simply to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Printing. I am satisfied there is some delay in printing which is inconveniencing this House; and I wish to ask that gentleman whether the rumor I have heard is true—that the Public Printer has alleged as a reason of the delay that large orders for printing have heretofore been made and that he feels bound to give those prior orders precedence over the current work of Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not answer the gentleman's question. I know that the Public Printer is engaged in the execution of previous orders.

Mr. DUNN. I do not assert that such is the fact; I have heard such a rumor; and if the Printer is exercising his discretion in that way he is perhaps in error, because certainly printing connected with the current business of Congress ought to take priority of everything else.

Mr. COX. I think I can answer my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN]. As a regent of the Smithsonian Institution I had occasion to inquire the other day in relation to the Smithsonian report for the year ending June 30, 1886. It had not been printed. I found out from the Public Printer that the reason he has not been able to print the report of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum for the last two years is, that he has been so thoroughly occupied in doing other work, including the current work of Congress. He has never neglected that current work; and by "current work" we understand bills and reports such as are necessary to assist us in the daily business of legislation. I think I can say, without any hesitation, for the Public Printer, that he never for one moment neglects to assist the House in its business, by performing as promptly as possible the ordinary work of his office.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] was altogether mistaken if he supposed for a moment that I intended to use any language criticising in any way the resolution he has offered. I oppose the proposition simply because it ought to be presented as a separate and independent resolution, allowing the House to dispose of the pending report at once.

Mr. Speaker, either I was exceedingly unfortunate in expressing myself on another point or the gentleman totally misapprehended my language. I state now that in the Forty-ninth Congress the rules were under discussion for a considerable time, I do not remember how long; and in consequence the committees were not announced until after the holidays, while bills were introduced before the holidays. I hold in my hand the RECORD of the Forty-ninth Congress, which shows that the introduction of bills began on December 21, and those bills run through from page 365 to page 397 of the RECORD, there being perhaps hundreds or thousands of bills upon which the Public Printer could go to work during the holiday recess.

I rose to correct the wrong impression which my remarks seem to have created upon the mind of the gentleman from Illinois. I have one other observation to make. I do object to our debating these questions until we have learned who is the guilty party, if anybody is guilty. How can we tell now whether the Public Printer or the Engineer Department of the Army is at fault, or whether either is at fault, with reference to the engineers' report? Let a resolution for an investigation be adopted and investigation had, and if there is anything wrong in either quarter, let the responsibility be fixed intelligently and, after investigation, upon the party to whom it properly belongs. In such an effort as that gentlemen can always have my hearty co-operation, but do not attack the Public Printer without giving him a hearing.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, having been a member of the Committee on Printing in the Forty-ninth Congress, I must take exception to the intimation which has been thrown out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that in the reports of the committee in that Congress and the action of the House upon them there was improvidence. I must say that the committee from the time of its appointment to the close of the Congress never passed on a single report connected with the Government or upon any printing designed for the benefit of the country at large without considering to a dollar the cost of the work and its utility. I recollect well that the committee on one occasion made a comparison of the work of that Congress with the work of the three preceding Congresses; and the gentleman who made the intimation to which I refer can find by reference to the report that the committee in its work was within all estimates and within all prior precedents. I say that much in vindication of the committee.

I do not stand here as a critic of the Public Printer. Many members on this floor know my feelings toward the present incumbent of that office. I simply want to say that while this resolution may now pass, it is but fair that the Committee on Printing should be allowed opportunity to consult with the Public Printer as to the orders for printing which came from the Forty-sixth, the Forty-seventh, the Forty-eighth, and the Forty-ninth Congresses, old orders which are now lying in the office of the Public Printer. Having served upon the Committee on Printing, I believe that there is any amount of "dead wood" (to use a common expression) the printing of which has been ordered by law; and if we are to investigate either the facilities of the Printing Office for doing its work or the administrative ability brought into operation in running that office, the Public Printer ought to have from the committee an intelligent exposé with regard to the necessity for all this printing which has heretofore been ordered. In regard to the matter of current public printing, the committee during the Forty-ninth Congress pursued the policy of pushing forward printing on any document that was necessary for the business of the House.

At no time did we order any printing during the short session of Congress to be done at the Public Printing Office which would get back into the document-room out of its place. What they are doing now I know not. I know one thing, however; during the time we were changing the rules of this House the Public Printer had the advantage of getting out of his hands and into the document-room a mass of private bills before a public bill was ordered to be printed. We relieved him so much.

Now, there are important reports before the committees, and not one of these is furnished. I wish to ask the gentlemen who are members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors whether the Engineers' Report, not of this year, but of last year, has been furnished to the Congress of the United States?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It has not been furnished, as I understand it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am informed by the gentleman from Illinois that this report made two years ago has not been furnished.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. One year ago.

Mr. FARQUHAR. One year ago. Yet in this House the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress (Mr. Willis) promised on this floor the report should be in the hands of every member before the 1st day of March of last year. Eleven months have gone, and there is no report to Congress yet. I wish to say the word "improvident" belongs there. That report is of no benefit to this Congress. Matters of interest concerning the whole lakes in five engineers' reports go into Volume III of this coming year's report (in the appendix), and no man can know—not General Duane himself, at the head of the corps can give an intelligent answer to any member of this House when he can be furnished with the report of his own local engineer.

I say this without criticising the Public Printer or the administrative ability of the office, but it is due to Congress that if the office is not able now to do the printing ordered it should be enlarged, or a standing rule should be adopted authorizing the Joint Committee on Public Printing of the two Houses to select the work that shall come first in being printed and supplied to the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty minutes of his time left.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I will next yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for one moment in response to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], which goes to the very integrity of the conduct of the Public Printing Office. He made an inquiry as to whether bills were printed in the order in which they were introduced. The inference from his question was that there was some sort of favoritism in the order of printing at the Government Printing Office. Now, I have made inquiry of Mr. Benedict, the Public Printer, and am informed that it is the custom to print in the order in which bills are presented to the House, and against that I presume there will be no complaint. He conducts the office upon this fair business principle.

Next, in reply to what has been charged, that we are unusually late in getting the printed bills which have been introduced at this session of Congress, I wish to supplement what has been stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]. He has already shown the House that in the Forty-ninth Congress this work of printing was begun in December, thus giving longer time to the Public Printer. I wish to add the material statement, that whereas in the months of December and January at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress we introduced 3,806 bills, we have introduced in the two weeks of this Congress during which we have been in session since the holidays 4,905 bills. Therefore, in two weeks of this session the Public Printer has had to deal with a thousand bills more ordered to be printed than during all the period between the 1st of December and middle of January in the Forty-ninth Congress.

I will add one other remark, that the Public Printing Office is not in default now for the first time. If gentlemen will go back and examine the question they will find these reports have often been more than a year in getting out. There is the Agricultural Report, for which the people are waiting with such feverish and impatient anxiety! [Laughter.] It is frequently a year before they are furnished to the members for distribution, and so far did the office get behind with their publication once since 1880 that two years' reports were printed in one volume.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But never have they been withheld so long as now.

Mr. McMILLIN. My friend from Maine is in error there. The delay in the Printing Office often occurs. There are many valuable things printed there, and so far as these are in the necessary line of good government I have no word or war against them. But I do raise my voice against the printing of so many useless productions. The Printing Office will continue to be behind with its work so long as Congress continues to dump such a mass of nonsense on the Public Printing Office to be printed, taxing the office to the utmost to get it out in time. The remedy is here, and that remedy lies in Congress refusing to order the printing of the thousands of volumes too often finding their way there, which none but a crank would write and none but a fool would read. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I need to add anything further to what I said in the few remarks I submitted to the House a short time ago. I certainly should not rise now for that purpose had it not appeared to me that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] seems to have imbibed the opinion, or for some reason entertains the idea, that I was making a political attack upon the Public Printer, and he thereby felt justified in charging somebody with having dragged a political discussion into an ex parte inquiry or examination. I was very glad that the gentleman had an opportunity of making his political speech. I only wanted his attention for a single moment while he was speaking to submit a question, and thought it very unkind in him not to allow me to do so, as he could have put the answer in so admirably in that eloquent passage of his speech where he told us of the prosperity of the country, and the fact that no harm had come to it, either past, present, or presumably in the future, by reason of the inauguration of a Democratic administration. I wanted him to tell me, therefore, if I was right in concluding that he did not quite accord with the statement or sentiment that we received on the second day of our present session from an eminent Democratic authority, that there was hanging over the country a portentous cloud about to break in thunder-storms, earthquakes, financial disaster, and cyclones of commercial ruin. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

That is all I wanted to say to him, and his statement would no doubt have sounded a great deal better in the form of an answer to a question addressed to him at that time, than for me to have to occupy the time of the House again to call his attention to it.

Now, I never thought that the resolution I offered would start up a political controversy. I tried to get some information not ex parte, for I asked that a committee of the House, the Committee on Printing, should investigate the matter referred to in the resolution, and they have done so. Will the honorable chairman of that committee say that this report is an ex parte one?

I only wanted that we should have before us the exact facts in regard to the matter, and in so far as the subject-matter of my resolution is concerned, I apprehend that we have got them. So far as the subject-matter of the proposed amendment is concerned, that is quite another point, and I do not understand that anybody on this side of the House desires any judgment or opinion of the House at this time against the Public Printer.

I wish to say this much further, as no one seems to have stated it: I do not understand that the question of the printing of these reports that come from the Departments is affected in any way by the number of bills which may be introduced in the House, and I do not understand that the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is in any wise affected by the number of bills or the number of unprinted reports which may be in the office.

I understand that the force of the office, claimed to be adequate so far as the estimates are concerned for all such work, is subdivided, and that a portion of it occupies its entire time upon the RECORD work, another portion upon bills, and another upon such work as may come from the Departments, and so on. If that be true, it is no explanation or apology for the delay in printing the RECORD or the bills, because of a large amount of accumulated matter of other kinds in the hands of the Public Printer.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no interest in this resolution except that which is common and applies to all the members of the House. I hope, however, that the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] will prevail.

For my own part I would like to know what system, or want of system, prevails at the Public Printing Office in regard to the order in which bills sent from the House are printed. Upon the first bill day of the present session I introduced a number of bills, which went, I suppose, with others then introduced, to the Public Printer. Some of those bills were printed and have been in the document-room for a week or more, while another portion of them is not there yet. One of the bills, numbered 1559, has been wanting, and I have just sent to the document-room for a copy, but am unable to get it.

Last week I went and made a personal inquiry about it, and was told that it had not been received from the office, and yet at the same time I saw bills lying upon the table numbered between three and four thousand. I asked how it happened that my bills, which were below the number 1600 had not come up, while bills numbered in the neighborhood of 4000 had been received; and was told it was because those bills had been made special at the request of members introducing them. Now I desire to know the fact, if there is a way by which members can get their bills made special, so that I can avail myself of it and have mine made special so as to receive them in advance of other bills introduced at the same time. I saw to-day a great number of bills upon the table in the document-room numbered above 3000, while I am still unable to get mine, which are below 1600. I do not understand it, and want to be informed as to the reason; and therefore I would like to have the Public Printer answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Another thing, sir, which concerns us all quite nearly. We have had several bills upon their passage here before the House; for instance, the special deficiency bill, the Fish Commission bill, and several private bills; but during this present session I have not been able to obtain access to a single report bearing upon any one of the bills brought up for our consideration. None of them have been sent up to the House or laid upon the desks of members before the bills to which they refer have been taken up for passage, and have therefore been unable to act upon those bills with that information which the reports are supposed to contain. It seems to me that the reports should, if anything, be first printed and made special, so that the members may have the information they contain before being called upon to act upon bills to which they refer.

Having said this much, and, I trust, without political bias, seeking only an orderly and proper transaction of the public business of the House, I have nothing further to add, except that I hope the resolution will prevail.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. I think I owe somewhat of an explanation to my colleague from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], who was on the Committee on Printing of last Congress. I referred to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who was on the Committee on Printing in a previous Congress when there were larger expenditures for printing than in the last Congress. I do not intend to do any injustice to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR]. I stated there was a saving of more than $262,000 last year; and I am not sure but the business capacity and skill of my colleague had something to do with that saving. If he has followed out his ordinary business rules I have no doubt he has saved the country a large amount.

If gentlemen will look at our Congressional Manual they will see there, from page 418, running over to page 422, that by the law and by the rules here, this printing department is clogged with business, costing an enormous amount, running up into the millions for years past, and the remedy lies not, perhaps, with a resolution like this offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], but in the general overhauling of this whole printing business, cutting down useless printing authorized now by law, as to which our committee and the Public Printer have no discretion.

They are bound to print these things, and all the Committee on Printing can do is to look over the laws and make an estimate in the House accordingly.

Therefore, I have no fault to find with gentlemen who last session were on the Committee on Printing. But I trust if we enter on this matter it will be to overhaul the whole printing business, so as to save from one to two million dollars annually, now thrown away virtually in printing useless trash at the expense of the people of this country.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I think it is apparent to the House now that no good excuse has been given thus far by the Public Printer for delay in printing the bills and reports and communications of Departments. I think the question has been sufficiently discussed, and I move the previous question.

The question being taken on the motion for the previous question, there were—ayes 80, noes 81.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question, I think we are ready to take the vote.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk began to call the roll, and had called the first name.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. If it will expedite the business, I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays be taken on the main motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submitted that a moment ago, and the gentleman declined my request.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I did not understand the gentleman's proposition.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to recommit with instructions.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask for the reading of the resolution of instructions.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? If he does so, I think it will obviate the necessity for calling the roll.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 140, not voting 47; as follows:

UNNECESSARY PRINTING.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move the adoption of the report.

The question was taken, and the report was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to investigate what amount of delayed work in the shape of public documents of various kinds, and of all other matter, is in the Government Printing Office, which was ordered printed by former laws and now remains unpublished. The committee shall report to the House what documents and other matter deemed worthless by them are now remaining, and whether, in their opinion, the laws ordering such publication may not be repealed, and shall accompany their report with a bill or joint resolution repealing all laws or sections of laws ordering the publication of documents or other matter which may in their judgment be dispensed with.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order is the call of the States and Territories for bills and resolutions. Upon this call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials from State and Territorial Legislatures are in order; also resolutions of inquiry addressed to heads of Departments.

AMERICAN MINISTERS IN FOREIGN COURTS.

Mr. MASON also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas it is said that the representatives of the United States, diplomatically considered, at the courts of the principal powers of the world occupy a very subordinate position, and that by reason thereof there is frequently serious delay in the transaction of the business of the United States of America and the citizens thereof at foreign courts; and

Whereas it is also alleged that such delay in the transaction of the business of the United States of America and its citizens is caused by the representatives of the United States being designated as "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary" instead of "ambassadors," thereby putting them in the position of representing an inferior instead of a great power; and

Whereas the United States of America is entitled, on account of its standing among nations, to be represented, if it so desires, by ambassadors:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the state of affairs upon the points suggested, and to report its conclusion, by bill or otherwise, to the House of Representatives at an early date.

R. 5052) to equalize the payment and do justice to the officers, soldiers, and sailors of the United States in the late war of the rebellion who were paid in currency, commonly called greenbacks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL-BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. TOWNSHEND introduced a bill (H. R. 5053) to retire the circulation of the national banks and to substitute Treasury notes therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAILS ON RAILWAYS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND also introduced a bill (H. R. 5054) to readjust the compensation to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

BRIBERY AT ELECTIONS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND also introduced a bill (H. R. 5055) to punish bribery, etc., in elections; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PASSAGE OF CONFEDERATE MONEY.

Mr. TOWNSHEND also introduced a bill (H. R. 5056) punishing the passing of Confederate money as true and genuine United States obligations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND also introduced a bill (H. R. 5057) to amend section 3242 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the internal-revenue laws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DIES FOR COUNTERFEIT COIN.

Mr. TOWNSHEND also introduced a bill (H. R. 5058) to punish having in possession dies, etc., for counterfeiting coin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WATERTOWN, N. Y.

Mr. PARKER introduced a bill (H. R. 5059) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Watertown, State of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MOBERLY, MO.

Mr. MANSUR introduced a bill (H. R. 5060) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Moberly, in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONERS OF INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. MANSUR also introduced a bill (H. R. 5061) to establish a board of commissioners of Indian depredation claims; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. WILKINS (by Mr. DINGLEY) submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the —— day of January be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to continue from day to day until such bills are disposed of, not to interfere with appropriation bills or bills raising revenue.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. DINGLEY submitted a resolution relating to the business of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is it proposed by this resolution to change the order of business?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is to fix a day for the consideration of the business of that committee.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point that such resolutions should go to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just referred to the Committee on Rules the resolution to fix a day for the consideration of business of the Committee on Banking and Currency. All applications which disturb the order of business should go to the Committee on Rules, unless the House directs them to go elsewhere.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Mr. BANKHEAD introduced a bill (H. R. 5062) for the erection of a public building at Birmingham, Ala.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PROOF OF LOYALTY.

Mr. ROBERTSON introduced a bill (H. R. 5063) to dispense with the proof of loyalty for bounty for wars prior to 1861; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, BATON ROUGE, LA.

Mr. ROBERTSON also introduced a bill (H. R. 5064) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Baton Rouge, La.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POST-ROADS.

Mr. MACDONALD introduced a bill (H. R. 5065) to amend section 7 of chapter 103 of volume 19 of the United States Statutes at Large, relating to post-roads, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS OF CHEROKEE FREEDMEN, ETC.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. 5066) to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceeds of lands under the act of March 3, 1883; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NAVIGATION OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WILKINSON introduced a bill (H. R. 5067) establishing additional aids to navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. OWEN introduced a bill (H. R. 5068) to amend section 2 of an act making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1879; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BUILDINGS FOR MILITARY STORE-KEEPERS.

Mr. HOWARD introduced a bill (H. R. 5069) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to purchase certain real estate lying opposite the depot of the Quartermaster's Department at Jeffersonville, Ind., and to have erected thereon two buildings to be occupied by the military store-keepers on duty at said depot, the cost of said grounds and buildings not to exceed $25,000; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 261) to amend the law concerning the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; when the Speaker signed the same.

COMMITTEE CLERKS, ETC.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to which was referred the resolution of the House of January 4, 1888, authorizing them to designate the committees which, in the judgment of said committee, should be allowed clerks under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1889, which limits the number of clerks to be so assigned to thirty-one, on the 9th instant reported the same back to the House, with certain recommendations, and the House, on the same day, having recommitted said report, with sundry pending amendments thereto, to said Committee on Accounts, having considered the same, recommend the adoption of the following as a substitute for the original report and pending amendment thereto:

To the Committee on Elections, a clerk;
To the Committee on Banking and Currency, a clerk;
To the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Territories, a clerk;
To the Committee on Railways and Canals, a clerk;
To the Committee on Manufactures, a clerk;
To the Committee on Mines and Mining, a clerk;
To the Committee on Pacific Railroads, a clerk;
To the Committee on Education, a clerk;
To the Committee on Labor, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Militia, a clerk;
To the Committee on Patents, a clerk;
To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, two assistant clerks;
To the Committee on Pensions, a clerk;
To the Committee on Private Land Claims, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings, a clerk;
To the Committee on Accounts, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Library, a clerk;
To the Committee on Printing, a clerk;
To the Committee on Enrolled Bills, a clerk;
To the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, a clerk;
To the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, a clerk; and
To the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, a clerk.

And your committee would further recommend that there be allowed a clerk to the Committee on the Eleventh Census; and in view of the fact that the work of this committee will be arduous, critical, and virtually continuous, that this clerk be employed during the remainder of this Congress at a salary of $2,000 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

And your committee, believing it to be the sense of the House that each one of its committees should be provided with a clerk, would also recommend the adoption of the following:

To the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, a clerk;
To the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, a clerk; and
To the Committee on Claims, one assistant clerk.

To make effective the foregoing recommendation, your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Eleventh Census be authorized to employ a clerk for the remainder of this Congress, at a salary of $2,000 per year, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and that the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ each a clerk, and the Committee on Claims an assistant clerk; said clerks and assistant clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the same rate of compensation as is provided in the last legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the other per diem clerks of the House during the session of Congress only.

Mr. SHAW. Upon the adoption of this report I call the previous question.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW] propose to permit this report to be discussed at all?

Mr. SHAW. If the previous question be ordered there will be thirty minutes allowed under the rule for debate, and that time, I think, will be ample.

Mr. PERKINS. I have an amendment which I would like to offer, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. SHAW. I must decline to yield to allow any amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland demands the previous question.

Mr. PERKINS. On that I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule authorizing the question to be taken on seconding the call for the previous question. A rule of that sort which did prevail was abolished several years ago.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask to have read again the closing part of the report, which relates to the continuance of the service of these clerks.

Mr. SHAW. The service is to continue during the session of Congress.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman, in answer to my question, has stated that the service is to continue during the session of Congress, I withdraw my request for the reading.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 66, noes 74.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PERKINS and Mr. SHAW were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 130.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That each committee of this House shall have as many clerks as there are members upon the committee, one to be selected by each of such members: Provided, That no committee shall have more clerks than it has members: And provided further, That the clerk selected by the chairman of such committee shall be the chief clerk of the same: And provided further, That except as to the chief clerks, all clerks provided for herein shall be paid at the rate of $75 per month during the time Congress is in session, from the House contingent fund: And provided, That when a member of this House is a member of more than one committee such member shall have the right to name but one clerk.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is a great deal of humbug about this question of clerks. A few years ago I had the honor to be a member of a committee similar to the one over which at this Congress, under the appointment with which the Speaker has honored me, I am called to preside. The committee to which I refer during a previous Congress was not at any time called together; no action was ever taken by it. I am now called upon to act as chairman of a similar committee; and if, as proposed by the Committee on Accounts, a clerk be assigned to that committee, I shall hardly know what to do with him. Besides, we have no room in which to act. The Committee on Accounts, in assigning clerks to these committees on expenditures in the various Departments, ought at the same time to have provided for each of the committees a room in which they could put their clerk. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, either the members of the House of Representatives during the first fifty years of the American Congress had a very easy time and much leisure in the discharge of their official duties, or the members of the present Congress and those that are to follow us require clerks to aid them in the discharge of their duties. If there are exceptions to this rule—if there are members on this floor who, as the Congressional Directory shows, have only about 2,000 voters in their districts, so that they do not need clerks, certainly others of us who have 200,000 to 350,000 constituents think that the gentlemen from those other districts should not be the judges in denying to us the right to have clerks to assist us in discharging the duties that we owe to our constituents and to the people generally.

For one moment let me show the difference in the amount of work required of a member of Congress now in comparison with that required of members of the early Congresses of the United States. As was well shown by the distinguished Speaker of this House, in what may be called his valedictory at the close of the Forty-eighth Congress, during the first fifty years of the organization of this Government there were introduced into Congress, and referred to appropriate committees, only 8,777 bills and joint resolutions, whereas there were introduced into the Forty-eighth Congress, and referred to committees of this House for action, 8,630 bills. This shows that during the first fifty years of the existence of the American Congress no more bills were introduced for action than during the Forty-eighth Congress alone.

During the Forty-ninth Congress there were introduced and referred to committees 11,260 bills in the House and 3,385 bills in the Senate, making a total of over 14,000 bills. It is a low estimate, judging from the number of bills introduced into this House thus far, that there will be over 16,000 bills introduced in the Fiftieth Congress, which will have to be referred to committees, have to be printed, have to be read and referred to subcommittees, and have to be considered and acted on.

A member of Congress twenty-five years ago did not need a clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SYMES. I ask the gentleman to yield me three minutes more.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield that further time to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SYMES. Another point. Think of the difference between the number of constituents a member of the Fiftieth Congress here has to represent, has to correspond with, whose business he has to look after in the Departments, whom he has to represent on this floor as best he can, and the number of the constituents of a member of Congress fifty years ago. The ratio of representation of the different districts of the United States from 1790 to 1800 was 33,000; in 1810, 35,000; in 1820, 40,000; in 1830, 47,000; in 1840, 70,000—I do not give the fractions; in 1850, 90,000; in 1860, 127,000; in 1870, 131,000; and in 1880, 150,000. Unless this House is increased in its membership, after 1890 the apportionment and constituencies will exceed 200,000.

Sir, there are districts in the northwestern part of this country which to-day have from three hundred to five hundred thousand constituents. I make the point, and I wish to call the attention of my friends who are opposed to granting these clerks to the fact, that it is impossible for any one of them to attend to important national legislation and at the same time discharge the multifarious duties which the law of prescription and precedent has imposed on him without the assistance of clerks. Otherwise he may sit at his desk on this floor and write from morning until night, and not attend to the important duties his constituents sent him here to perform.

I do not believe the American people are so penurious in the matter of being willing to pay for clerks for their members of Congress when those clerks will be almost entirely engaged in attending to correspondence, franking and mailing documents, and running to the Departments and performing other duties for constituents.

Clerks to members will greatly increase their efficiency in the discharge of their strictly legislative duties. Members neglect committee work, neglect thorough investigation of important subjects of legislation, because they have not the time or opportunity without the aid of clerks to perform these duties.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, the expenses of the two branches of Congress during a term are estimated at from eight to ten million dollars. The additional expense that would be incurred during a Congress composing the two sessions under this proposition, if adopted, would add to that sum only about $350,000.

Now, the question presented by the resolution simply resolves itself into this: whether or not that additional expense would add to the efficiency of Congress—both branches. If it would add to the efficiency of it, then this proposition ought to be passed; if it would not, it ought to be defeated.

Mr. Speaker, we all know the fact that there are demands made upon every member of Congress, upon every man upon the floor of this House, morning, noon, and night, requiring answers to from ten to twenty letters, and in many cases with many members amounting to from thirty to sixty, and in some cases even more than that. We do know it to be a fact that no man with this drudgery upon his shoulders can perform his duties as a member of this House as the people expect him to perform them in regard to the great public measures which are to be considered. If, by the passage of this resolution, one-half of the drudgery could be lifted from the shoulders of the members on this floor, I should vote for it, not for my own interest, but because I believe it to be in the interest of the people whom I represent.

Is there a man upon this floor who can rise here in his place and say that such an aid would not make this body more efficient in its public duties? I doubt if any man will say so. If then he can not deny the value of such a service, does not that settle the question? Should we not give the $350,000 for a Congress that we may have the benefit of the ten millions of dollars that must necessarily be expended? Why expend ten millions of dollars and send men here to make them mere clerks instead of legislators? Why not give the little additional sum required and let the country have the benefit of the vast expenditures which must be made?

What are the demands of the country? Not more legislation, but more deliberation, more thought, more statesmanship in the interest of the great body of the people on all of these questions that are presented.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield six minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN].

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of supporting this measure in the committee, although I was in the minority. I stand here to-day in the presence of this House to assume the full responsibility of my action there, and to answer to my constituents for that assumption.

I think the central question here presented is, is this right in principle? If it is right in principle it ought to prevail. If it is not right, it ought to be voted down.

Now, it was urged upon the floor of this House a few days ago, when this question was presented here in a similar shape, that it was a proposition in the nature of a salary grab. I am here, sir, to dispute that in toto. It has no more semblance to a salary grab than an old hat and a tattered coat, stretched upon a pair of cross-sticks standing in a cornfield, resemble a man. Not a bit of it. [Laughter.]

Let us see if this is to add anything, or will add anything, to the emoluments of a Representative upon the floor of this House. We find the duties of a Representative defined in the Constitution and in the laws of this commonwealth; and for the discharge of those duties, the duties of legislating upon those subjects, Representatives are elected with the emoluments which go with those duties and none others.

Now there has grown up by a process of accretion, to the duties defined by law attaching to the office of Representative, a great amount of detail that in nowise comes in as a part of the legitimate duties of his office. They are duties which have grown up for the accommodation of the people of his district. Because these people are at their homes and the Representative is here, and it is so easy to call upon him to get information for them, or to do those things they desire to have done here, he has got into the habit of doing them as a part of his duties. Now, the people demand them as a right, not perhaps a strict legal right, but because the Representative is here and accommodating and has been in the habit of doing so. This condition of affairs has so grown until the duties not incumbent upon a Representative are greater than the duties that he is compelled to perform and that are incumbent upon him by law. It is in my opinion a false economy that would keep him writing letters, running to the Departments, and attending to such business, while the great public measures upon which he is called to act as a Representative can receive no consideration at his hands, because he can not possibly find the time for that purpose. I say such a system is a saving at the spiggot and robbing at the bung. If it were otherwise, when legislation is demanded upon great appropriation bills they would not be put off until the very close of the session for the reason that no member has time to consider them before.

Now, the American people are not so stingy and so penurious, so cheese-paring in their economy, as to say they will send men here and spend millions of dollars for legislation and refuse members of Congress the assistance of a clerk at $75 a month, which will enable them to act maturely upon the measures that come before them in connection with their public duties here.

I am in favor of the amendment because it is right in principle. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. I shall support this proposition with my voice and my vote for two reasons. The first is, it is a measure of economy to the entire people. Every member of this House knows that a large number of his constituents have various claims pending before the different Departments of the Government. These are made up of the claims of postmasters against the Government, of claims of post-office contractors, of the claims of parties who have secured the obligations of the Government and who have not yet received the money upon those obligations, of claims for bounties that have not been paid, of claims for horses lost during the war, of claims for pensions, and of a variety of other claims, including also claims against the Government for property destroyed by Indians.

Thousands of dollars are paid by the people of your district—and I care not who the member may be—to the pension and claim agents in this city. I believe from my own district $30,000 annually are paid by the individual citizens of my district to parties here to prosecute claims against the Government which ought to be paid and which would have been paid before now if attention were given to these matters either by the claim agent or by a member of Congress.

I would like to know where there is a single man representing any district on the floor of this House who, when he places before his constituents the fact that they are paying to the claim agents of this city a large amount in excess of what would be called for if each Representative had a clerk at $75 a month—I ask where there is a member who would not be sustained in that position. I say this proposition is in favor of economy, of saving money to the people of this country. These claim agents here do not accomplish anything by their work, and the most of it has to be done through the member of Congress; and if it were understood by the people at large that every member of Congress had a clerk to whom he could refer these matters and under whose direction these claims could be obtained they could be more speedily settled than under the present law.

I support the resolution for a second reason; and that is that it places every member of this House on an equality. There are fifty-four committees of this House under the report of the Committee on Accounts, and every one of the chairmen of those committees is entitled to a clerk. Every member on that side not entitled to a clerk is not on an equal footing with the man who has a clerk.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I yield my colleague two minutes more.

Mr. PETERS. In another respect I want to see all the members of this House placed on an equality. The poor man here is unable to employ a clerk, and must occupy his time in running to the Departments and carrying on business for his individual constituents. The rich man can employ clerks and has time to study legislation, and when a matter comes up before this House he is prepared to discuss that legislation, while the poor man, unable to employ a clerk, has no opportunity to study legislation and therefore can not represent his constituents intelligently on this floor when matters of legislation come up in which they are interested.

This proposition will place all the members of this House on an equality, so that they will be able to give their attention equally to matters of legislation that come before it.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BIGGS].

Mr. BIGGS. I hope this proposition will not pass. I entered into a specific contract with the people of my State and district when I came here; and I knew what my salary and what my mileage would be, and I knew the amount of labor I would have to perform.

I ask the gentlemen on this floor that they be just before they are so generous. The people are bowed now with the burdens of taxation, and in the name of God why do you want to vote this money, amounting to nearly a quarter of a million of dollars, out of the public Treasury? It is nothing more nor less than a salary grab.

I ask you to ponder over this matter. If the gentleman from Kansas will allow me, I will send an amendment to the Clerk's desk and have it read. If he will accept the amendment I am satisfied there will be a unanimous vote on this side of the House, and I hope on both sides of the House. I ask to have the amendment read, believing if the gentleman will accept it we can get along harmoniously on this question without any further discussion. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. PERKINS. I permit it to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California has the right to have the amendment read as part of his remarks, but it is not in order to be offered at this time.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "which shall be paid out of the contingent fund" and insert "which shall be paid by each member out of his own pocket."

[Great laughter.]

Mr. BIGGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think we can agree to that. Will my friend accept the amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, there are two audiences which will take notice to what is said to-day in this connection, and which none of us can afford to ignore. There is an audience with an interest—I will not say unbecoming, but not helpful to accurate judgment. There is also an audience of the people which will hear and perhaps pass upon the votes and speeches of some gentlemen here to-day in a very different spirit from that which animates many of the members of this body. I respect that audience as fair, just, intelligent. I have always thought it becoming in me to have due and decent regard for it. Years ago there was a question here involving the compensation of the members of the Forty-second Congress. It was urged that the compensation of members was not sufficient, that it did not command the best talent, and various processes of reasoning were adopted by the House, resulting in an overwhelming vote augmenting the pay of members of that Congress; but very few of the gentlemen in that House who voted that way found approval on the part of their constituents, although there was the same defiant course of conduct in reference to public opinion that there is here now. I care not what other gentlemen may see fit to do in this matter, but when the proposition touches me personally, as this does every member, I shall feel that it has become a question of delicacy, and I shall be more careful in regard to that appropriation than in regard to any other that can possibly come before me as a member of the House. Gentlemen say that this is not a proposition for an increase of salary. They might as well say that many other things which would be helpful to members would not be virtually an increase of compensation.

I undertake to say, sir, that there are many members on this floor who would find the net result of it a decided increase of their compensation. Certainly such is the inference to be drawn from private conversation giving the experience of the gentlemen. There has been a suggestion made in behalf of this resolution on the ground that white gentlemen representing a constituency of only two thousand people may not need clerks, others with larger constituencies do need them. Now, sir, let me ask, for what purpose is that consideration injected here? It is simply an attempt to weaken the force of the argument of the gentlemen on this side of the House by raising another question, as to whether or not there has been a proper regard for the rights of citizens in the matter of voting. But what has that to do with this question? It has nothing whatever, and the introduction of it here is simply an attempt to vent indignation upon any man who stands in the way of this proposed appropriation. Sir, I care not for insinuations of that character. When that other question comes up I shall be ready to meet it, but no gentleman, by attempting to browbeat on another matter, shall compel me to give a vote which I regard as improper, and I trust that this side of the House will keep its record on this question clean, as it has been in the past.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I have never yet set the fear of political punishment as a guard over my conscience upon the question of the discharge of my duty as between myself and my constituents. I shall not begin to-day, and, if the opportunity offers, I shall vote for the passage of this resolution, because I believe that it involves as much as any measure of this kind that can come before the House the question of the efficiency of the Representative. Some of us represent here 64,000 votes, cast for the opposing candidates and for ourselves, involving, by fair political calculation, a population of 250,000 or 300,000 people. Can a man upon whose shoulders these responsibilities are flung, the details of which have been so well described by gentlemen here upon the floor—can such a man evolve from out the multitude of cares bearing upon him the time and thought to investigate the great appropriation bills which carry three hundred and odd millions of dollars? Can a man so situated find time to investigate the intricacies of the land policy and the laws incident thereto, which govern the Western country, from which many of us come, and the vast unappropriated public domain of the nation? Can a man with all these cares upon his mind and his conscience find time to follow up the action of the great commission which was raised not long ago for the purpose of regulating the infinitely delicate relations between the people and the instruments of commerce which control the carriage of the vast quantities of material that pass continually from the East to the West and from the West to the East? Can he find time to discuss conscientiously and intelligently almost any one of the fifty subjects which for their comprehension might require a year of careful study? There are laid upon him such burdens of detail that he is night and day the yoke-fellow of toil. So heavy is the weight of business pressing upon us that there is not one of the members from the Western section of this country who, if his physical system could bear the strain, might not go home to-night and sit down with his stenographer (if he is able to have one) and toil on till midnight or till morning, and in the morning go to the Departments and follow out the details of errands there, and then come to his seat here in this House—for what purpose? To echo the intelligent sentiment of the two or three hundred thousand people he may represent upon the great questions requiring action at the hands of Congress? No; to echo the decision formulated in a committee-room—in the committee-room of the Appropriations Committee, dominated possibly by one man who, under the influence of a habit of thought, has come to rule the committee and rule the country, and rule the millions of money that are poured out by the Government.

I submit, sir, that the question here is one of efficiency; and I conclude as I began: never yet have I set the fear of future political punishment as a guard over my conscience: and I will not do it to-day.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the only question, I think, that we need now seek to determine is whether the different members of the House of Representatives require, in fact, these clerks in the transaction of the public business. If so, I believe the 60,000,000 of people in this country would not only justify us in making, but would require us to make the expenditure.

I am frank to say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I do not need a clerk so much as I did when we had a Republican President. My correspondence is not so onerous as it was then. I think perhaps the demand upon my time in that respect is not so great as that made upon most gentlemen on the other side by their correspondence. Yet I beg to assure gentlemen here that my correspondence and Department work now are quite sufficient to take a very considerable part of my time, which I believe ought to be given to the public business in connection with matters of legislation. So much for that.

As there are gentlemen here who are afraid that public opinion will condemn this measure, I want to call their attention to the fact that for years past the popular body of Congress, the House of Representatives, has session after session come up and voted clerk-hire—not at the rate of $75 a month, but at the rate of $6 a day—to every Senator in the co-ordinate branch of the National Legislature. Some members thought that great political capital was to be made out of the action of the Senate touching that matter; but so far as I know, through all the years since that measure was adopted, the people have said, "That is a wise expenditure." And I must confess that year after year, when I have seen gentlemen antagonizing the appropriation for clerks for Senators to be paid at the rate of $6 a day, but in the end acquiescing in that appropriation, I have felt that we were not just to the popular body—the body that comes nearest to the people, and I think has, to say the least, as many duties to perform, so far as the personnel of the body is concerned, as Senators—we are not just in thus discriminating against this body and in favor of that. For that reason, as well as others, I feel like demanding for this body, equal in matters of legislation with the Senate, nearer to the people, and, as we think, in some things superior to the Senate in the nature of the duties thrust upon us, the same help that we have given to the members of the co-ordinate branch.

One word more. For many years it has been felt that there has been a great injustice done to the House of Representatives touching this matter. For that reason a majority of the committees of this House are mere dress-parade committees, without business, the only object in their creation having been to give the chairman of the committee a room in which to do his work touching matters of legislation and to enable him to have help in doing it. I know how this is. In the Forty-seventh Congress, besides being then, as I am now, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I was chairman of one of the dress-parade committees, and during that Congress the public Treasury paid for my clerk. Since that time I have paid him myself. So far as I am individually concerned I can do it and live. I hear some gentlemen say they can not in justice to themselves and their families pay the salary of a clerk.

But I beg gentlemen to listen to one other statement in regard to these dress-parade committees. I have not a list of all of them here, but I have a list of thirteen.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I ask one minute more.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. CANNON. I have here a list of thirteen of these committees, of which the clerical force, the messengers, and other expenditures reached the sum of over $300,000. Do you want to know how many reports these thirteen committees made in the Forty-ninth Congress? I hold them in my hand, and there are nine in all, from these thirteen committees. [Laughter.] Now, let us treat everybody alike. I think I can vote for this proposition and meet the approval of my constituency.

Mr. SHAW. Will the gentleman yield one minute?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. SHAW. The expenditure of $300,000 to which the gentleman refers was for what length of time?

Mr. CANNON. For the Congress, two sessions.

Mr. SHAW. For the clerks and messengers of thirteen committees?

Mr. CANNON. For the clerks, messengers, and the expenses pertaining to committee rooms, at least $300,000.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. SHAW. Does not the gentleman mean $30,000?

Mr. CANNON. I beg pardon; the gentleman is correct; I inadvertently called the figures $30,000 $300,000. But whether the aggregate is $30,000 or $300,000, whether it is much or little, the dress-parade committees are the same and the abuse is the same.

One other thing before I sit down: If any gentleman comes to the conclusion that in the event of this resolution passing he will not be justified in employing a clerk to be paid from the public Treasury, I know of no way in which he can be compelled to do so.

Mr. PERKINS. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Nineteen minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I shall support this amendment on the simple and practical ground already stated by more than one gentleman, that it is a matter of economy to the public service. I do not know how it is with other members of Congress, but I take it the requirements made on my part do not exceed those made on the average member of Congress.

This side of the House makes up in one class of correspondence what the other makes up in the matter of appeal for public patronage. I know that some members of the House receive a great deal more correspondence than I do. I kept an account for more than three months of the Forty-ninth Congress, and my letter-mail, nearly all of which required answers, averaged upward of forty letters a day. I paid for answering that correspondence a thousand dollars in cash, and when I had done that I had answered a large share of the letters myself.

I wish to put another view of this case to some gentlemen on the other side of this House. There are fifty-eight committees of the House, or something like that, all of which are to have clerks. The other day we had a proposition submitted to the House, and a yea-and-nay vote taken on it, that these clerks should be committee clerks, and should not be the private clerks of the chairmen of those committees. That resolution or amendment was voted down. I have not analyzed the vote to see whether or not the ornamental and dress-parade committee-clerk chairman voted in the negative or not. I do not know how that is; and if I did know I would not state it now.

But there must be a large number of gentlemen on that side now, and two years hence will be over here, who will understand if the head of the committee has any business with a clerk he is absolutely under the direction of the chairman of that committee, as the House has by solemn resolution declared he shall be the private clerk of that committee, for that is the logical effect of the vote we took the other day.

Is there anything like equality in that sort of thing?

The entire expense of the proposition made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] will amount to about one hundred or one hundred and thirty-four thousand dollars a year. It is not the enormous sum some of the gentlemen have been talking about, and this calculation is based on the theory of eleven months of session during the life of a Congress.

I am in favor of this proposition because I believe it is a matter of economy. I believe every individual member of Congress will take the responsibility for himself, and I am perfectly willing to take it, and if my constituents, who load their burdens on me as though there was no limit to my capacity for hard labor, are unwilling to pay their share to make up this fund they can employ somebody else who will do the work better, perhaps, and for less money, and I will be content.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am against the resolution, but not on the ground of expense. The American people are both able and willing to pay every dollar that is necessary to secure good government. The worst thing about this resolution is that it is an indirect method of increasing our salary, and that to only a pitiable extent. I admit that these clerks would relieve us of a great deal of duty we now have to perform—drudgery, mere manual labor, unfit for a Representative in the American Congress to have to perform, especially in franking numerous worthless documents and distributing seed of questionable value, which we laboriously do in a demagogical spirit and in rivalry to the seed stores of the country. [Laughter and applause.]

What Congress needs is not more clerks, but more Representatives of the people. If we had twice as many Representatives on this floor as we have now and three times as many Senators (six from each State) at the other end of the Capitol, then our representative clerical labor in both Houses could be easily and efficiently performed by ourselves.

Besides, most of the correspondence we have with our constituents is of a peculiarly representative character, and we should not leave the duty of executing it to a clerk, because of the principle that delegated authority should not be redelegated. If there were more Representatives in Congress legislation would then be carried on usually by the people for the people, and less by classes for classes. The additional expense of paying more Senators and Representatives during a period of ten years' time would be more than saved at every session of Congress by preventing improper appropriations that are now made without difficulty, and by wholesome legislation reducing taxes and wisely regulating the currency.

If New England would only combine to give us the enlarged representation in Congress which she has in her State Legislatures it would be a thousand times better for the American people than things are now. Sir, the facilities of communication and concentration and combination are so great now that every class interest in the land is syndicated into an organized phalanx, as it were, to pass laws and control the administration of laws against the people and against the Government for private benefit. In other words, classes are organized against the masses, and what is wanted in this country more than anything else is additional representation to prevent robbery under the forms of law. [Applause.]

There should be more of the judgment, the conscience, the interest of the masses injected into every law-making body on the continent, from village town councils up to the Congress of the United States. If that were done, the lobby would have a hard job [laughter], whereas now it has an easy one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish I had more time.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest and pleasure to the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. BIGGS] on his amendment to the pending proposition. It has been my pleasure to pay a clerk out of my own pocket for a great many years, ever since I have been in Congress, and I feel that the gentleman from California in his proposition might have considered the fact that one thousand or more dollars are paid to him, and other gentlemen from the Pacific coast, for transportation to and from Washington attending each session of Congress, and that it would probably come with a questionable grace from one receiving so large a compensation to suggest that those of us living near the capital should pay the compensation of our own clerks. One hundred and twelve thousand dollars are paid by the Government for mileage at each session of Congress. I pay my own clerk for his clerical services——

Mr. BIGGS. And so do I.

Mr. BINGHAM. And yet by act of Congress I am allowed $58 at each session for transportation to and from Philadelphia, when it costs me but $6 for the round trip. Therefore, I say, let there be an equal adjustment of the people's money, going directly where the people will be most benefited; and there could be no criticism or complaint if every member of Congress had a clerk, the sum total of which expense would not exceed the excess received by members of Congress in their transportation to and from the capital. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER].

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say to our Democratic friends on this side of the House that if the public press of the country thought this was a good move their votes would be cast accordingly. I want to say, as a member of this Congress, that I find it impossible to do much that I am called upon to do, representing in part the city of Chicago; and I say kindly to those gentlemen having clerks to assist them in a measure in doing their work that they ought to have a little more charitable feelings in expressing their views upon such a question as this. I do not believe, as parties interested, that they should vote upon the question at all. They have clerks allotted to them, and ought to be prohibited from interfering with this case. [Laughter and applause.]

I only say this: I believe the people would justify and approve the action of this Congress in voting each member a clerk. These clerks can relieve very greatly the members of Congress in their labors here, and enable them to devote just that much more time to the prosecution and consideration of the public business; and I think that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] puts the thing in its proper light when he says that justice has not been done to the constituencies of members upon this floor.

Members to-day on this side of the House have told me that they have correspondence now on their hands which has been accumulating for the past four weeks, and which, in consequence of the labors imposed upon them here, they are unable to reach and answer. That is doubtless the case with many; and I say in voting against this resolution they are not doing their constituents justice. I am in favor of the resolution or anything in that direction that will aid the members of Congress in doing right and justice to the people of this country.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, when this question was up the other day I voted in favor of the proposition submitted by the majority side of the House and against the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. I believe that proposition ought not to be adopted now. But I do not think it comes with very good grace from the chairmen of the committees upon the other side of this House, who, all of them, when the question was taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, I believe it was, requiring them to confine the labors of their clerks to the proper work before the committee, voted against that restriction of their duties, and yet are to-day insisting, while they ask that latitude for themselves, that the members of this House shall not have any assistance to aid them in their work.

Now the Committee on Accounts come back into the House and ask that clerks be given to a number of additional committees, which have no work to do and will not perhaps have a single report prepared for submission to the House during the present session, and these clerks are to receive a large amount of money out of the public Treasury. I ask gentlemen to be consistent upon these matters, and while they are in favor of restricting this side in measures of economy, that they will also favor measures looking to the restriction of members upon that side; requiring only clerks to be given to those committees which actually have work to be performed in the interest of the public service.

Mr. PERKINS. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I trust this amendment will not prevail. It will increase the expenses of this Congress, or rather of this session of Congress about $174,000, not a dollar of which has yet been appropriated for the payment of these clerks. There has been appropriated but $30,000 in the contingent fund, and that is devoted to miscellaneous expenses, such as the funerals of deceased members, etc.; and I take it for granted, sir, that there will be so many to bury, if this amendment prevails, that an additional appropriation will be absolutely necessary for the contingent fund. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen have found fault with the Committee on Accounts for assigning clerks to committees which they allege have no duties to perform. They say that those committees do not discharge, or have not in the past discharged, duties which require the assistance of a clerk. I am not able to say whether that is the fact or not; but if those committees exercise the rights which have been conferred upon them by this House I am sure they will have enough to employ the committees and clerks as well. I will read in this connection what the duties are which are assigned to the various committees on expenditures in the different Departments of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to extend the time for two minutes that I may yield that time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW].

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAW. I read from the rules:

The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several Departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers, shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the eight standing committees on the public expenditures in the several Departments.

I would commend this section to the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I will assure him in that connection that the Committee on Accounts will be pleased to find a room for him.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. For two Congresses I have been honored with the chairmanship of a committee which has been styled a dress-parade committee. If the House gives me a clerk of that committee it will be like Governor Foraker's staff, who help him to do nothing. I do not propose to accept him on any such ground. It would be a fraud and a pretense, and I never would do it.

In the second place, if this resolution shall be adopted I do not intend to appoint a clerk for myself. In saying this I have two objects in view. One is to indicate my determination to vote against this proposition, and the second is to prevent myself from being overwhelmed with applications for the clerkship. I want everybody to take notice of what is my intention. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. I am indeed indebted to the gentleman from Arkansas for the statement he has just made to the House, which only emphasizes what has already been said here in the course of this debate, that this report, which we are attempting to amend and make consistent, is reported in the interest of fifty-four members of this House. It is reported in the interest of men, some of whom, as suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas, have no necessity or use for a committee clerk. And yet when we propose to confer that same privilege which this committee is endeavoring to offer to the gentleman from Arkansas, and others situated as he is, when we propose to confer the same privilege on other members, we find the Committee on Accounts and others antagonizing it and standing here and charging that we are seeking to waste the people's money. It is consistent in the judgment of those gentlemen to confer the privilege on the accepted few, the fifty-four favorite Democrats, while the great mass of the members of this House are compelled to do the work recited here without assistance or at their own expense.

I will say to the gentleman from California [Mr. BIGGS] that the proposition which he presented here is not a novel one. It is very familiar to the older members of this House. We have for years been doing the very thing which the gentleman from California proposes—we have been employing clerks and paying them from our own pockets, and to relieve us in part and to avoid the discriminations and injustice which would result if the report of the committee is adopted we have submitted this proposition in good faith and with the belief that if members vote their convictions and in favor of good legislation it will prevail.

For one moment I challenge the gentlemen on the other side who are opposing this amendment to designate a debate which is followed or listened to by one-third of the members, unless it be one of peculiar interest; I challenge them to designate a vote taken in this House at which two-thirds of the members do not feel called upon to inquire of somebody near them what is the proposition and how they shall vote. And why is this? Not because of idleness or indifference, but it is because members are so engrossed in their correspondence and in their errand work and in the multifarious duties given them by their constituents that they have not the time on the floor to know what is the pending proposition. They sit here, more than two-thirds of them, engrossed in other duties, and inquire of the gentlemen about them how to vote and to explain the pending proposition. Is that the way to secure intelligent legislation? Is that the intelligent way in which to represent a constituency on the floor of this House? Shall that be continued or shall we avail ourselves of assistance and give intelligent consideration to legislation and to the demands of our constituents?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I move the previous question on the amendment and the report.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Is it in order to move to recommit pending the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then I move to recommit, with the instruction which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To recommit the subject-matter to the committee, with instructions to report a bill providing for a clerk for each member of the House, to be paid at the rate of $6 per day during the session of Congress; and providing that the bill, should it become a law, shall not take effect until the first session of the Fifty-first Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Is the motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CRAIN. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Florida is not germane to the subject before the House. The pending proposition is to provide every member of a committee in this House with a clerk, and the instructions to the Committee on Accounts to report a bill for the purpose of providing members in succeeding Congresses with clerks is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled upon the same point the other day and sustained the point of order, and after that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] put his proposition in a different form, which the Chair admitted. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the report, with the instruction which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the pending proposition be recommitted to the Committee on Accounts, with instructions to amend the same so as to fix the number of session clerks at the number authorized during the last Congress and no more, and assign the same to the several committees not having annual clerks, and allow a clerk to the Committee on the Eleventh Census, and report to the House accordingly.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN; and it was rejected—ayes 55, noes 91.

The previous question was then ordered on the amendment of Mr. PERKINS—ayes 114, noes 32.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. MCADOO. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the House take the yea-and-nay vote directly on the main question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon the point of no quorum?

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is withdrawn; the previous question is ordered; and the question now is on the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], which is offered as a substitute for the report of the committee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DUNN. I ask that the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas be read.

The Clerk again read the amendment proposed by Mr. PERKINS.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 182, not voting 77; as follows:

YEAS—64.

Mr. BREWER with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, on this vote.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. MILLIKEN.

Mr. CATCHINGS with Mr. MORROW.
Mr. MORSE with Mr. COGSWELL.
Mr. LATHAM with Mr. DORSEY.

Mr. MCKINNEY with Mr. GALLINGER.
Mr. FORNEY with Mr. RYAN.
Mr. BYNUM with Mr. HERMANN.
Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. JACKSON.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with Mr. COCKRAN. If it had not been for that pair (which has not been announced) I should have voted "aye."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I observe the announcement is made that I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCKINNEY]. We are paired on political questions. If the ruling should be, as I suppose it would be, that this is not a political question, I should let my vote stand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes no ruling upon such questions. The gentleman must decide for himself.

Mr. MATSON. My colleague [Mr. BYNUM], who is absent on account of sickness, would, if present, vote "no" on this proposition.

Mr. LATHAM. If the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY], with whom I am paired, were present, I would vote "no" on this question.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of information. I would like to ascertain whether the Speaker decides that this is a political question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair made no decision on that subject.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I desire to say that if this is not a political question, I wish to be recorded in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must determine that matter for himself. It is not the province of the Chair to determine what are and what are not political questions.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Then I desire to be recorded in the negative.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall during the roll-call?

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I was.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. SHAW. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] was rejected; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to ask for a separate vote on that portion of this report which proposes to give a clerk respectively to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department and the Committees on Expenditures in the several other Departments?

The SPEAKER. That is the question on which the House is about to vote. The Chair will state the situation of the question. A few days ago the Committee on Accounts made a report assigning clerks to certain committees, which were enumerated. To that report various amendments were offered, and pending those amendments the report was recommitted to the Committee on Accounts. To-day the committee reports the matter back, proposing a substitute which differs from the original report in the fact that it assigns clerks to the committees which the gentleman from New Jersey has just mentioned. The question now before the House is upon agreeing to the substitute proposed by the committee, which, if agreed to, will give clerks to these additional committees. If it be not agreed to, the vote will then recur upon agreeing to the original report, which does not give clerks to these committees.

Mr. BAYNE. Is it in order to move that this report be laid on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BAYNE. I make that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like unanimous consent to put a question to the chairman or some other member of the committee making this report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire some member of the committee from whom this proposition comes to state what increase in the force of clerks this report will make over the force employed in the last Congress for like duties.

Mr. SHAW. The report increases the number five, exclusive of the assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims; but all the committees included in this report, with the exception, I think, of two, were provided with clerks in the last Congress; they were not embraced in the original assignment, but were provided for by subsequent resolutions.

Mr. RANDALL. Then this is a net increase of one?

Several MEMBERS. Two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] moves to lay the report, with the accompanying substitute, on the table.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes 77, noes 102.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Committee on Accounts for the original report.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn. There are a great many members absent at this time. Let us have a full vote on this question to-morrow.

Mr. RANDALL. We had better dispose of it now.

The motion of Mr. BAYNE, that the House adjourn, was not agreed to; there being—ayes 77, noes 110.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 124, noes 90, not voting 109; as follows:

YEAS—124.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL said: Mr. Speaker, as this has assumed the character of a party question, and as I have paired with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk for the rest of the day:

Mr. DUNN with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. WISE with Mr. YOST on this question.

Mr. FORD with Mr. CUTCHEON.

Mr. YODER with Mr. PHELPS.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. SHAW moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. SHAW (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FOREIGN MAIL PARCELS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster-General, in reply to a resolution of the Senate adopted on the 9th of January, to which the Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. The communication will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of a certified copy of the following resolution, adopted by the Senate on the 9th of January, instant, namely:

"Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inform the Senate what length of time books and other parcels received by mail from foreign countries are detained in the custom-house at New York, and if such detention be necessary or not, and what is the reason therefor."

And in response thereto to say that upon receipt of the resolution inquiry was made through the Superintendent of Foreign Mails of the postmaster at New York, and of the collector of customs of the port of New York, from whom have been received the communications which are herewith inclosed, each bearing date the 12th of January instant, and which appear to answer the inquiry made. The communication of the postmaster indicates that dutiable matter arriving in the mails is treated in accordance with the regulations of the Department contained in sections 618 to 622, inclusive, of the Postal Laws and Regulations. These relate to ordinary mails and not to parcels received from countries with which parcels-post conventions have been concluded, as part of such parcels-post dispatches.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

WM. F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore, United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter and accompanying communications will be referred to the Committee——

Mr. HOAR. The letter and communications may lie on the table for a few moments. It is manifest that the Postmaster-General has not, in the letter which has been read answered the inquiry of the Senate at all. Whether the documents to which he refers contain a sufficient answer I can only tell upon examination.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Had we better not have the communications read? It is an interesting matter to the public.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; let the accompanying documents be read, if they are brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The accompanying communications will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE, NEW YORK, N. Y.,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER,
January 12, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of 10th inst., conveying the direction of the Hon. Postmaster-General that I shall as soon as practicable furnish your office with the information called for by the following resolution of the Senate of the United States, namely:

"Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inform the Senate what length of time books and other parcels received by mail from foreign countries are detained in the custom-house at New York, and if such detention be necessary or not, and what is the reason therefor."

In reply I beg leave to say that the time for which book and other unsealed parcels are detained by customs officers here after having been placed in their custody varies according to the number of such parcels received in each arriving foreign mail. This number is largest during the period embraced between December 1 and the 1st of succeeding February, covering the "holiday season," when books and other articles are sent in large numbers from European and other foreign countries to friends in the United States. The average number of such packages (with obviously or presumably dutiable contents) arriving weekly during the above-named period is between 6,000 and 7,000, while at other times it does not exceed 2,000. These (when unsealed) are placed in charge of the customs examiners here at the earliest possible hour after their arrival, each of them first-receiving a postmark indicating the date on which it is so disposed of, and a receipt for the number of parcels they receive is given by the customs officers. Those parcels found to contain dutiable books, and addressed for delivery beyond this city, are remailed by the customs examiners under cover addressed to the postmasters at the offices of destination, charged with the amount of duties assessed. They are so remailed direct by the customs officers in the building, and this office has no means of knowing the time that they have remained in custody of those officers; but the collector of customs will doubtless be able to furnish the desired information on this point. Those packages which contain non-dutiable books or other non-dutiable articles are remailed in the same manner. Those containing dutiable articles other than books are seized by the officers and conveyed to the "seizure room" at the custom-house—but books are not taken from this building. As dutiable articles other than books are excluded from the mails by the terms of the Universal Postal Union Convention, and are forwarded here in violation of its provisions, they are surrendered absolutely to the customs authorities to be treated in accordance with the revenue laws.

Sealed packages supposed to contain dutiable articles are so marked, and if addressed to places beyond this city are then forwarded by mail to their addresses, where the postmaster notifies the addressees to call for and open the same in the presence of customs officers. Similar notice is sent in the case of like packages addresed for delivery in this city.

The only detention that occurs here is in the case of book packages (all others being disposed of within twenty-four hours), and such detention is confined to that necessarily incident to their proper examination by the customs authorities. During the greater part of the year very few, if any, complaints are made of delay in reaching the addressees, as the customs officers return them within a very short time after their receipt. Those delays which occur during the "holiday season," however, sometimes extend over several weeks, and give rise to quite a number of complaints. It is proper to add that the number of such complaints received this season has so far been much less than that received in previous years—indicating shorter time of detention than formerly.

The cause of these delays is obviously the fact that book packages, during the period named, arrive in such large numbers that it is not possible for the force of examiners to inspect, appraise, and remail them within any less time than that in which those duties are now performed: The following statistics for the months of July and December, 1887, demonstrate the marked difference between the number of book packages received during the "holiday season" and other portions of the year:

| | July. | December. |
|---|---|---|
| Book packages held for appraisement | 5,423 | 13,441 |
| Books appraised | 10,469 | 23,942 |

The packages contain from one to fifteen or more books each, and the examination and appraisement of them requires, for its proper and intelligent performance, the expenditure in each case of some time and the exercise of judgment, discretion, and perhaps as much expert knowledge as is required in the case of any article imported through the ordinary channel.

It is my belief that (save during the "holiday season") the importation of books through the mails by persons who are not dealers and who procure them for their own use, is attended with no more delay, if as much, as would attend their importation as freight, and that at all times the cost is less—all charges for brokerage, cartage, storage, etc., being avoided, while the postage charges are far below those incident to other methods of transportation. So long as books remain on the list of articles subject to duty under our revenue laws, some delay must occur in their delivery after arrival by mail, and so far as my observation has extended I am confident that the delays which now occur are not chargeable to any negligence or inattention on the part of customs examiners assigned to duty in this building.

Very respectfully,
H. G. PEARSON,
Postmaster.

SUPERINTENDENT OF FOREIGN MAILS,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOAR. That document most singularly evades the direct question which was put to the Postmaster-General by the Senate, what time of delay is usually experienced in the New York custom-house in the importation of books and other parcels. It states that there are a great many more at one time of the year than at another, that it requires examination, and all that. Now, as I understand, there is put on the parcel when it is received in the custom-house in New York a stamp indicating the date, and when it is delivered another stamp indicating the date. I have in my own experience had occasion to see several of these parcels so imported, and they all contained that information; and they all indicate, not only at the Christmas season but at other seasons of the year, a delay in the New York custom-house averaging from ten to fourteen days in the cases of which I have personal knowledge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is a supplementary communication from the collector of customs at New York, which can be read if the Senator desires.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; let that be read also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read the communication.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW YORK, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, January 12, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 10th instant, transmitting a copy of resolution of the Senate of the United States, I have to report that on receipt of it I immediately referred the matter to John M. Wilson, esq., inspector of customs, in charge of the customs bureau, situate in the New York post-office building. Mr. Wilson has reported to me that while unable to give the exact time that any particular book or books, parcel or parcels, have been detained in the customs bureau in the post-office building, he can report that no non-dutiable package has been detained at all; that dutiable packages have necessarily been detained over night, if they came in the evening, so that they could be appraised by the United States appraiser the next day. No further detention has occurred in any case than was necessary to afford time in daylight for the appraisement of dutiable packages. No books or other packages that may be legally sent through the foreign mails are ever sent to the custom-house or detained in the customs bureau of the post-office any longer than necessary for the orderly disposition thereof. The force in the customs bureau of the post-office is ample and efficient, and the work well done; it is entirely up, and complaints, so far as he has any means of judging, are without any actual foundation.

Very respectfully, yours,
D. MAGONE, Collector.

Hon. NICHOLAS M. BELL,
Superintendent of Foreign Mails, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOAR. The observation which I was making, that this answer is evaded by these authorities, is re-enforced by the letter which has just been read from the collector of customs. That letter would give to the public the idea that books so imported were detained usually only over night until daylight should come, and that there was no foundation for any complaint. Now, I can state as of my personal knowledge in regard to it that these packages bear the evidence of a stamp when they are received and a stamp when they are delivered, indicating in all the cases which have been brought to my attention, and in all the cases in which I have happened to have a personal concern for the last year or two, an average detention of between ten and fourteen days, so that the importation of a dutiable book under this otherwise extremely convenient and economical arrangement (the custom-house officer admitting that he has a sufficient force for the purpose) is longer than the time required for the transportation of the book across the Atlantic. If you send by cable to-day an order on a London book-seller the probability is that the whole time of the detention of the package in the New York custom-house after it arrives at this shore will be considerably more than the time occupied in transmitting your message to London, having the transaction effected there, the package sent on its way and crossing the Atlantic, and delivered to you from the New York custom-house on this side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, with the accompanying letters, will lie upon the table.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Mrs. Johanna Dorman Smith, of Kansas, praying for the passage of an act granting an increase of pension to her minor child, Mary Elvira Dorman; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Job Barnard, of the District of Columbia, praying legislation to enable him to obtain a deed for certain real estate from the District commissioners; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VANCE presented a petition of citizens of Union County, North Carolina, and a petition of citizens of Chatham County, North Carolina, praying that the compensation allowed fourth-class postmasters may be increased; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition quite numerously signed by citizens of Nebraska, praying for the passage of the bill prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of 1,400 Good Templars, citizens of Iowa, praying for the enactment of an act amendatory of the internal-revenue law relative to the sale of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUTLER. I present a petition of the governor and State officers, senators and members of the house of representatives of South Carolina, praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of Winyah Bay, in South Carolina. The petition is very short, and, as I believe the Committee on Commerce very rarely read petitions, I will take the liberty of reading this one, in order that it may go in the RECORD.

The petition sets forth in the usual formula that a critical examination of the entrance to Winyah Bay by competent engineers has satisfactorily demonstrated the feasibility of deepening it by a system of jetties, and the reports of the engineer officers of the Government now on file in the War Department, and covering a period of several years, unanimously declare that this improvement, if consummated, would be of incalculable benefit to the commercial and agricultural interests of a large portion of the State of South Carolina; that the town of Georgetown, situated at the head of Winyah Bay, at the confluence of a vast and superb system of water transportation, is one of the three seaports of the State, with an annual commerce of over $4,000,000, which might be easily quadrupled if the products of the interior could obtain at that point a cheap and expeditious outlet to the ocean.

The petition further states that the cities, towns, and communities lying along the banks of the various navigable streams centering at Georgetown are all vitally interested in the improvement of this outlet, so as to facilitate communication with the marts of the world, and its execution would result in a great and steadily increasing development of their natural resources.

Therefore the petitioners pray that your honorable bodies will appropriate such sums of money as have been recommended by the United States engineers for the deepening of the bar. And your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

I also present a petition for the same purpose from citizens of Columbia, S. C.; also a petition of citizens of Smith's Mill, S. C., of the same import; also a petition of citizens of Port Harrelson, S. C.; also a petition of citizens of Hammond, S. C.; also a petition of citizens of Sampit, S. C.; also a petition of citizens of Bucksville, S. C.; also a petition of citizens of Bennettsville, S. C.; also a petition of citizens of Georgetown, S. C.; and a petition of citizens of Socastee, S. C.

I move the reference of the petitions, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented a petition of gold and silver beaters of the United States, praying for the imposition of an increased duty on gold leaf and bronze, or Dutch metal, in leaf and powder; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 106 citizens of the Ninth Congressional district of Michigan, praying for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of mill-owners, loggers, and other citizens of Oregon and Washington Territories, remonstrating against the admission of foreign lumber free of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FAULKNER presented a petition of 36 citizens of the Fourth Congressional district of West Virginia, praying for the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, or importation of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. I present joint resolutions passed by the Legislature of Georgia favoring the National Industrial Exposition of Colored People of the United States to be held at Atlanta, Ga., in November next. As the resolutions were passed by the General Assembly of Georgia, I ask that they be read.

The resolutions were read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

COMMENDING NATIONAL COLORED INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

Whereas there will be a national industrial exposition held in the city of Atlanta, Ga., commencing November—, 1888, and continuing three months, to commemorate and illustrate the progress of the colored race by a display of works of art, live-stock, field products, machinery, manufactures, and all other articles raised, fabricated, produced, or owned by colored people throughout the United States; and

Whereas this exposition would materially contribute to the elevation and advancement of the colored race by stimulating their energies and arousing their self-reliance and thus redound to the benefit of the whole country: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of Georgia, That the said national industrial exposition is commendable in its object and must attract to its support and countenance the earnest co-operation of all enlightened men, and that we most cordially approve of it as a movement in favor of our colored citizens.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions be sent to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State, with the request that the same be laid before the Federal Congress, and that such favorable action be urged in that body by our members as will tend to the success and furtherance of this interesting and important object.

WM. A. LITTLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
M. A. HARDIN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
JNO. S. DAVIDSON,
President of the Senate.
W. A. HARRIS,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved August 3, 1887.

JOHN B. GORDON, Governor.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a memorial from the Legislature of New Hampshire, in which they set forth the alarming state of illiteracy now existing in certain sections of our country; indorse the passage of the educational bill, and request that copies be forwarded to Congress for presentation. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE:

I, Ira A. Chase, clerk of the senate of New Hampshire, at the June session thereof, 1887, hereby certify that the following concurrent resolution was received in the senate from the house of representatives by their clerk on Tuesday, August 30, 1887, and passed by the senate aforesaid on Wednesday, August 31, 1887:

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), In view of the alarming state of illiteracy now existing in certain sections of our country, and considering the great danger to republican institutions that may result therefrom, unless some adequate relief is afforded, that we approve of the measure known as the Blair educational bill, substantially as it passed the Senate of the United States in 1886; and the secretary of state is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives at the meeting of the next Congress."

A true copy of senate journal record.

Attest:
[SEAL.]

IRA A. CHASE,
Clerk of Senate of New Hampshire.

Mr. SABIN. I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of the Fifth Congressional district of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN presented a resolution adopted by the Minnesota Historical Society, favoring the continuance of the geodetic survey already commenced in the State of Minnesota by the Engineer Corps of the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McPHERSON presented the petition of John Scully, of South Amboy, N. J., praying for the passage of a bill for the registry of the barges Albert M., Condor, and Adelante; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HISCOCK. I present several petitions, numerously signed by citizens of New York, praying for the passage of a bill granting legal protection to young girls in the District of Columbia. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented two petitions of citizens of Vermillion County, Indiana, praying that Henry Potter, late a private of Company D, Eighty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, be put upon the pension-roll; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST. I have received from an association, the Bureau of Prohibition in the District of Columbia, two petitions, purporting to come from citizens of the Fourth Congressional district of Missouri, and citizens of the Fourteenth Congressional district of Missouri praying for the passage of the bill prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Thomas P. MacManus has asked me to present a petition praying that a vacancy in the United States Army be created by law, to which he may be appointed for the purpose of being retired therefrom on pay. At his request I present his petition, and move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Anson S. McDonald, late a private of Company H, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Amanda W. Beach, of Burlington, Vt., praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Mary E. Woodward, widow of the late Dr. J. B. Woodward, now of Boston, Mass., praying to be allowed a pension, and the petition of William Wells, of Burlington, Vt., in support thereof; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. I present resolutions adopted by the Chicago Freight Bureau, an association of merchants, members of the Board of Trade, and manufacturers of Chicago, favoring an amendment to the interstate-commerce act making it unlawful for any person to offer for shipment any articles the correct weight of which is not specified in the way-bill. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of 194 citizens of the Twenty-fifth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, praying for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHACE presented a petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a bill to amend the act incorporating the National Safe Deposit Company of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had elected Hon. SAMUEL S. COX, a Representative from the State of New York, Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1138) to reimburse the depositors in the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 352) for the relief of Bessie S. Gilmore, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1364) to declare the sense of an act entitled "An act to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for moneys advanced Government for war purposes," and to authorize a re-examination of the settlement made by the Secretary of War thereunder, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Harlow G. Hyde, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 1477) granting a pension to Harlow G. Hyde; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George W. Peavy, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 1478) granting a pension to George W. Peavy; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1111) granting a pension to Mary J. Davis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 509) authorizing an increase of pensions in certain cases, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 124) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 354) to provide for the survey of certain historic grounds, locations, and military works, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 643) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss., reported it without amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 465) granting a pension to William Sackman, sr., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 339) granting a pension to Eliza Douglass, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 340) granting a pension to Joseph F. Bean, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1184) to refund excessive duties caused by extraordinary overvaluation of the Austrian florin in the year 1878, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1000) to increase the pension of certain soldiers and sailors who are utterly helpless from injuries received or diseases contracted while in the service of the United States, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 43) granting a pension to Polly H. Smith, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 74) to increase the pension of Thomas Chapman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 973) to authorize the Omaha, Hays City and Southwestern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1118) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Clark, deceased, have instructed me to report the same favorably, accompanied by a written report, this being an exceptional case, and not provided for under the general law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the report will be printed, under the rule.

Mr. HAMPTON. The bill (S. 932) to authorize the construction of a gravel road to the Richmond National Cemetery, near Richmond, Va., was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, but I find on examination that a similar bill was passed and became a law at the last Congress. By mistake the bill was introduced and referred in the present Congress. I report it back, and move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the following order, there having been, as I am advised, no adverse report:

Ordered, That Frank A. Page have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate his petition and accompanying papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the petition and papers of Mary E. Woodward for a pension, which were before the last Congress and on which no report was made, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course these withdrawals are under the conditions imposed by the rules?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are ordered under the conditions imposed by the rules.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY it was Ordered, That Maj. Gen. Schuyler Hamilton have leave to withdraw from the files the papers in his case, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CHARLES R. WESTBROOK.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General is hereby directed to report to the Senate the facts attending the employment of Charles R. Westbrook as an assistant to the district attorney for the southern district of New York, together with copies of all correspondence on the subject, the emolument paid to him, and the appropriation from which paid, and if the said Westbrook received also extra compensation for any time previous to such employment, he not being a sworn officer of Government.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to have the resolution read again.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer the followign resolution, and ask that it be now considered:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to make investigation and report to the Senate what steps have been taken by the Omaha and Council Bluffs Railway and Bridge Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and if he shall find the construction of said bridge has been commenced, to investigate whether said structure is in accord with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1887, and plans and specifications heretofore approved by the Secretary of War, and whether said bridge is being constructed as a combined railway and wagon bridge, or a wagon-bridge only.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

POSTAGE ON THIRD-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. PLATT. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to inquire whether any mail matter addressed to Senators is detained in the Washington post-office; if so, whether the same is legally or illegally detained, and, if illegally detained, who is responsible therefor, and what remedy exists; and to report by bill or otherwise.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement for the information of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the matter to which the resolution is directed.

A firm in Connecticut, I understand, named "The H. P. Hubbard Company," about the time of the opening of Congress, addressed to each of the Senators, and, I may also add, to the members of the House of Representatives, a book, of which this is a copy [exhibiting]. They are advertising agents, and the book contains a list of the leading newspapers in the United States, and is valuable as a book of reference. It is strictly third-class matter. They printed an edition of 5,000 copies of the book, as I am informed, and had been accustomed to pay upon each copy postage to the amount of 11 cents. It was mailed at the city of New Haven just before the opening of Congress. Eleven cents postage was paid upon each book. It contains upon the cover these words:

"THE H. P. HUBBARD COMPANY,
Judicious Advertising Agents and Experts,
Designers, Engravers and Electrotypers.
NEW HAVEN, CONN."

It was inclosed in a wrapper, upon which, in addition to the words "The H. P. Hubbard Company," were the words "judicious advertising agents and experts." When it reached the Washington City post-office, I am informed that letter postage was charged upon it, namely, 31 cents upon each book, in addition to the 11 cents which had been paid, upon the claim that there being upon the cover, in addition to the words "The H. P. Hubbard Company," the words "judicious advertising agents and experts," it was subject to rates for first-class matter.

It has been the custom of the Senate postmaster whenever additional postage was charged at the city post-office to pay it and to collect it of Senators; but when he found that there were seventy-six books upon each of which 31 cents additional postage was charged, he was unwilling and very properly declined to pay it. He wrote to the firm in New Haven which had sent the books, asking permission to erase at the city post-office the objectionable words. Receiving that permission from the senders he applied to the city postmaster of Washington to cancel the objectionable printing on the wrapper, but he would not assent to anything without authority from the Department. Mr. Kellogg then went to see the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Harris. But I think, however, he did not find the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, but he asked his chief clerk if he could not have authority to erase these words, and so deliver the matter to the Senators. He received the assurance that if the city postmaster would allow it, the Department would make no objection. Of course that was the act not of the Assistant Postmaster-General, but of the clerk. He then asked for specific instructions and received this letter:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 8, 1887.

SIR: In answer to verbal inquiry made by you this morning, I beg leave to inform you that the Postmaster-General has refused to give any order to the postmaster of this city allowing him to deliver certain matter mailed by the H. P. Hubbard Company, of New Haven, Conn., without payment of the postage due under the law.

Yours, very respectfully,

H. R. HARRIS,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. AARON W. KELLOGG,
Assistant Postmaster, United States Senate.

The assistant postmaster of the Senate then wrote in reply that he had never asked for the matter referred to in the note of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, but he did ask an answer to the following, to wit: "That the H. P. Hubbard Company might be allowed to erase and destroy the offending words on 400 copies of the Blue Book sent under misapprehension and by permission of the postmaster at New Haven, upon which they had paid 11 cents postage, so that they might be relieved from paying 31 cents more." In reply to that request he received this letter:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1887.

SIR: Yours of to-day is received. The Department can not authorize you to take from the post-office in this city the mail matter to which you refer, except upon payment of the postage rated up by the postmaster.

Yours, very respectfully,

H. B. HARRIS,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

AARON W. KELLOGG, Esq.,
Assistant Postmaster, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

In my judgment the law does not require or authorize the charging of postage on first-class matter upon those books so sent to Senators by one of my constituents in Connecticut. It is third-class matter purely and strictly. I do not intend this morning to take the time of the Senate to go into any lengthy argument to show that the printing of the occupation of the sender in addition to his name upon the envelope, to wit, the words "Judicious Advertising Agents and Experts," does not take the package out of the third class, which is printed matter. It is not claimed or pretended that if that book which contained those words upon it in full sight had been sent, not under an envelope which inclosed the whole book, but under a band which inclosed a part of it so as to leave those words in sight, it would have changed the character of the mail matter at all.

The Postmaster-General, in answer to a letter from R. H. Macy & Co., of New York, quotes sections 22 and 23 of the act of March 3, 1879, and claims that under those sections there can be no printed matter upon the envelope containing the inclosure except words indicating the name and address of the sender with the word "from" prefaced thereto above or preceding the same. I think that he made a mistake in not remembering, for the time being, that third-class matter is printed matter, and nothing else, and that therefore there was no reference in the statute to what might be printed upon third-class matter. Second-class matter is periodicals; third-class matter is miscellaneous printing; fourth-class matter is merchandise.

This whole matter originated in New York by an order from the postmaster there, which charged letter postage upon fourth-class merchandise matter because of printing upon the cover of the merchandise, in addition to the name of the sender, his business or occupation, and his address. That had been permitted up to that time; it had been permitted under former administrations, and it had been permitted under the present reform administration up to about the time of the holiday trade last year. It had been allowed upon the theory that it was permissible by statute, unquestionably permissible, to inclose a paper upon which were printed the address of the sender, his occupation, and his place of business, in addition to the address. That might be inclosed in the package, and former administrations had held in publishing the Postal Guide that by the fair intendment of the law it might therefore be allowed upon the wrapper; that if it were allowed to put it inside it might be allowed to put it on the wrapper; that printed matter, at any rate when accompanying merchandise, was subjected to double the rate of postage of third-class matter, which was printed matter.

The old rule as laid down in the Postal Guide with regard to fourth-class matter was this, which is found on page 673, section 435, of the Postal Guide of 1885:

The long-established rule of the Department, that matter of a lower grade may be inclosed in that of a higher, authorizes printed matter to be inclosed with merchandise, and that to make a distinction between printed matter inclosed with merchandise and printing upon a tag, attached to a sample, or upon the sample itself, where the latter consists of paper, is not within the reasonable intendment of the law.

I think the former construction was right, but I do not speak so particularly with regard to the construction of the law relating to fourth-class matter. It is possible, technically speaking, construing the law not in the interest of the public, but as a technical lawyer construes criminal statutes, that the Postmaster-General is right with reference to the postage to be charged upon fourth-class matter containing upon the cover the printed occupation and place of business of the sender, but upon third-class matter, it seems to me, there is no excuse for it whatever.

Now, let me read the statute (and I shall be brief) in relation to this matter. Section 22 of the act referred to is this:

That mailable matter of the second class shall contain no writing, print, mark, or sign—

Observe the words "writing, print, mark, or sign"— thereon or therein in addition to the original print, except as herein provided, to wit, the name and address of the person to whom the matter shall be sent, and index figures of subscription book, either written or printed, the printed title of the publication, the printed name and address of the publisher or sender of the same, and written or printed words or figures or both, indicating the date on which the subscription to such matter will end.

It will be observed that as to this second class, which consists of newspapers and periodicals, the statute is very particular to say that certain things may be written or "printed" thereon. The statute then goes on:

Upon matter of the third class, or upon the wrapper inclosing the same, the sender may write his own name or address thereon, with the word "from" above and preceding the same, and in either case may make simple marks intended to designate a word or passage of the text to which it is desired to call attention. There may be placed upon the cover or blank leaves of any book or of any printed matter of the third class a simple manuscript dedication or inscription that does not partake of the nature of a personal correspondence.

It will be observed that the direction there is that upon the cover the sender may write—not "print or write," but "write"—his own name or address. A strict technical construction of the statute, such as the Postmaster-General gives to it, would forbid the "printing" of the name and the address of the sender upon it. The statute says the sender may "write" his own name and address upon it, and it would be no greater nonsense to have held that because the statute said he might "write" his own name and address upon it he could not therefore "print" his own name or address upon it, than it was to hold that he could not print anything upon it which came within the description of third-class matter.

The reason that the permission was given to "write" upon the covering of third-class matter was because it was unnecessary in reference to such matter, which consisted exclusively of printed matter, to give permission to print anything that the sender chose to "print" upon the envelope or inclosure containing the same so long as he left a place for the address of the person to whom it was sent.

I do not care, Mr. President, to follow this matter further. It seems to me that it was an unwarranted construction of the statutes, that it was not only technical, but it was an improper and unjustifiable construction of the statute which has caused great distress, annoyance, and loss to the business people of this country.

I desired to make these remarks this morning because a bill has been introduced at the suggestion of the Postmaster-General which is to remedy this supposed defect in the law. I desire the bill to pass because Congress is powerless to direct another branch of the Government as to how it shall administer or interpret the law, and I desire to have the business community relieved from the annoyance, and vexation, and trouble to which it has been subjected and the loss which it has sustained by what I believe to have been an improper construction of the law, and an unwarranted construction of it; I was not willing to allow that bill to pass, however, until I had protested that I thought all this trouble, and vexation, and loss were unnecessary, and resulted not from a fault of the law, as the Postmaster-General in the pretended exercise of a superior and superlative virtue seems to suppose, but from the mistake of the Postmaster-General himself.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, it is an easy matter to find fault with the administration of the law. Executive officers are bound to take the law as they find it. I understand that the Postmaster-General's action in this matter was to address a circular to postmasters throughout the country, embodying the law itself, without any interpretation or construction of that law by the Postmaster-General, calling the attention of the postmasters throughout the country to the law itself. The postmasters in several localities, especially in New York and some other cities, put a construction on the law different from that put on it by the Senator from Connecticut. The Postmaster-General believed, in his discretion, that it was right to sustain the men under him, especially where there was a doubt as to the proper construction of the law. He has sustained the action of those postmasters whose action has been criticised by the Senator from Connecticut; but, as I understand, the construction put on it by the postmasters has received the sanction of the Postmaster-General, without his having originally put an interpretation on the law himself. He endeavored to come to a conclusion as to what the law meant, and as embarrassments have arisen, the Postmaster-General has very properly applied, as I understand, though I have not conversed with him personally upon the subject, that a bill be passed bringing the desired relief.

I do not think the action of the Postmaster-General has been such as ought to receive the censure of the Senator from Connecticut or anybody else. I am sure that he has pursued a proper course. I only rose to say that our Post-Office Committee yesterday authorized a bill to be reported to correct the very wrong of which the Senator from Connecticut complains. Let him co-operate with that committee and secure the enactment of a law which will relieve the difficulty sustained from the construction put on the law by postmasters throughout the country.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, as I indicated, this difficulty originated with reference to fourth-class matter in the city of New York by the ruling or circular of the reform postmaster of this Administration in that city, who, I say without qualification, I am sorry was appointed and sorry was confirmed. That circular of the postmaster in New York had no reference whatever to third-class matter. It was appealed from by Messrs. Macy & Co., of New York, and upon the appeal the Postmaster-General saw fit to go further than to decide the question which was submitted to him and promulgated certain opinions of his with regard to third-class matter. It may be said, and I think truly said, that the strict text of his reply would not go so far as to hold that the city postmaster at Washington was justified in holding the books which I have alluded to upon the ground that first-class postage had not been paid upon them; but when the letter of the Postmaster-General in reply to Messrs. Macy & Co. circulated among postmasters, went to New York, then the New York postmaster issued a circular—it was not issued from the Department at Washington; it is

"New York Circular, No. 49"—in which he undertook to give language and specification to what the Postmaster-General had said in his reply to Macy & Co., which had been circulated broadcast through the country and sent to the postmasters; and he, the postmaster in New York, thereupon held and published in a circular, in effect, that third-class matter which contained upon the envelope anything except the name and residence of the person to whom it was addressed and the address of the sender, preceded by the word "from" and the residence of the sender, was subject to first-class rates.

I suppose that the Postmaster-General is responsible for the acts of his subordinates. I suppose that he could not have been ignorant, in the administration of his office, of the action of the New York postmaster by which all this inconvenience and all this annoyance and all this loss have been caused; and silence on the part of the Postmaster-General and his allowance of the action of his subordinate—I suppose the New York postmaster is a subordinate—fully justify me in saying that he is responsible for this ruling.

But that is not all, Mr. President. A very good way to test the question whether the Postmaster-General was responsible for it or not was the method adopted by my constituents in New Haven, who sent us mail matter upon which the city postmaster here charged 31 cents per book in addition to the 11 cents, which was all, I believe, that could have been charged by law. That matter was brought directly, as I have stated, if not to the Postmaster-General himself, to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, and we have his written ruling upon the same. Now, it will not do to say that the Postmaster-General can excuse himself in this matter by hiding behind his subordinates.

Mr. SABIN. I wish to offer——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a resolution before the Senate. What action does the Senator from Connecticut desire upon it?

Mr. PLATT. I desire to have the resolution pass, that the committee may inquire into it.

The resolution was agreed to.

COLLECTIONS OF LIQUOR TAXES.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the Senate the amount of revenue collected by the Government under the provisions of the internal-revenue law and the amendments thereto for each year from its original enactment to the present time, from special taxes on distillers, brewers, and all manufactures of spirituous, malt, or fermented liquors; the number of persons from whom collected in each year; the quantities of said several kinds of liquor manufactured in each year, and the amount of tax collected on each of said kinds of liquor in each year.

JOHN G. MERRITT.

Mr. SABIN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint John G. Merritt, a disabled soldier and faithful officer of the Senate, a messenger, acting assistant doorkeeper, until further orders of the Senate, and that his salary be paid out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PERMISSIBLE MARKS ON MAIL MATTER.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 3318, Order of Business 66. It will occupy but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888," and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a bill pending now that ought to be acted upon one way or the other.

Mr. SAWYER. This is a very short bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will it cause debate?

Mr. SAWYER. There is no objection to it. It is a unanimous report. There will be no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

It provides that mailable matter of the second class shall contain no writing, print, or sign thereon or therein in addition to the original print, except the name and address of the person to whom the matter shall be sent, index figures of subscription book, either printed or written, the printed title of the publication and the place of its publication, the printed or written name and address without addition of advertisement of the publisher or sender, or both, and written or printed words or figures, or both, indicating the date on which the subscription to such matter will end, the correction of any typographical error, a mark, except by written or printed words, to designate a word or passage to which it is desired to call attention; the words "sample copy" when the matter is sent as such, the words "marked copy" when the matter contains a marked item or article, and publishers or news agents may inclose in their publications, bills, receipts, and orders for subscription thereto, but the same shall be in such form as to convey no other information than the name, place of publication, subscription price of the publication to which they refer, and the subscription due thereon.

Upon matter of the third class or upon the wrapper or envelope inclosing the same, or the tag or label attached thereto, the sender may write his own name, occupation, and residence or business address, preceded by the word "from," and may make marks other than by written or printed words to call attention to any word or passage in the text, and may correct any typographical errors. There may be placed upon the blank leaves or cover of any book or printed matter of the third class a simple manuscript dedication or inscription not of the nature of a personal correspondence. Upon the wrapper or envelope of third-class matter, or the tag or label attached thereto, may be printed any matter mailable as third class, but there must be left on the address side a space sufficient for a legible address and necessary stamps. With a package of fourth-class matter prepaid at the proper rate for that class the sender may inclose any mailable third-class matter, and may write upon the wrapper or cover thereof, or tag or label accompanying the same, his name, occupation, residence, or business address, preceded by the word "from," and any marks, numbers, names, or letters for purpose of description, or may print thereon the same, and any printed matter not in the nature of a personal correspondence, but there must be left on the address side or face of the package a space sufficient for a legible address and necessary stamps. In all cases directions for transit, delivery, forwarding, or return shall be deemed part of the address; and the Postmaster-General shall prescribe suitable regulations for carrying this section into effect.

The bill also provides that matter of the second, third, or fourth class containing any writing or printing in addition to the original matter other than as authorized in the preceding section shall not be admitted to the mails, nor delivered, except upon payment of postage for matter of the first class, deducting therefrom any amount which may have been prepaid by stamps affixed, unless by direction of the Postmaster-General such postage shall be remitted; and any person who shall knowingly conceal or inclose any matter of a higher class in that of a lower class, and deposit or cause the same to be deposited for conveyance by mail, at a less rate than would be charged for both such higher and lower class matter, shall for every such offense be liable to a penalty of $10.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITY OF COLORADO SPRINGS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to call up Senate bill 426, Order of Business 33, which is a local bill, and is of importance. It will not lead to any discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 426) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described, for water reservoirs.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. That if the city of Colorado Springs shall at any time after the construction of reservoirs on the land described in section 1 of this act, abandon the same or cease to use the same for water storage, the land herein described shall revert to the Government of the United States. The survey of the lands so granted shall be made under the direction and approval of the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, his secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 3d day of March last an act was passed authorizing the appointment of three commissioners who should investigate the affairs of such railroads as have received aid from the United States Government. Among other things, the contemplated investigation included a history of the construction of these roads, their relations and indebtedness to the Government, and the question whether, in the interest of the United States, any extension of the time for the performance of the obligations of said roads to the Government should be granted; and if so, the said commissioners were directed to submit a scheme for such extension.

The commissioners were further directed by said act to report in full to the President upon all the matters submitted to them, and he was by said act required to forward said report to Congress, with such recommendations or comments as he should see fit to make in the premises.

The commissioners, immediately after their selection, entered upon the discharge of their duties, and have prosecuted their inquiries with commendable industry, intelligence, and thoroughness. A large amount of testimony has been taken, and all the facts have been developed which appear to be necessary for the consideration of the questions arising from the condition of these aided railroads and their relations to the Government.

The commissioners have, however, been unable to agree upon the manner in which these railroads should be treated respecting their indebtedness to the United States, or to unite upon the plan best calculated to secure the payment of such indebtedness.

This disagreement has resulted in the preparation of two reports, both of which are herewith submitted to the Congress.

These reports exhibit such transactions and schemes connected with the construction of the aided roads and their management, and suggest the invention of such devices on the part of those having them in charge for the apparent purpose of defeating any chance for the Government's reimbursement, that any adjustment or plan of settlement should be predicated upon the substantial interests of the Government rather than any forbearance or generosity deserved by the companies.

The wide publication which has already been given to the substance of the commissioners' reports obviates the necessity of detailing in this communication the facts found upon the investigation.

The majority report, while condemning the methods adopted by those who formerly had charge of the Union Pacific Railroad, declares that since its present management was inaugurated in 1884, its affairs have been fairly and prudently conducted, and that the present administration "has devoted itself honestly and intelligently to the herculean task of rescuing the Union Pacific Railway from the insolvency which seriously threatened it at the inception of its work; that it has devoted itself by rigid economy, by intelligent management, and by an application of every dollar of the earning capacity of the system to its improvement and betterment, to place that company on a sound and enduring financial foundation."

The condition of the present management of the Union Pacific Company has an important bearing upon its ability to comply with the terms of any settlement of its indebtedness which may be offered by the Government.

The majority of the commission are in favor of an extension of the time for the payment of the Government indebtedness of these companies, upon certain conditions. But the chairman of the commission, presenting the minority report, recommends, both upon principle and policy, the institution of proceedings for the forfeiture of the charters of the corporations, and the winding up of their affairs.

I have been furnished with a statement, or argument, in defense of the transactions connected with the construction of the Central Pacific road and its branch lines, from which it may not be amiss to quote, for the purpose of showing how some of the operations of the directors of such road, strongly condemned by the commissioners, are defended by the directors themselves. After speaking of a contract for the construction of one of these branch lines by a corporation, called the Contract and Finance Company, owned by certain directors of the Central Pacific Railroad, this language is used:

"It may be said of this contract as of many others that were let to the different construction companies in which the directors of the Central Pacific have been stockholders, that they built the road with the moneys furnished by themselves and had the road for their outlay. In other words, they paid to the construction company the bonds and stock of the railroad so constructed and waited until such time as they could develop sufficient business on the road built to induce the public to buy the bonds or the stock. If the country through which the railroad ran developed sufficient business, then the project was a success; if it did not, then the operation was a loss. These gentlemen took all the responsibility; any loss occurring was necessarily theirs, and of right the profit belonged to them.

"But it is said that they violated a well-known rule of equity in dealing with themselves; that they were trustees and that they were representing both sides of the contract.

"The answer is that they did not find anybody else to deal with. They could not find any one who would take the chances of building a road through what was then an almost uninhabited country and accept the bonds and stock of the road in payment. And when it is said that they were trustees, if they did occupy such relation it was merely technical, for they represented only their own interests on both sides, there being no one else concerned in the transaction. They became the incorporators of the company that was to build the road, subscribed for its stock, and were the only subscribers. Therefore it is difficult to see how any one was wronged by their action. The rule of equity invoked, which has its origin in the injunction, no man can serve two masters, certainly did not apply to them, because they were acting in their own interests and were not charged with the duty of caring for others' rights, there being no other persons interested in the subject-matter."

In view of this statement and the facts developed in the commissioners' reports, it seems proper to recall the grants and benefits derived from the General Government by both the Union and Central Pacific Companies for the purpose of aiding the construction of their roads.

By an act passed in 1862 it was provided that there should be advanced to said companies by the United States to aid in such construction the bonds of the Government amounting to $16,000 for every mile constructed, as often as a section of 40 miles of said roads should be built; that there should also be granted to said companies upon the completion of every said section of 40 miles of road five entire sections of public land for each mile so built; that the entire charges earned by said roads on account of transportation and service for the Government should be applied to the reimbursement of the bonds advanced by the United States and the interest thereon, and that to secure the repayment of the bonds so advanced, and interest, the issue and delivery to said companies of said bonds should constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of their roads, and on their rolling stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description.

The liberal donations, advances, and privileges provided for in this law were granted by the General Government for the purpose of securing the construction of these roads, which would complete the connection between our eastern and western coasts; and they were based upon a consideration of the public benefits which would accrue to the entire country from such construction.

But the projectors of these roads were not content, and the sentiment which then seemed to pervade the Congress had not reached the limit of its generosity. Two years after the passage of this law it was supplemented and amended in various important particulars in favor of these companies by an act which provided, among other things, that the bonds, at the rate already specified, should be delivered upon the completion of sections of 20 miles in length instead of 40; that the lands to be conveyed to said companies on the completion of each section of said road should be ten sections per mile instead of five; that only half of the charges for transportation and service due from time to time from the United States should be retained and applied to the advances made to said companies by the Government, thus obliging immediate payment to its debtor of the other half of said charges, and that the lien of the United States to secure the reimbursement of the amount advanced to said companies in bonds, which lien was declared by the law of 1862 to constitute a first mortgage upon all the property of said companies, should become a junior lien, and be subordinated to a mortgage, which the companies were, by the amendatory act, authorized to execute to secure bonds which they might from time to time issue in sums not exceeding the amount of the United States bonds which should be advanced to them.

The immense advantages to the companies of this amendatory act are apparent; and in these days we may well wonder that even the anticipated public importance of the construction of these roads, induced what must now appear to be a rather reckless and unguarded appropriation of the public funds and the public domain.

Under the operation of these laws the principal of the bonds which have been advanced is $64,623,512 as given in the reports of the commissioners; the interest to November 1, 1887, is calculated to be $76,024,206.58, making an aggregate at the date named of $140,047,718.58. The interest calculated to the maturity of the bonds added to the principal produces an aggregate of $178,884,759.50. Against these amounts there has been repaid by the companies the sum of $30,955,089.61.

It is almost needless to state that the companies have availed themselves to the utmost extent of the permission given them to issue their bonds and to mortgage their property to secure the payment of the same, by an incumbrance having preference of the Government's lien and precisely equal to it in amount.

It will be seen that there was available for the building of each mile of these roads sixteen thousand dollars of United States bonds due in thirty years with six per cent. interest, sixteen thousand dollars in bonds of the companies secured by a first mortgage on all their property, and ten sections of Government land—to say nothing of the stock of the companies.

When the relations created between the Government and these companies by the legislation referred to are considered, it is astonishing that the claim should be made that the directors of these roads owed no duty except to themselves in their construction, that they need regard no interests but their own, and that they were justified in contracting with themselves and making such bargains as resulted in conveying to their pockets all the assets of the companies. As a lienor, the Government was vitally interested in the amount of the mortgage to which its security had been subordinated; and it had the right to insist that none of the bonds secured by this prior mortgage should be issued fraudulently or for the purpose of division among these stockholders without consideration.

The doctrine of complete independence on the part of the directors of these companies, and their freedom from any obligation to care for other interests than their own in the construction of these roads seems to have developed the natural consequences of its application, portrayed as follows in the majority report of the commissioners:

"The result is that those who have controlled and directed the construction and development of these companies have become possessed of their surplus assets through issues of bonds, stocks, and payment of dividends, voted by themselves, while the great creditor, the United States, finds itself substantially without adequate security for the repayment of its loans."

The laws enacted in aid of these roads, while they illustrated a profuse liberality and a generous surrender of the Government's advantages, which it is hoped experience has corrected, were nevertheless passed upon the theory that the roads should be constructed according to the common rules of business, fairness, and duty, and that their value and their ability to pay their debts should not be impaired by unfair manipulations; and when the Government subordinated its lien to another it was in the expectation that the prior lien would represent in its amount only such bonds as should be necessarily issued by the companies for the construction of their roads at fair prices, agreed upon in an honest way, between real and substantial parties. For the purpose of saving or improving the security afforded by its junior lien the Government should have the right now to purge this paramount lien of all that is fraudulent, fictitious, or unconscionable. If the transfer to innocent hands of bonds of this character secured by such first mortgage prevents their cancellation, it might be well to seek a remedy against those who issued and transferred them. If legislation is needed to secure such a remedy the Congress can readily supply it.

I desire to call attention also to the fact that if all that was to be done on the part of the Government to fully vest in these companies the grants and advantages contemplated by the acts passed in their interest has not yet been perfected, and if the failure of such companies to perform in good faith their part of the contract justifies such a course, the power rests with the Congress to withhold further performance on the part of the Government. If donated lands are not yet granted to these companies, and if their violations of contract and of duty are such as, in justice and morals, forfeit their rights to such lands, Congressional action should intervene to prevent further consummation. Executive power must be exercised according to existing laws, and executive discretion is probably not broad enough to reach such difficulties.

The California and Oregon Railroad is now a part of the Central Pacific system, and is a land-grant road. Its construction has been carried on with the same features and incidents which have characterized the other constructions of this system, as is made apparent on pages 78, 79, and 80 of the report of the majority of the commissioners. I have in my hands for approval the report of the commissioners appointed to examine two completed sections of this road. Upon such approval the company, or the Central Pacific Company, will be entitled to patents for a large quantity of public lands. I especially commend to the attention of Congress this condition of affairs, in order that it may determine whether or not it should intervene to save these lands for settlers, if such a course is justifiable.

It is quite time that the troublesome complications surrounding this entire subject, which has been transmitted to us as a legacy from former days, should be adjusted and settled.

No one, I think, expects that these railroad companies will be able to pay their immense indebtedness to the Government at its maturity.

Any proceeding or arrangement that would result now, or at any other time, in putting these roads or any portion of them in the possession and control of the Government, is, in my opinion, to be rejected—certainly as long as there is the least chance for indemnification through any other means.

I suppose we are hardly justified in indulging the irritation and indignation naturally arising from a contemplation of malfeasance, to such an extent as to lead to the useless destruction of these roads, or the loss of the advances made by the Government. I believe that our efforts should be in a more practical direction, and should tend, with no condonation of wrong-doing, to the collection by the Government, on behalf of the people, of the public money now in jeopardy.

While the plan presented by a majority of the commission appears to be well devised and gives at least partial promise of the results sought, the fact will not escape attention that its success depends upon its acceptance by the companies, and their ability to perform its conditions after acceptance. It is exceedingly important that any adjustment now made should be final and effective. These considerations suggest the possibility that the remedy proposed in the majority report might well be applied to a part only of these aided railroad companies.

The settlement and determination of the questions involved are peculiarly within the province of the Congress; the subject has been made quite a familiar one by Congressional discussion; this is now supplemented in a valuable manner by the facts presented in the reports herewith submitted.

The public interest urges prompt and efficient action.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 17, 1888.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the message, with the accompanying reports, be committed to a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the message of the President, with the accompanying reports of the commissioners, be referred to a special committee of five, to be appointed by the Chair. Is the Senate ready for the question?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order. I hope to have a vote on the bill which is the regular order before we go to the unfinished business.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to make a motion in regard to the printing of the message and accompanying matter. I understand that the two reports of the commissioners are already in type at the Government Printing Office, and that nine volumes of testimony have also been printed by the commission out of the fund allotted to it; so that the expense of printing the usual number of this communication and of the accompanying documents will not be a great deal. At this time, however, I move that the message of the President and the two reports, the majority and minority reports, be printed in the usual number, and that the question of the printing of the accompanying testimony and any additional copies be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. GORMAN subsequently said: I submit a motion to reconsider the vote by which the message of the President and the accompanying papers in relation to the Pacific railroads was referred to a special committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

DISTRIBUTION OF LAND PROCEEDS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate what sums, if any, were paid to the States and Territories named in chapter 16 of the laws of the first session of the Twenty-seventh Congress, approved September 4, 1841, as 10 per centum of the sales of public lands, and also the amounts so paid by reason of the distribution of the net proceeds of the public lands provided for in said law.

KANSAS RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is, directed to furnish to the Senate, as soon as practicable, information as to proceedings, etc., under the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1863 (12 Stat., 772), and July 26, 1866 (14 Stat., 289), making grants of lands to the State of Kansas in aid of railroad companies therein named, as follows, to wit:

1. Copies of General Land Office letters withdrawing lands from market; the date when received at local land office, and whether, after such letters were so received, the officers of the proper local land office permitted settlers to file declaratory statements, pay fees, or do any other official act as to any lands so withdrawn to perfect title to any land under the homestead, pre-emption, and other laws.

2. Copies of the maps of definite location of each of the roads mentioned in said acts, and when filed, with copies of the lines of constructed roads, all on one map showing the sections, towns, and ranges of land, with the lines of granted and indemnity limits of each of said roads, and showing the location of rivers and points on said roads mentioned in said act; the line of road in Kansas which runs from Hannibal, Mo., through Parsons, in Kansas, to the southern line of said State, and thence into the Indian Territory; the line of road constructed by the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company and its successors under the acts of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 489, secs. 3-9, etc.), and July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 358, secs. 4-12, etc.), with lines of its granted and indemnity limits.

3. The location on said map of the Osage ceded lands under the treaty concluded June 2, 1825 (7 Stat., 240).

4. The location of the New York Indian reservation under treaty of January 15, 1838 (7 Stat., 550), with copy of the President's proclamation of August 21, 1860, in relation to lands therein, what, if anything, was done under said treaty and proclamation, and copy of the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior of October 31, 1857, as to the status of lands in said reservation.

5. Copies of the certificates of the completion of all the sections of said road under said act of 1866, of all the sections of the road first mentioned in said act of 1863, and of the sections of the second mentioned road in said act so far as they cross the granted and indemnity limits of the other two roads.

6. Copies of patents issued, and of all lists of selections of indemnity lands, with dates of approval under said act of 1866.

7. Whether the road first mentioned in said act of 1863, or any branch thereof, was ever completed, and any decision in the Interior Department as to the right of indemnity lands for said road.

8. A list of even sections of land selected as indemnity in favor of the road mentioned in said act of 1866, which lie within the granted limits of the road first mentioned in said act of 1863, and a similar list of the even sections within the overlapping indemnity limits of said two roads.

9. Similar lists of the odd sections so selected.

10. A statement of the number of acres of lands patented, and also of lands selected as indemnity under said act of 1866 and yet held by the railway company named therein, its successors or grantees.

11. The length of the road constructed under said act, the length of that portion of it from its northern terminus to the point (Emporia) where it crosses the second mentioned road in said act of 1863, the distance from that point by way of the line of road constructed under said act of 1866 to the following-named points on said road, to wit: to the north boundary of the Osage ceded lands to the point (Chanute) where said road crosses the road first mentioned in said act of 1863, to the point (Parsons) where said road reaches and connects with said road running westward from Hannibal, and to the south line of the State of Kansas.

12. Copies of the evidence of the completion of said road made under said acts of 1862 and 1864 so far as said road is within the granted and indemnity limits of said act of 1866.

13. The date when the line of definite location of said road was filed through such limits.

14. State whether said company or its successors named in the acts of 1862 and 1864 and the second company named in the act of 1863 each earned or received the lands granted in their favor respectively within their respective granted limits, so far as they are in the overlapping granted or indemnity limits of the road made under the act of 1866, and before any right to such lands could have attached under said last-named act.

15. A list of homestead and pre-emption entries of lands in Allen County, Kansas, subsisting July 26, 1866, within the granted limits of the road mentioned in the act of that date, canceled since that date, with the disposition made of such lands, and a similar list and statement as to lands within the indemnity limits of said road.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HEARST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 58) in relation to Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 555) to establish an additional land district in the State of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the report of the members of the Board of Visitors to the West Point Military Academy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PUGH in the chair). The report will be received. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to have the report read?

Mr. DOLPH. No, it is too long to be read. It is already stereotyped. I suppose it will be printed under the general order, and I offer a resolution to print an additional number, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That 2,500 additional copies of the annual report of Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy for the year 1887 be printed and bound in paper covers, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for the use of the Senate members of that board.

RAILROAD BRIDGE IN ARKANSAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to take up Order of Business 55, being Senate bill 322, to authorize a railroad to bridge a small stream in my State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection, as it is manifest now that we can not get a vote on the direct-tax bill before 2 o'clock. I will therefore let it stand over.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 322) to authorize the Southwest Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad to build a bridge across the Ouachita River, in Arkansas.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in section 1, line 3, before the word "Arkansas," to strike out "South" and insert "Southwestern;" and after the word "Railroad," at the end of line 3, to insert "Company;" so as to read:

That the Southwestern Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of Arkansas, be, and is hereby, authorized to erect and maintain a bridge across the Ouachita River, in township 10 south, range 17 west, or at such point near said township as has been selected by said railroad company for crossing said river with their railroad line, the said bridge to be of such height as not to interfere with the navigation of said river.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The title should be amended to correspond.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will come up subsequently.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FRYE. Was there not one other amendment?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. An amendment of the title; that is all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the bill wants a little more amendment. I wish the Secretary would read the last clause, beginning "That Congress shall have power to alter, amend," etc.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time; and that if at any time navigation of the said river shall in any manner be obstructed or impaired by the said bridge, the Secretary of War shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, to require the said railroad company to alter and change the said bridge, at its own expense, in such manner as may be proper to secure free and complete navigation without impediment; and if upon reasonable notice to said railroad company to make such changes or improvements the said company fails to do so, the Secretary of War shall have authority to make the same at the expense of the company, and all the rights conferred by this act shall be forfeited; and Congress shall have power to do any and all things necessary to secure the free navigation of the said river.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the Senator in charge of that bill to consent that it be laid aside informally until the bridge bill is disposed of. I think it will require but a moment or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAIR. I have not observed the pending bill, but the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] is ready to go on.

Mr. BOWEN. I have no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If it takes more than a minute or two I will not insist.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be informally laid aside for the continuation of the consideration of Senate bill 322.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend section 3, in line 3, by adding, after the word "be," these words: "in the opinion of the Secretary of War;" so as to read, "and that if at any time the navigation of the said river shall be, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, in any manner obstructed or impaired," etc., so as to leave the Secretary of War the same control of the navigation of the river that he has now, and that his opinion as to the obstruction of it by this bridge which we authorize shall govern. I presume that was intended, but it does not seem to read so.

Mr. FRYE. It was intended, and is usual, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 3, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert "in the opinion of the Secretary of War be."

Mr. EDMUNDS. The first "be" should be left out.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The word "be" where it occurs before "obstructed" should be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 12 of the same section I move to amend by giving the Secretary of War the alternative authority. If we require this company to make the changes necessary to preserve the navigation and they fail to do it, we should give him authority not merely to make changes at their expense and collect the money if he can, but give him authority as an administrative act to remove the obstruction. Therefore I move to amend, after the word "company," in line 12, by inserting "or to remove said bridge;" so as to read:

The Secretary of War shall have authority to make the same at the expense of said company, or to remove said bridge, etc.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Southwestern Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Ouachita River, in Arkansas."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 81) to authorize the purchase of the lands necessary for the construction of locks and dams on the Cumberland River; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BOWEN. Mr. President, my remarks will be brief. This bill has been considered so often that I deem it unnecessary to go into its details, which are perfectly understood by all. There is but little opposition to the bill save on constitutional grounds; the strict constructionists adhering now, as they always have, to the proposition that Congress is limited to the exercise of the enumerated powers, and denying to the "general-welfare" clause any scope save in connection with the powers specifically enumerated.

Such a construction of the Constitution as will best secure the principal purposes of its adoption is regarded by those favoring a more liberal construction as the only proper one, and no iron-clad construction tending to defeat these purposes should prevail.

The perpetuity of the Government created by this Constitution is the matter of paramount importance, and no one thing can more conduce to that end than the intelligence of the masses, and a common-school education is the very foundation stone—the chief of the corner—of such intelligence.

There is no practical difference, so far as results go, between the destruction of our institutions by force of arms and the more subtle process of simply permitting their destruction by failure to promote and encourage whatever conduces to their strength and perpetuity. The Treasury is overflowing with money, but I would not for that reason advocate the passage of this or any other bill. The surplus is a question to be considered in connection with the general financial and monetary policy of the Government. Still, the fact that we are in condition to make and pay the large appropriations contemplated by this bill removes one objection which would exist if the Treasury was empty. But, sir, the intent and purposes of this bill are higher and broader than the mere question of the disbursement of our surplus moneys. It reaches deeper than that, and aims at the general diffusion of knowledge, without which civil and religious liberty and all the manifold blessings of free government can not be permanently maintained. Such diffusion can only be hoped for through the medium of the elementary education which this bill places within the reach of all. The States, as a rule, have done much in this direction; but we propose to do more by this additional appropriation, and that, too, without in any way interfering with the local authorities, provision only being made to insure the faithful application of the fund for the purposes intended.

I listened with great attention to the very able and somewhat remarkable speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. But for his positive disclaimer one would presume him to be opposed to the cause of popular education. His array of statistics I do not propose to analyze. The burden of his argument was thrown into an attempt to prove that the per cent. of crime was smallest where the per cent. of illiteracy was greatest, and as I understood him he took the number of arrests as the basis of the amount of crime, and thus gave to his position an air of great plausibility. The simple answer to all this is that the number of arrests do not at all represent the amount of real crime.

In some communities, for instance, very trifling matters subject people to arrest, as mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]; such as smoking in the streets of Boston. I will not, however, dwell on this point, in view of the Senator's disclaimer of opposition to the cause of education, but before leaving the point will observe that, even though it may be true, as the Senator contends, that crime and illiteracy do not proportionately go hand in hand together, that that is not the all-important consideration, because it pales before the more important one that knowledge enables the one citizen to understand his rights, and the other to respect them. We are confronted to-day with the fact that not only in some of the Southern States, but in dense populations in the North as well, fair and free elections have become a mere travesty.

A government professedly based upon universal suffrage becomes under such circumstances a national lie; and what are we going to do about it? We are required to guaranty to each State a republican form of government. We have the form, but what about the substance?

There is no peaceful solution of this problem save that which is afforded by a more general education of the people and the higher state of civilization which will follow.

The constitutional objections to this bill, which we are bound to presume from all that is said here are the principal ones, are the same which have been thrashed over and over again, like old straw, until the grain is not only all out, but the straw itself is in shreds. It is the extreme old State's rights doctrine which went down in the bitterness and terror of war; and yet, strange to say, still raises its head in opposition to the grand idea that this is a nation and not a mere confederation of States; an idea the establishment of which cost this Government countless treasure and the blood of a million soldiers, the flower of American youth.

The treasure has, thanks to the inexhaustible resources and rapid development of the country, been restored, but the other loss can never, alas! be replaced.

Shall the little sodden mounds scattered all over this fair land, marking the last resting places of these gallant men, stand as monuments of the firm establishment of an indivisible nation, or shall they be pointed out as emblems of lives sacrificed for a cause seemingly successful when determined by the arbitrament of the sword, but bearing no fruition when tested in the field of statesmanship and diplomacy?

Sir, the law of self-preservation applies with equal force to nations as to individuals. This nation vindicated its stability on the field of battle, and will not be shorn now by strained constructions of the Constitution which would leave us powerless to exist except by mere sufferance; a condition not far removed from anarchy; a condition incompatible with dignity; a condition furnishing but little hope of peace, prosperity, or permanency.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] consoles himself with the reflection that even should this bill receive the sanction of the two Houses of Congress that even then it may not become a law. His final hope rests with the "great man"—as he terms him—at the other end of the avenue.

This contains a covert threat—not very covert either—of an Executive veto. Well, let the veto come; and let it come for the reasons assigned by the Senator from Missouri, and it will be received by the people as the crowning scene in the last act of the great drama of retrogression, after which the curtain will soon fall and the play be withdrawn.

Mr. President, as a member of the committee which reported this bill in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, I gave it my hearty concurrence, and the more it is discussed the more I am impressed with its grandeur and wisdom. I have heretofore contented myself with simply voting for it, and even now had no purpose of doing more, and will say in conclusion that the few remarks I have just made represent only, so far as I know, my own views and sentiments. Others who support the bill do so for reasons of their own, and none stand committed to my utterances.

INSPECTION OF STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator from New Hampshire any objection to my calling up a bill which will only take two or three minutes?

Mr. BLAIR. If it is the pleasure of the Senate, the pending bill may be informally laid aside.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from New Hampshire consents that the pending bill may be laid aside informally for a moment while I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 447) to amend the laws relating to inspection of steam-vessels, which is very short and will take but a few minutes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 447) to amend the laws relating to inspection of steam-vessels.

It provides that on and after July 1, 1886, the fees of United States marshals and witnesses for services under the steamboat-inspection laws, the compensation of clerks to steam-boat inspectors, and all other expenses of steam-boat inspectors provided for in section 4461 of the Revised Statutes shall be paid for, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, instead of from funds heretofore collected from the inspection of steam-vessels and the licensing of officers of such vessels.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say that in the shipping bill passed in the last Congress there was a provision that all of these fees should be paid by the United States Treasury, and in the clause providing for that payment the fees referred to in this bill were omitted. The President signed the shipping bill, but sent back with it a special message in which he called the attention of Congress to that omission and asked that it might at once be remedied by supplementary legislation. I reported promptly a bill to the Senate from the Committee on Commerce, which was passed, sent to the other House, and reported by a House committee, but it could not be reached. So there can be no objection to this bill.

I move to amend in line 3 by striking out the printed words there "on and after July 1, 1886."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PUGH in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN MARRIAGES.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from New Hampshire has no one to occupy the floor, I ask him to indulge me a moment while I call up the bill (S. 928) in relation to marriage between white men and Indian women. It is Order of Business 31.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 3, after the word "man," to insert "not otherwise a member of any tribe of Indians," and in line 6, after the word "marriage," to insert the word "hereafter;" so as to make the section read:

That no white man, not otherwise a member of any tribe of Indians, who has married, or may hereafter marry, an Indian woman, member of any Indian tribe in the United States, or any of its Territories, shall, by such marriage, hereafter acquire any right to any tribal property, privilege, or interest whatever to which any member of such tribe is entitled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 6, after the word "woman," to strike out "in the State or Territory in which she may reside, and no longer a member of such tribe," and insert: "Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall impair or in any way affect the right or title of such married woman to any tribal property or any interest therein;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That every Indian woman, member of any such tribe of Indians, who has been or may hereafter be married to any citizen of the United States is hereby declared to become by such marriage a citizen of the United States, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of any such citizen, being a married woman: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall impair or in any way affect the right or title of such married woman to any tribal property or any interest therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. To come in on the sixth line of the first section, after the word "Territories," at the suggestion of the committee, I offer the following amendment: "except the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the section be read with that amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

That no white man, not otherwise a member of any tribe of Indians, who has married, or may hereafter marry, an Indian woman, member of any Indian tribe in the United States, or any of its Territories, except the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory, shall by such marriage hereafter acquire any right to any tribal property, privilege, or interest whatever to which any member of such tribe is entitled.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator, why except those tribes?

Mr. DAWES. The reason is that we have by treaty conceded to those tribes their entire autonomy, and therefore in this matter, which is so purely a domestic concern, it was not thought well, however desirable it may be at some time, to legislate for those tribes, and indirectly in this way to evade the treaty stipulations.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask permission to call up a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BLAIR. I think it proper to say that three or four gentlemen whose names are on the list to speak to-day are not ready to proceed, and as I do not wish time to be lost on the educational bill, I will take the floor myself.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I had not designed to say much on this bill in the course of the debate, and I now propose to occupy the time rather in placing facts before the Senate than in any discussion of the constitutional questions which are involved in it, and which have been dwelt upon mainly by those who have opposed the bill, but I think it is right to recall to the Senate something of the history of this measure.

It will be remembered by those who have been longest connected with service in the Senate and in the other House in recent years that the idea of national aid to education in some form has been before Congress and the country nearly all the time since the close of the war. In fact, the events of the war made the necessity of assistance to the cause of public education manifest. What then occurred impressed the whole country with the necessity of that assistance. It became apparent that such aid was actually indispensable, in the then condition of intelligence throughout the country, to its continued existence. Even during the war, in the efforts which were made for the sustenance and care and for initiatory steps towards the elevation of the colored race, education was a fundamental idea.

Soon after the close of the war, as is known to the country, charitable individuals and associations, the religious organizations of the land, the educational organizations, teachers and colleges and associations of that character throughout the country, pressed upon the public attention the necessity of active efforts in order to initiate the education and elevation of the colored race, and the necessity of even actual sacrifices in this direction, and so it came to pass that the missionary feeling, not alone in the line of religious education, but intellectual as well, came to be more powerfully aroused, excited, and directed towards the elevation of the ignorant mass of our countrymen than toward almost any other purpose whatever. That feeling, which had been so largely concentrated on foreign missions, was diverted and the attention of the country was directed to the elevation of the colored race, and not alone to the improvement of the colored race which had become free by the results of the war, but all through the country, to some extent in the North and throughout the South, the condition of the masses of the white people who had never had the advantages of a systematic course of instruction by a common-school education attracted the attention and the earnest sympathy of the entire country.

As the result of this feeling, entirely outside of municipal, State, and national effort, there has been expended since the conclusion of the war not less than twenty-five or thirty million dollars, the contributions of benevolent individuals or religious and educational institutions throughout the country. The most important contribution of any one, perhaps, was that known as the Peabody fund, and the gentlemen who were made trustees of that munificent appropriation for our fellow-citizens in the Southern States without regard to race or color—the gentlemen who were made trustees of that benefaction, consisting of some of the most eminent citizens of the country, very early directed the attention of Congress and the people to the necessity of a still more enlarged systematic and powerful effort than was within the scope of private enterprise and beneficence; and perhaps the earliest memorial—the earliest memorial certainly which was in the direction of the strong comprehensive effort contemplated in this bill—emanated from those gentlemen, the Chief-Justice of the United States, the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], the Hon. A. H. H. Stuart, of Virginia, and other names equally prominent in the history of the country, and which will be known for all time with honorable distinction.

These gentlemen were the authors of a memorial directed to the Congress of the United States in which the necessity of national aid to education was most vividly and powerfully portrayed, and I think that the idea of actual and substantial aid to the common-school education of the country received its first and most powerful impetus from that source.

The earliest bills that found their way into Congress on this subject proposed to establish a fund contemplating a prolonged assistance in the common-school education of the people. They did not propose, as does this bill, any immediate and tangible assistance of importance. A bill was introduced by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the earliest, I think, of any, in the House of Representatives, which proposed to set apart the proceeds of the sales of public lands, and also, in addition to the actual proceeds of sales of the public lands, the annual surplus income from the Patent Office, which Senators will bear in mind is an entirely different source of income from the sales of public lands, and from these two combined sources of income to make a perpetual fund, the interest of which fund should be appropriated annually to the cause of common-school education, and to be, if I recollect aright, distributed upon the basis of population, and various provisions were made as to the manner of its division. Some portions were to be appropriated to the benefit of the agricultural colleges, and perhaps there were other institutions to which definite proportions were to be applied; but the result was that the annual assistance to be derived by the individual child needing education at the present time was exceedingly slight, amounting to only a very few cents per capita throughout the United States. I think that in the earlier stages of the operation of the bill, if it had become a law, there would not have been more than 3 or 4 cents per child throughout the country, and of course the benefit would have been infinitesimal. The bill passed the Senate several times and with almost a unanimous vote. I recollect that on one occasion the vote in opposition was only some 5 or 6, and it embraced the names of nearly every Senator upon the Democratic side of the Chamber at that time.

The emergency, however, was so great from 1870 to 1880, as shown by the respective censuses of these two years and by the investigations of individuals whose reports came from all parts of the country—the emergency requiring additional aid and greater effort was such that the present bill in substance was devised and was introduced; and from the year 1881, so far as educational discussion is concerned, it has practically absorbed the attention of Congress.

The bill has been introduced in different forms and has received suggestions from various sections of the country, and everywhere so far as it was thought worth while to do anything on this subject, gentlemen interested in it have seen fit to introduce bills making direct and large appropriations, and in every instance, so far as I now recollect, with the proposition that the division of the funds should be made in such a way as that they might go to those portions of the country where the illiteracy was the greatest, and since 1880 the division has been universally proposed to be made on the basis of illiteracy as shown by the returns of the census of that year.

In support of this measure I desire to state a few facts as to the extent of the public expression of the country. In the first place have been the memorials of the trustees of the Peabody fund and the representations of the superintendent, Mr. Curry, and others as to the practical administration of that fund. The names of Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], of a former President of the United States, and many other eminent names connected with that great trust have been repeatedly before Congress recommending this or some measure tantamount to this in effect.

Nearly every religious organization of the country has at one time or another memorialized Congress to pass this, or substantially this, bill. The Methodist denomination, the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, nearly all the great religious denominations of the country have, at one time or another, expressed their emphatic approbation and their earnest desire that this bill, or a measure of this description, might become the law of the land.

The teachers' associations of the country, representing the number of three hundred thousand teachers professionally teaching throughout the country, who are embodied in various associations, have practically as one great body memorialized Congress time after time to pass this bill or something of this description. This very last year the Educational Association which met at Chicago, a convention of ten thousand teachers in actual numbers in attendance upon its sessions, passed strong resolutions urging the passage of this bill. One teachers' association, more largely located in New England and holding its session at Burlington, in the State of Vermont, also memorialized in the same direction. Most of these great associations appointed committees to urge the passage of this bill upon Congress. This is not their primary or original action by any means. It is simply a continuation of their earnest entreaty and their protest to the country that something of this kind should be passed as imperatively demanded by the public good. Their resolutions have been before Congress for some four, five, or six years in succession at every Congress in which this bill has been considered.

Innumerable petitions have come from various localities throughout the country, from great semi-political organizations, great organizations representing the industrial movement among the working people. Their petitions have been made known to Congress more than once, and to the present Congress as well as to former Congresses. The Knights of Labor have done this; the Federation of Labor have given expression to the same sentiments; and the great organization known in the country as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union repeatedly has done this, has done it at the present Congress, did it at the last Congress and in the Congress preceding. They were pressing and emphatic in urging, as they are in this Congress in the same way, the passage of the bill. That is an organization which represents 200,000 of the Christian women of this country, largely the Christian motherhood of this country, more influential in the various churches of this country than any other one element which exists among them. They look on this measure as important with reference to their own special work, for it is an institution having a broader basis than simply the promotion of the one cause of temperance, for they promote that cause by their action simply because it reaches out beyond the one great crime and evil which they assail, and has to do with the general development and elevation of the nation and of mankind, and in order to attain that result, they more than almost any other people in this country realize that common-school education is the salvation of this nation and of all nations.

So then, this bill, introducing where it does not already exist and rendering efficacious the institution of the common school wherever it is already partly planted and partly in operation—this bill, I say, giving to the whole country as it will be able to do, in connection with contributions and with support already available, the common-school system, establishing it firmly, so that it may maintain itself for all time by the vigor and support of the local community—this bill they realize to be the one indispensable national public measure to the support and enactment of which they should give their primary concern. And the common school once established, they see, too, that there will then be the means of presenting to the children of the country that instruction which they consider especially necessary with reference to the removal of the evil of intemperance; for of what use is it that this organization should succeed, as they have in half of the States of the country already, in securing the enactment of those laws which carry instruction in regard to the effects of alcoholic and other poisons on the system into the common schools periodically, when there are no common schools wherein the instruction is to be given, or when those schools are such that the instruction is inefficient by reason of the very short period of the year during which the schools are held? It is in these two views, first with a view to the general, and secondly with a view to their special work, the suppression of the evil of intemperance, that this great organization, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is actively exerting itself for the enactment of this bill into a law.

I might go on and consume the day in a specification of the various sources of petition, important petitions, petitions from all the great interests of the country, for the enactment of this bill into a law; but I can not thus consume the time of the Senate. I think it proper, however, to recall the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill has behind it the great forces of the nation, and that whoever places himself in opposition to this measure or something of this kind, in the general judgment of the American people, is hostile to the public good.

Our friends on the Democratic side of the Chamber complain that this bill is unconstitutional.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the Senator comes to that point I desire to call his attention for a moment. He was referring to great national forces in favor of the passage of this bill, and among others—not in his speech, but in his copyrighted pamphlet or report—I notice that he says that the Legislature of Tennessee passed resolutions favoring the passage of this bill. I simply desire to call his attention to the fact that that is a gross mistake. The Legislature of Tennessee has never passed any such resolutions.

Mr. BLAIR. It is possible there may be a mistake in regard to one State. I do not now recollect. If so, it was an inadvertence. There have been very strong expressions of sentiment of that kind, however, from citizens of the State of Tennessee. But the State of Louisiana has memorialized Congress, I think, twice, through her Legislature, and the State of Mississippi has memorialized Congress twice or three times in favor of this measure. The State of Alabama, if I do not labor under a mistake, has memorialized Congress twice, once certainly, and has passed a concurrent resolution indorsing this bill by the two houses of the Legislature. Perhaps not the same resolution was passed in each, but in the same Legislature a resolution was passed by both houses indorsing the bill. The State of Georgia has done the same through her Legislature, and so I think has Florida; if I am wrong the Senators from Florida can correct me. South Carolina has certainly done it; North Carolina has done it; Virginia has done it. Virginia has done it, if I recollect, both by Republican and Democratic Legislatures, and the Democratic party in its last political platform in the State of Virginia, if I am not misinformed, has indorsed this bill. I think, though I will not now undertake to say positively, two other Southern States have indorsed this bill by their Democratic Legislatures. Thus, so far as the Legislatures of those States can give expression to the general sentiment of the Southern people, they favor it, not alone as a measure calculated to work out the public good, but they indorse it as a constitutional measure. Thus the very authority which most of those Senators who oppose the bill represent, the people, have given utterance to expressions in favor of its constitutionality.

In the North several of the Legislatures, every Legislature so far as I have ever heard in which the matter has been discussed at all, has indorsed the bill. The Legislature of Ohio did it some three or four years ago. The Legislature of Pennsylvania did it this last spring, and the Legislature of New Hampshire as well during its recent session.

I say, then, that whoever controverts the constitutionality of this bill finds considerable of that constituent power which sends us all here, certainly in as many as ten or twelve of the States, and those mainly the States from which those Senators come who most vigorously oppose it on the ground of unconstitutionality—I say he finds that these appointive, these creative powers have indorsed the constitutionality of this measure, and that, without reference to its constitutionality, in giving utterance to the general sentiment of the masses of their people they have repeatedly by a large majority, especially of the people of the South, memorialized Congress for the passage of this bill and given it their vigorous indorsement.

I will take some of the time of the Senate in considering the question which seems to be raised as to the continued necessity of this temporary national support which it is proposed to give to the common schools by the provisions of this bill. It must be conceded that, if the census of 1880 is to be relied upon, the necessity for assistance to the common schools of the country does exist. But we are told that since the taking of that census there has been a general transformation, and that the necessity which once existed has passed away; that there is a sufficient degree of common-school education throughout the country now provided by the States, or if not the highest degree, the States are now making such progress in that direction, have already attained to such eminence in that direction, that the assistance of the National Government would be not only inopportune but would be actually injurious to the interests of the schools.

In the brief report which the committee has submitted at the present session, and for the drawing of which I am alone responsible, the ground is taken that on the whole illiteracy is increasing rather than diminishing in this country; that although here and there in isolated places, where business development is going on, where it may be there is an exceptional interest felt in the removal of the incubus of illiteracy, nevertheless, surveying the whole vast field, considering the condition of the sixty million people who make up this nation, illiteracy is increasing, and is not diminishing.

I do not know, but I believe myself that illiteracy is increasing as fast as, if not faster than, the population of the country. I mean in an equal proportion; but certainly—and in this I but express the opinion of the Bureau of Education—the positive amount of illiteracy in the country is to-day increasing, and is not diminishing, and in 1890 there will be more voters in this country, more of the coming generation, who can not read or write than there were in the year 1880. As I said before, I think this increasing illiteracy maintains its equal proportion of increase as compared with that of the population itself.

This illiteracy is not confined to the Southern States. I am not one of those Northern men or American citizens who are at all inclined to hold up their hands in holy horror and say, "These poor outcast States of the South! See how ignorant they are!" I admit that there is as much danger to-day to the institutions of this country from the illiteracy of the North as there is from the illiteracy of the South. The great cities of the North to-day are, in my belief, increasing in the dangers that grow out of ignorance and worse-resulting vice, misrule, and tendencies to anarchy, and there is as great danger in the large cities of the North to-day to the good of the whole country as results from the condition of the South.

True, in the rural districts in the North, in the country, if I may so express myself, in the smaller cities of the North, in the villages, in the wealthier rural districts, intelligence is undoubtedly increasing, and there is an antidote to a large extent to the conditions which we find in the cities; but nevertheless the cities are rather retrograding than improving. There is one peculiarity in regard to the situation of States in the North which does not exist at the South. There is no great Northern State that is not practically under the control of some great city, or it may be more than one great city within its limits. Look at Massachusetts, controlled by the city of Boston. Look at my own State, small in population, but right in the clutch of a single city, that where I reside, the city of Manchester. What is true of those States is more true still of the State of Rhode Island, a large mass of whose population is in a single city. The cities of Connecticut can control Connecticut; New York City and Brooklyn, New York State; Jersey City, the State of New Jersey, Cincinnati, Ohio; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Chicago, Illinois; St. Louis, Missouri; and San Francisco, California. These great States are all really controlled by the large cities I have named, and those cities are most rapidly increasing in population, and do not hold their own in those enlightened and conservative influences which are indispensable to the republican form of government.

I do not know how it may be, but a citizen of Chicago told me recently that there was a voting precinct in Chicago in which there was no school. I think there must be some error in regard to that; but in the city of Atlanta, which controls the State of Georgia, or is rapidly coming so to do, there are some voting precincts in which there is no school whatever, and within 5 or 6 miles of the city of Atlanta there are important polling precincts where there are from 300 to 500 voters with not a single school within their limits either for white or colored children. But I shall speak more of the actual condition of the school system in the South later on.

In the State of Massachusetts illiteracy is increasing to-day. That has been admitted on this floor and stated in discussions in the Legislature and elsewhere in the State of Massachusetts. It is owing very largely to the influx of foreign population, to be sure, but nevertheless the population is there. They are a portion of the American people; they are there to stay, and the dangers which result from ignorance threaten them, for such dangers do result, unless the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is right, that ignorance is, on the whole, the source of virtue and the real protection of the republican form of government. Unless that be true, the old commonwealth of Massachusetts, but for the vigorous and compulsory efforts which they are now taking to remove the increasing illiteracy, would be upon the downward grade as a republic.

In my own State, which has been criticised a little (I suppose, with the hope rather of reaching myself than of reaching the body of the State), I do not think that the condition of popular education is improving. We are doing what we can with it. A little later on I shall endeavor to show that we are not quite so badly off as some, both in the Senate and out of the Senate, would have us believe. In the State of New York, the recent report of the superintendent of education, Mr. Draper, shows that the actual condition of the common schools of the State is not improving; that the actual attendance is lessening rather than increasing. Not expecting to speak, I have not brought the document with me and I have it not here, but I desire at some time, before the debate is closed, to read what Mr. Draper says upon this all-important subject, as to the condition of common-school education in the great State of New York.

In regard to the State of Connecticut, I have here the message of the governor of that State, which I will read if it becomes necessary, in which he gives utterance to what should, I think, be looked upon as an alarming complaint of the actual condition of common-school education in large sections of that wealthy, that noble, that distinguished commonwealth.

But this bill seems to be considered mainly with reference to the condition of education in the States of the South. Undoubtedly, it originated from the circumstance that as a result of war, from the liberation of the colored people, from the general impoverishment of that section caused by the terrific strife through which we have passed, assistance from some source is necessary to enable those rising commonwealths to supply to the masses of their people, to the children who are to be the commonwealths of the future, the indispensable general intelligence necessary to the new order of things.

It has been claimed on this floor that since 1880 there has been a general improvement in the condition of the South to such an extent that national assistance is no longer necessary. It is not possible to obtain that fullness and accuracy of statistical detail, in the absence of the efforts of the General Government, which is desirable as the basis of an argument, but I have something on that point from the recent report of the Commissioner of Education, and I will perhaps later on in my remarks say something of the present statistical delineation of the Southern condition. But, as we all know, the observation of intelligent gentlemen upon the condition of things in their own vicinity touching a subject in which they have great interest to be right is as reliable a source of data upon which to base a safe opinion as almost any that we can appeal to. I have therefore taken pains to obtain from prominent citizens of most of the Southern States recent expressions and statements of fact as to the actual condition of the schools in their midst.

At the opening of the debate, after the reading of the report, I read to the Senate a statement of the son of General Albert Sidney Johnston, president of Tulane University, in the State of Louisiana. I suppose him to be as competent an educational authority as any gentleman who lives in the country, and he is probably the most competent man who could be named to state with regard to the condition of education in the South generally, and specifically with regard to its condition in his own State. All of us would have known it, perhaps, but I have been informed by the Senators from Louisiana that this gentleman is entitled to as high an indorsement in this regard as can possibly be given. Having once read his statement, I would simply recall the attention of the Senate to its contents, without troubling them with any part of it, though at the time it was read the Senate was so thin that if the Senate were here generally at this time I should read it again, in order that its contents might be better known. But I can only trust that those interested in this subject will be at the pains to read this and other statements in the RECORD.

I have received from the State of Louisiana a further communication from the Hon. William O. Rogers, recently the superintendent of public schools in New Orleans. This gentleman is distinguished among the educators of the South, and I do not know that I could appeal, with the exception of the gentleman whom I have previously named, to any higher authority on this subject in that part of the country. He says in his letter addressed to myself, dated New Orleans, January 2, 1887:

MY DEAR SIR: Delay in answering your favor of the 19th instant has not resulted from a lack of interest in the subject, but from other causes beyond my control.

It would be easy to pile up figures of school attendance, enrollment, population, etc., in order to show the present necessity for national aid to education. I am satisfied in my own mind that the conclusions of such statistics would not materially differ from those which have already been so fully presented in the debates of Congress, as well as in many public utterances of State Legislatures, educational conventions, school men, etc. I have examined a number of reports of city, parish or county, and State superintendents of public education, and have carefully read much that has been written upon the school question in many city and country newspapers, and have come to the conclusion that national aid is as much a necessity now as at any former period; and that it was necessary two, five, ten years ago has been, in the estimation of a great many persons, as clearly shown as it has been possible to show any want or condition of the country. I do not say that there has been no improvement in the number, condition, and work of public schools since 1880. Education, public and private, has responded to the development of the whole country, the Southern States not excepted, in many of the particulars which constitute the wealth of a great people. There is a larger attendance in schools, more school-houses, more money expended upon education than heretofore. The increase, however, has not been proportionate to improvement in other branches of public service. In the distribution of enhanced revenues, it does not appear that public education has received an increased support commensurate with its wants, or proportionate to the encouragement extended to other branches of public interests. In the rapid growth of towns and sections, based upon the development of mineral products or the opening of new manufacturing and agricultural industries, population has been gathered in haste, and all available means have been required to furnish accommodation, erect public and private buildings, including a few school-houses, lay out streets, and establish municipal order and security. In rural districts the population has found an increasing struggle, needed to meet the difficulties of competitive prices and disturbed labor. There is no evidence, so far as I know, to show a gain upon the illiteracy of the country, such as would result from an increase of those who can read and write and a corresponding decrease in the number of those who can neither read nor write.

The city of New Orleans fairly represents what is done in other cities of the South in the way of education. We have better schools for those who can pay for instruction, with a moderate increase in the attendance. There has been a very decided increase in the number of pupils attending the public schools, but the sessions have not been lengthened, but rather shortened, and the aggregate sum disbursed is actually less.

I should say here, perhaps, that the schools in that State have never averaged three months in the year, and every one can see that a child would forget in nine months, possibly, more than he can learn in three.

Teachers have more work to do, receive less pay for it, and have fewer facilities for the accomplishment of their work than formerly.

I ask attention to this statement, that teachers have more work to do, receive less pay for it, and have fewer facilities for the accomplishment of their work than formerly. The teacher, of course, is the essential element in the school. Then Mr. Rogers proceeds:

The city school board, in a report to the city government, under date of December 13, 1887, says:

"Our schools are now crowded, the number on roll being 18,341. The pressure upon the primary departments is excessive. Sixty of the rooms contain over sixty pupils each, five contain over one hundred each, and numerous applicants for admission have necessarily been refused for lack of school accommodation. Seven more schools and twenty-seven more teachers are needed to relieve existing pressure, and still more will be needed to encourage the healthful expansion of our schools.

"We believe it is well known to all intelligent citizens of New Orleans that our public schools have received inadequate support; that our school-houses are insufficient in number and size; that many of them are unattractive, dilapidated, and even, in some cases, unsafe. It is well known also that our able and faithful teachers are poorly and irregularly paid. It is too generally believed that this state of affairs is the natural and inevitable result of the poverty of our city. It is true that our city is heavily burdened, and the necessity of economy is obvious, but we claim that the education of our children is of paramount importance, and that no American city can enjoy permanent prosperity without a well-sustained system of public schools.

"To carry on the schools during the present year we have been compelled to deprive our teachers of their vacation salary; to overcrowd our rooms and overwork our teachers; to herd our children in buildings badly furnished, dilapidated, and insufficient. * * * If our schools do not receive a much larger appropriation for next year it will be impossible for them to continue even upon the present parsimonious basis.

"The city appropriated $171,000 for the support of the schools during 1887. About $35,000 was received from all sources, making a total of $206,000. The school board makes a careful estimate of its requirements, showing that the sum of $357,852 is needed for the proper support of the schools during the coming year. There will be little or no increase, however, over the revenue of 1887 for 1888, it being claimed that the amount appropriated is all that the city can apply to education and meet its obligations in other directions."

A lack of over $150,000 of the $357,000 needed in that one city.

"Of the entire attendance in the city public schools, about 20 per cent. are colored children. In several of the schools the teachers are all colored, and perform their work with great satisfaction. The colored schools receive a proportionate part of the public funds, have good school-houses, and share and share alike in all the facilities of school instruction."

The following is from the report of City Superintendent Bettison, January, 1886:

"According to the census of 1880, the number of children in New Orleans from six to eighteen years of age was 61,450."

From six to eighteen years of age, Senators will observe, the period during which most common-school education must be received.

"Allowing 10 per cent. for increase of population, there would now be 67,595 children between six and eighteen, the legal school age in our State. If the following estimate is correct, or nearly so, it shows that our schools could easily expand under proper support so as to include 50 per cent. more than their present number:

|---|---|
| Number of children in public schools | 24,332 |
| Number of children in private schools | 16,399 |
| Number of children in stores, offices, etc | 12,000 |
| Number of children at home or on the streets | 14,864 |
| Total | 67,595 |

The whole number between six and eighteen years of age.

"If adequate support to the public schools, such as national aid would give, would add 50 per cent. to the school attendance in the city, still greater advantages would accrue to the public schools of the rural parishes of the State."

According to the report of State Superintendent Warren Easton, there are large parishes—

I ask the attention of the Senate to this—there are large parishes or counties in which no public schools were held last year in consequence of insufficient funds. In many parishes schools are reported as open two, three, and four months of the year. The average session for the entire State has been for whites 5 months; colored 4.91 months.

The school population for 1880, in the State, was 139,661 whites; enrolled in schools 32 per cent. Colored 134,184; enrolled 20 per cent. For 1885 the enrollment is reported: white 50,654; colored 41,414. Total 101,068."

One hundred and one thousand out of a total of 260,000 or 270,000.

The increased enrollment as compared with the increase in school population indicates how earnestly the State is trying to reduce the burden of illiteracy, but the results show, also, how slow the progress made and how difficult, if not impossible, it will be for the State, unaided, to educate its entire school population, or so far to decrease illiteracy that it shall not be an evil in the present and a constant menace against peace and prosperity in the future.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. O. ROGERS,
Ex-Superintendent Public Schools, New Orleans.

Upon this point of the actual lack of schools in large sections of the country, whole parishes or counties having been without any schools whatever during the last year, I desire to call the attention of those who have criticised as well the returns of the census as those of the Bureau of Education, which have been introduced in the speech of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], as well as the speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], to the fact that these averages are to the last extent misleading. If I am to die it makes very little difference to me what is the fate of the other 59,999,999 people of the United States. To me the stroke of death is all-important. Just so it is with reference to the matter of education. When a child is not educated, to that child the calamity is as great individually as though nobody were educated, except as the reflex influence of education upon others gives a little of development and elevation.

Here are whole counties where the children are without education; here are voting precincts all over the South, and in some portions of the North, without schools; and I am told that there are voting precincts in cities of the North where there are no means of public education. But we have schools in the cities for ten, eleven months, and perhaps in some instances the whole year round. Those schools are taken in making up these estimates, and they are massed with the shorter schools of one, two, or three months and the localities where there are no schools at all. The returns do not show the localities where there are no schools at all; but taking all the schools—there are some of them eight or ten months in length, and others only from one to three months, it may be—and we get an average for the whole State, and the State feels as though it had something to be proud of when it makes on the whole an average showing of schools five or six months in length.

If that were the universal length of the schools, if it were even five months, I am not one of those who, if they were efficient schools, would be inclined to find fault with the general condition of common-school education in the country, for I am one of those who believe that the average American child who has the opportunity for six months of education in the common schools gives as much of his time to education in the rudimentary branches of knowledge as it is of any advantage to him to give, and the rest of his time had better be given to industrial pursuits and in learning how to get a living.

But the truth is that these averages fail to indicate the condition of perhaps one-quarter part of the children of the whole country, who have substantially no opportunity to attend school at all, and more than one-third of them in that portion of the country which lies south of Mason and Dixon's line. It is this evil which can only be remedied by the extension of the system so that all the children shall have an equalization of school privileges, as the bill expresses it; and it is this evil to which, so far as I am concerned, I would especially direct attention.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire. I have not been in the Senate Chamber during all of his remarks, and it may be that he has already answered the inquiry which I desire to make. The committee which has reported this bill represents all parts of the country, and I have no doubt that it represents intelligently the condition of education in all parts of the country. I should like to ask if there was any evidence before the committee, or if any member of the committee has evidence, that would answer the question whether illiteracy is, on the whole, upon the gain or decrease in this country. I have heard it stated, as if upon good authority, that illiteracy is on the gain in this country, and that that gain is not confined to either race or exclusively to any section or locality. If that be true, if the committee have reliable evidence which would answer that question, I should like very much to hear it. As I said, it may have been already answered by the Senator from New Hampshire or by some other Senator, but I have not heard it.

Mr. BLAIR. As I stated earlier, I am informed by the Bureau of Education that the actual illiteracy of the country is unquestionably increasing, and it is not confined wholly to the Southern States. The bureau was in doubt whether there was an increase of illiteracy fully proportionate to the increase of population in the country. The truth is, so far as that is concerned, that there are no statistics available, and the statistics in school returns are taken, as they must be, largely by estimate, sometimes by overfavorable estimate, for no superintendent of schools, especially now that public attention is directed to this subject, would wish to place his State any lower in the grade of education than he is obliged to do. He is lacking in the facilities for obtaining and making accurate returns. It is exceedingly difficult, as I remember when I was engaged somewhat in schools in my own State, to get from the teachers in the districts the returns which they are required to make by law, even when their compensation depends upon its being done in a proper manner. I have been told that in some instances the returns which are made use of in these debates from superintendents of education are made up most carelessly, with most favorable estimates, and with no actual enumeration. I do not undertake to impeach them; I simply call attention, from what we know of human nature and what those of us know who have had anything to do with the common schools of the North, to the tendency to put the best possible showing upon a given state of facts. I call attention to the possibility that these unsworn returns that may have a tendency upon business booms, which have something to do with the attraction of Northern capital and Northern immigration to some parts of the country, are likely to present a more favorable aspect than the true one.

In regard to the North, I have heard it stated by a responsible gentleman of Massachusetts, and that it is founded upon actual returns, that the illiteracy of that State is increasing. I know that there has been most stringent legislation in the way of the establishment of compulsory evening schools in that State, and that strong efforts have been made to stamp out illiteracy by that Legislature and that people on account of the increasing and impending danger resulting from it. I have here a communication which would be exceedingly serviceable to the whole country, I think, as a statement of the remedial steps which have been taken in that ancient and important commonwealth, which was sent to me by Mr. Carrigan, whom the Senate will recognize as one of the leading educators of the State and, in fact, of the country, in regard to the operations of the legislation recently enacted directed to the removal of illiteracy in that State, especially to the establishment of evening schools. As it is a communication of some ten or twelve written pages, I will, with the consent of the Senate, if there be no objection, incorporate it in my remarks.

The communication is as follows:

BOSTON, January 7, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry as to the laws of Massachusetts relating to illiteracy and evening schools, I would respectfully refer you first, to the "Acts and Resolves" of the Legislature of 1887, a copy of which I sent to your address this day by mail. As you will observe, the statute, chapter 433, acts of 1887, has been in force but a few months, nevertheless the effect of its provisions has been most salutary, and the reports from the cities and towns affected by this enactment are most gratifying. To the thousands of unfortunate people who are brought into our common schools by its operation it will prove a precious boon. Its provisions, as was intended, are far reaching. They search the shop and factory, mill and manufactory alike, and bring the neglected children of illiterate parentage immediately under the guardianship of the State, thus compelling the needy to come in and partake of the free offering of a generous public. Though many questioned the wisdom of extending our school age from fourteen to twenty-one years of age by special legislation, I doubt if there is today a manufacturer or other citizen interested in the welfare of the commonwealth who is not in hearty accord with the most rigid enforcement of the act. The Legislature of 1884, as you may know, failed to enact the bill. It passed the house, but was killed in the senate. Last year the matter was again brought to the attention of the general court. As a member of the State board of education, I urged remedial legislation looking to the education of all illiterate minors.

The Legislature considered the expediency of prohibiting the employment of minors who could not read and write in the English language, restricting the law to cities and towns wherein evening schools were maintained. The object of the measure was to compel all illiterate minors to attend day or evening schools. From the extent and increase of illiteracy in manufacturing centers the necessity of further legislation was apparent. By the State census of 1885 it was found that, though Massachusetts had maintained her liberal appropriations for general education, for technical and industrial schools, for normal instruction, had extended her evening school system to include secondary studies, and, in a word, had materially advanced the standard of schools and colleges, there were 122,263 persons ten years of age and over illiterate. The total population of the State by the census of 1885 is 1,942,141. The population ten years of age and over is 1,581,961, making the percentage of illiterates ten years of age and over 7.73. An analysis of the census by cities and towns showed an alarming increase in illiteracy from immigration and the importance of immediate action by school authorities.

A few examples will suffice to show the distribution of illiteracy throughout the State:

| Cities. | Total population. | Population ten years of age and over. | Illiterates ten years of age and over. | Percentage. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Boston | 390,393 | 319,463 | 22,356 | 7.00 |
| Lowell | 64,107 | 52,558 | 5,656 | 10.76 |
| Lawrence | 38,862 | 31,406 | 2,942 | 9.37 |
| Fall River | 56,870 | 44,278 | 9,143 | 20.65 |
| New Bedford | 33,393 | 27,549 | 3,498 | 12.70 |
| Taunton | 23,674 | 19,365 | 1,598 | 8.25 |
| Holyoke | 27,895 | 21,801 | 3,485 | 15.99 |
| Newburyport | 13,716 | 11,368 | 1,086 | 9.55 |
| Chicopee | 11,516 | 9,354 | 1,749 | 18.70 |
| Marlborough | 10,941 | 8,682 | 1,081 | 12.45 |

Of the total illiterates 8,297, or 6.79 per cent., were born in Massachusetts; 5,601, or 4.58 per cent., were born in other parts of the United States, and 108,365, or 88.63 per cent., are foreign-born. These statistics convinced the most indifferent of the importance of a more rigid compulsory school law, and the senate by a unanimous vote, and the house by a vote of some 6 to 1, enacted the bill—chapter 433, acts of 1887. Early in November, as chairman of the committee of the State Board of Education on evening schools, I issued a circular letter to the superintendent of schools in the State, and from their reports I am more than satisfied that we have at last reached a solution of the problem of illiteracy in Massachusetts, if not in the country. In many of the cities the evening-school attendance has increased fivefold, while in Fall River, the most illiterate center in the State, out of the 1,526 children unable to read and write in any language 1,492 are now attending school, the remaining 36 having been excused from school attendance, as provided for in the act. For a further observation on this branch of the subject I beg to refer you to the inclosed letter from the superintendent of the public schools at Fall River, and, if you have them, the last school reports of cities in Massachusetts of 20,000 or more inhabitants. As to the policy and purpose of the State board in the matter of State and national illiteracy, I can speak but for one member.

On the matter of State illiteracy (the enactment of the act of 1887, which is but adding another link to our chain of school legislation in the line directed by its first colonial act of 1642), the statute itself is an answer. Our schools, like the highway, are open and free to all. We are gradually making the system dual. Under the permissive statute of 1857 all cities and towns were empowered to appropriate money for evening schools. In 1883 the Legislature enacted a law compelling all cities of 10,000 inhabitants to establish and maintain free evening schools. In 1886 the Legislature provided for the permanent establishment of evening high schools in cities of 50,000 inhabitants, which includes Boston, Worcester, Lowell, Cambridge, and Fall River. The last act was the one referred to which provides for the compulsory education of illiterate minors. As adult illiterates are, as a rule, ashamed to attend school, it is all-important to get the minors interested, and the earlier we begin the less difficult is the work of educating this class. Ten years' experience as head master and inspector of evening schools convinced me of the importance of an early classification. When once the ice is broken and the pupil feels at home, there is no difficulty if the teaching is efficient and the teacher sympathetic and faithful. The compelling of all illiterate minors to attend school, as provided in act of 1887, will have a great influence on the family of the minor. It will not only educate the minor, but the older brothers and sisters, as well as the parents, will be found crowding the classes. But the history of education clearly shows that nothing less than a mandatory statute in the first instance will reach this class of our population. Since 1849 repeated efforts have been made by the State and municipalities to bring adult illiterates into evening schools. Yet with the multiplicity of methods, with the co-operation of eleemosynary and Christian associations in the maintenance of special tuition for persons unable to read and write, illiteracy has been from year to year increasing until we are now compelled to interpose the most rigid provisions of law ever enacted for the purpose of education. In conclusion let me say that having studied every phase of the illiteracy problem from a State and national view, I find but one conclusion, and that is, if we ever expect to see illiteracy stamped out, the nation and State must unite in the crusade. The public good and all persons conversant with the history of education demand national aid.

As was well said by Horace Mann, "Public sentiment exceeds and excels the law." We have plenty of sentiment; let us now have the law. Once a delegate from this State to the interstate educational convention in Kentucky in 1883, and as chairman of the Federal aid committee of the American Institute of Instruction, I have been most earnestly interested in this great question, and though I may differ from some of the promoters of Government aid to schools, I believe it is the first duty of all interested in the future of the nation to do everything within the limits of the Constitution to supplement the work of the several States which are so heavily burdened with illiteracy. For one I should be happy to distribute the amount which may come to Massachusetts, though our State is not burdened with taxes for education. Let the States take pro rata as provided in this bill. There should be no distinction. I am convinced that the South is doing all it can to establish and maintain a general school system, but if twice the amount were appropriated by the densely illiterate States the illiteracy would not be substantially reduced. If Massachusetts in 1887 is compelled to protect herself from an illiterate growth, what can we say of the States in the black belt? Massachusetts has set the example; let other States imitate the example or give a better one. Our schools are our safety. They are the property of no party and never should be dragged into politics, but should be the pride alike of all parties. There should be no difference in the common-school standard of Massachusetts and Mississippi. For the general welfare all the children should be given a thorough training in the fundamental elements of the branches of common learning. Year by year thousands of minors reach their majority totally ignorant of their letters. The older the more difficult is it to bring them to their books. This is the experience of the world, and in the language of the commissioner of education for Scotland in his work on English education, State and Education, the state, the nation, in drecting education has only stepped into its proper place. As chairman of the national educational committee of the American Institute of Instruction I take pleasure in calling your attention to the last act of the directors of the institute, their resolution for aid to common schools, which you will find herewith inclosed. If I can be of further service in the consideration of this all-important measure, do me the honor to command me.

Very truly, yours,

E. C. CARRIGAN,
Of the Massachusetts State Board of Education.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
Chairman Committee on Education, etc., U. S. Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me one moment? The Senator has alluded to the State of Massachusetts. It is but just to the State of Massachusetts that some one should say that the increase of illiteracy in that State is due to the increase of the foreign population. The foreign population is increasing very rapidly in the State of Massachusetts. Of what is termed in the census report "illiteracy," nine-tenths is of foreign-born people, either citizens or residents who are not citizens of Massachusetts. There is but a very small proportion of the native people of Massachusetts who would come into the tables of the Census Bureau or who would in any sense be termed illiterate, and I am confident in the belief that that number is growing smaller. But the attraction to Massachusetts of foreign population, especially wage-earners, for reasons that it is not proper to discuss in connection with this bill, is so great that it outruns the increased and earnest effort of our people to keep down illiteracy in the State.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's explanation is quite appropriate, and I endeavored to make it in passing over the subject during his absence.

Mr. DAWES. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BLAIR. It was not made as fully nor as well as the Senator has made it, but it is the fact that the chief struggle in the New England States, so far as illiteracy is concerned, is with foreign immigration. Nevertheless there is the immigration; those people come to us, and they come to stay; they are a part of us; and they require this help, and they require it now. Without it, belonging as they do to an active, vigorous, and enterprising race, a race likely to become dangerous under our free institutions, unless they become sufficiently intelligent to appreciate and to understand them and to become a component part of our people, under these circumstances it is necessary that we should address ourselves to the removal of this foreign-born illiteracy as much as to that which is native born.

I alluded to the condition in the State of Connecticut. Perhaps I may read, in passing, from the last message of the governor of Connecticut upon this subject. In the message of his excellency, Phineas C. Lounsbury, governor of Connecticut, to the General Assembly, session of 1887, he takes up the subject of education. He says:

At the close of the last fiscal year the principal of the school fund amounted to $2,022,204.27, a loss from the previous year of $7,919.47. A part of this loss came from the foreclosure of certain old mortgages, and the rest was the result of the readjustment of the stock of the City Bank of Hartford. The people of the State feel a natural pride in keeping the capital of the school fund unimpaired, and any appropriation made for this purpose would work no injustice to any one, and would probably meet with general approval.

The total amount of money raised in the State during the last year for the support of the common schools was $1,663,019.17. Of this sum about $759,000 came from town taxation, about $448,000 from district taxation, about $114,000 from the earnings of the school fund, nearly $48,000 from the town deposit fund and local funds, about $228,000 were appropriated by the State, and the balance of about $66,000 came from voluntary contributions and other sources.

The number of children between the ages of four and sixteen was 152,166. The number of scholars registered in the schools was 125,539, but of these many attended school only a few days and many more only the sixty days required by the law.

These conditions in Connecticut grow largely out of the fact that she has a large and increasing foreign-born population; but the conditions are not wholly confined to that circumstance, for you will see as I proceed that the condition of the rural population is also discussed.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to interject one suggestion just here?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. In many of the cities in Connecticut the children of the foreign-born population are not educated in the common schools, so that while they are enumerated as children being educated in parochial schools established and maintained by the Catholic Church, they do not appear as regular attendants at the common schools.

Mr. BLAIR. That is very true, and in my own State it is also true. In fact, in the city of Manchester, where I reside, about one-half of the school population is under the control of the ecclesiastical establishments and very generally is educated in the parochial schools. Much of the opposition to this bill comes from that large body of our fellow-citizens who disbelieve in the common-school system of education. That is apparent from the criticisms in the public press, and it is in its direction a question for serious consideration by the American people. The national indorsement of the common-school system means more for its general prevalence in this country than any other one thing that could be given to it. Those who are opposed to it as a system will understand this, and it is upon that ground and from that source that as strong opposition comes as from any.

But on the other hand the great ecclesiastical organization which is the life and pith and force of the parochical system is not a unit with regard to the common schools of this country. Many of the organs of the Catholic faith favor this bill, some of them certainly do, and the Catholic Church is divided upon the subject. The Irish World has given strong support to this measure. So it is that the friends of the parochial system are not to be found wholly in any single church. But I do not wish to drag that form of discussion into this debate.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator a question? Do the parochial schools in New England receive any aid from the common-school fund?

Mr. BLAIR. Not to my knowledge. In my own State, in some instances where the common school has been abandoned, the school-house has been made available for the parochial school, but no contribution from public taxation, so far as I know, is made anywhere for the support of the parochial school as a system. One strong ground of complaint by those who maintain the parochial schools is that as a matter of conscience they feel bound to educate their children under their own system, and that it is unjust to them that they should be taxed for the support of both.

But to proceed. When this interruption took place and this episode was interjected I was reading from the message of the governor of Connecticut, where he says:

The number of children between the ages of four and sixteen was 152,166. The number of scholars registered in the schools was 125,539, but of these many attended school only a few days and many more only the sixty days required by the law. The number of the children that did not attend school at all was 20,388.

The Senator from Connecticut will observe this last statement. The number who did not attend school at all was 20,388. Many of those who did attend attended only sixty days, as required by law—two months out of the whole year.

Mr. PLATT. There is another thing in regard to our enumeration; it takes in the children between four and sixteen. The school age differs in different States, but, if I am not very much mistaken, the school age of Connecticut is between four and sixteen.

Mr. BLAIR. It is so stated here.

Mr. PLATT. There is a growing feeling, I think, among parents that it is not wise to send children to school at the early age of four years. I do not know whether that sentiment is wise or not, but it accounts for a very considerable number of the twenty thousand enumerated children who do not attend school at all. They are the children four, five, and six years of age.

Mr. BLAIR. The governor proceeds:

These are the figures and the facts, but no report of your able school board, no statistics of the census could show the frightful amount of illiteracy that is existing all over the State. Within the last ten years thousands of boys and girls have passed beyond the limit of their school life, have gone out into the world, and to-day they are virtually unable to read and write. These children were not to blame, for they went to school all that they were sent, all perhaps that they were permitted to go. It was a few days in each of a few years. They learned all that they had the time to learn, their letters, to read a few short sentences, to write their names; but any ordinary printed book is to them a sealed mystery, and any document to which they may sign their names is as far beyond their ability to decipher as though it were written in Sanscrit. For this ignorance, which must darken and sadden all their lives, this Commonwealth is to blame, for it was the inevitable result of faulty legislation and of inefficiency in enforcing that legislation which was good. The number of days of compulsory attendance was set at sixty, when the most that could reasonably have been expected was that some scholars would learn more in sixty days of the year than they would forget in the remaining three hundred. Worse than that, the State failed to lift its strong arm to put into the hands of all its starving children even this poor crust.

Then the question comes home to you, how can the growth of this illiteracy be checked? Surely it cannot be done by a course which weakens and neglects the back districts. In every center of population you may build a graded school, but this will throw its light for only a mile or two from the village green, and then, if you do nothing more, there is left beyond a wilderness of ignorance, denser and darker than it was before. It can be done only by a legislation which cares for every child, and which is enforced, not by local authorities, not by town boards, but by your own State board, with all the dignity and the power of the Commonwealth behind it.

In my judgment, the number of days of compulsory attendance should be increased to one hundred and twenty. No experienced teacher believes that any ordinary child can acquire a reasonably good common-school education in less than one hundred and twenty days of continuous schooling in each year. The length of school required by law should also be increased.

It is now fixed at twenty-four weeks in the year, and many of the districts have no more. In all cases it is resulting in lack of education, and many parents are bitterly complaining that the State provides, that is, virtually permits, only six months of schooling for their children, while the children of their neighbors are enjoying all the advantages that forty weeks can give. To some of the weaker districts, the State might justly give additional aid. From some of the stronger ones a little might be taken away of that which is granted now.

This question of education involves an obligation between the State and the children, and the responsibility for attending school should be brought as closely to the children as possible, that is, it should be placed on the parents themselves. If the parents are too poor to send their children to school, there should be some sure and definite source of relief. If they are too shiftless, the penalty should be so sharp that a single application will rouse them to a sense of their duty. If poverty and shiftlessness together form an insuperable barrier between the home and the school-house, let the children be taken away. This penalty might seem severe, but its prompt application in a single score of cases would add 10 per cent. to the average school attendance of the year, would bring a blessing to thousands of homes, and the greatest blessing of all to the children thus taken away.

But whatever may be the legislation, its violation should be sought and the penalties enforced directly by the State itself. Local authorities would be well-nigh worthless, for, with some shining exceptions, they are just as shiftless as the worst of parents. A few agents, chosen for their special fitness, working under the direction of some common head, and held responsible for the thoroughness of their work, could cover every district in their investigations, and the total expense would not exceed a few thousand dollars a year. In any event the benefit to the schools and the children would be incomparably greater than the cost. In the confidence that your wisdom is equal to your responsibility, I commend the whole subject to your serious consideration.

I do not now see the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] in the Chamber, and therefore it would be unnecessary for me to repeat what I was saying upon this point. But a like condition of things is indicated by the report of the superintendent of schools in the State of New York, and some time I will read what he says. I will state with reference to the city of New York a fact that fell under my own observation. It occurred some four years ago, to be sure, but I am aware of nothing which indicates an improving tendency in that great city. The Senator now occupying the chair [Mr. PUGH] will remember when the Committee on Education and Labor was taking testimony in the city of New York a few years ago, and it was during that time that the circumstance occurred of which I now speak. Wandering through the city I fell in with a Catholic priest in Mulberry street, near the church in which he officiated, and entering into conversation with him he told me that in that assembly district there were twenty-five hundred children of school age who ought to be in schools who were neither in the public schools nor in the parochial schools. He expressed very great concern at those children not being cared for by the church to which he belonged, which had already greater burdens in the way of the maintenance of its parochial schools than it could well carry, and that those children not being cared for in the parochial school, which was his preference, were not even educated in the public schools of the State. There were those children in that great city and in one assembly district to the number of twenty-five hundred, growing up without actual attendance upon any school whatever. They were the children of poor people, and were not to be found in private schools, had no means of education, and they were not only within the extended limits of the school age, but within those narrower limits when children do attend school if they attend at all.

The State of North Carolina is a State in which as strenuous exertions are being made to improve the scholastic condition of the children proportioned to the ability of the people to endure taxation, as in any, I think, and I will read to the Senate some information which I have from very responsible men in that State. I design, before the debate is closed, to do this with reference to nearly all the States, especially those of the South, for I do not propose, God willing and the Senate bearing with me, if this bill is to be lost, either here or in the other House or by the veto of the President of the United States, that the American people shall lack the information whereon to hold the guilty to an account. If this bill fails it will not be my fault, Mr. President.

The letter which I now read is from the late superintendent of public instruction, Hon. J. C. Scarborough, after which I will read a communication from the present superintendent of public instruction in that State. Mr. Scarborough writes me from Selma, N. C., as follows:

SELMA, N. C., November 28, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of November 19, inclosing copy of letter of June 16, 1887, was received here four days since. I have since my retirement from the office of State superintendent of education been on a farm 30 miles distant from Raleigh, and while I am none the less interested in education for our people, my mind has been employed mainly on the question of meat and bread for self and family. I have been chairman of the board of education for Johnston County for the past two years, and my special efforts have been directed to the improvement of the schools for the county. And here comes in what of information I have on the subject which will be of practical use to you in the proper presentation of the question of temporary aid from the national Treasury to education for the people in the public schools.

Johnston County, North Carolina, has a population of 30,000, in round numbers, now. Of these the proportion of white and black people is about as 2 to 1, the blacks being a fraction over one-third of the population. The school age in North Carolina is from six years of age to twenty-one years. One-third of the population is embraced in this age, so that we have 10,000 children of school age; 6,500 whites, 3,500 blacks.

We levy for school purposes this year 21 cents on each $100 valuation of property. Of this the Legislature provides for a direct levy of 12½ cents on the $100, and the county levies 8½ cents on the $100.

We also get $1.66 on each poll this year for schools. We also get about $1,800, certainly not exceeding $2,000, from the license tax on retail liquor dealers, and about $500 from fines, forfeitures, and penalties from the courts. And all told, from all sources, we will not get for schools in my county (Johnston) for the school year beginning December 1, 1887, any over $17,000 (I fear less than that). This to pay the expenses of the system and to provide school facilities for 10,000 children of school age. With this sum for this number of children, scattered over a territory of 700 square miles, our board of education for Johnston County, of which I am at present chairman, will be expected to continue the public schools in the several school districts for white and for black children an average term of four months. We can not accomplish the wonderful feat at a higher average salary per month of twenty school days for the teachers than $30.

Now, sir, when I tell you that Johnston County is an average county in population and wealth (?), and is quite above the average county in what she is at present doing for her public schools, you have the outlines of a picture you can easily fill up for the State of North Carolina. Many of our school districts are yet without school-houses, and many of those having houses have very inferior and poorly furnished houses.

As to education in private schools in Johnston County, 600 pupils will cover all who attend private schools at any time in any year for the past five.

Our people are poor, but are struggling to better their condition. The blacks pay but little of the taxes for schools, except as any tenant's work makes the landlord or the employer able to pay taxes. They have equal benefits from the school fund with the whites.

We can not, in our condition at this time, meet the demands by paying taxes sufficient to have an efficient school system. If we shall be left to solve the problem ourselves, the great mass of the present population of school age and of those coming after them must pass beyond the reach of the schools and the benefits of education, and be left for their natural lives in the darkness of ignorance. If this is to be, I trust then only in the mercies of a kind Providence to save us from the ruin which ignorance and a consequent want of patriotism must bring upon the country.

I wish I were in condition to serve you better than in this communication.

Very truly, yours,

J. C. SCARBOROUGH.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The Senate will observe that with these 10,000 children to educate in that county and with $17,000 only wherewith to do it, there is per capita for the children to be educated to be expended in that county only $1.70 each for the year, while in many of the Northern States the sums exceed $10 per capita, and in some States the sums even exceed $20 per capita for the school year. And this man, formerly the State superintendent of education for North Carolina, says this is a favorable picture for the State at large. The letter was written last November. The present superintendent of public schools in North Carolina has always been a very strong advocate of temporary national aid to education. I will read his letter a little later.

I have here a letter which comes from a colored school teacher in the State of North Carolina. I find it in one of the public prints, in the National Republican, published in this city, and I have no reason to doubt its authenticity and its reliability; in fact, it has the superintendent of public education in the State corroborating its general statements. The letter is addressed to the editor of the National Republican. It says:

Allow me to interchange a few thoughts upon the necessity of the passage of the Blair educational bill, as I see it brought before Congress again. I do not argue in its favor from any personal motives or aims, but because I have always been a lover of education and advocated its cause.

I believe that the prosperity of the people of the South depends greatly upon education. The system of public education in the South is on the retrograde, and except the National Government will give aid to the poor people of the South we have a serious apprehension to fear the system will soon be a mere sham.

The appropriations are so small that our schools can hardly last longer than three or three and a half months, and first-grade teachers get $20 or $25 per month, from which they must board and clothe themselves and families. Such wages are degrading to such a high and noble calling—a calling that must shape the destinies of generations. And another fact is, the teacher's task is not such an easy one as some may think. Teachers are often subject to exposure and sacrifice. Our school-houses are too small by far—a school-house will hardly seat fifty children where a hundred and fifty belong. The people are taxed to the full extent, yet the schools greatly need aid. I sincerely hope both branches of Congress may pass the "Blair bill" early in its session. The people are anxiously waiting to greet its passage that it may enhance prosperity and education.

I am yours for success,

A COLORED TEACHER.

MANSON, N. C., January 9, 1888.

Here I call attention to one fact which seems to be overlooked in the statistics which have been cited by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in which they institute a comparison based on the length of the schools between the Northern and the Southern States. There would be some propriety in the institution of this comparison if it was first established that the schools are of the same quality, that the quality of the teachers is the same, that the school-house, the plant is the same—that is to say, the book, the blackboard, the furniture, whatever is necessary as a means of assistance to the teacher in the imparting of knowledge, were the same in the one section of the country as in the other section; but for generations the people of the North have concentrated their closest, their most earnest attention on the subject of the common school. Everywhere they have built the school-house; school-houses are their pride; they have been educating their children for generations; and so it comes to pass that the common school of New England, of New York, of the West, is an altogether different institution from what we find it in the Southern States, where it is now first established, where it is a new thing, where a teacher is wanting, as a rule, so far as actual training for the work is concerned, so indispensable to the highest success; where the school-house is almost a myth, and where the blackboard and the necessary furniture for the purposes of illustration are hardly found at all. As to teachers, necessarily they have not had very great experience, no matter what may be their natural capability.

The great mass of the colored schools are taught by colored teachers, as a rule, and both races determine that there shall be no mixed schools. The result is that one hundred days of education in the State of Florida is not worth ten days in the State of New Hampshire. And yet we have paraded here before us, as an irrefutable reply to our urgent demand that the South should have help in creating the school itself, creating the teachers, creating the school-house, and in establishing the institution de novo, at least by way of maintenance—we have paraded, as if it were an irrefutable demolition of our proposition, the fact that in some of the Southern States it is claimed that the schools are kept open annually as long as they are in New Hampshire, where they are almost as short as they are anywhere in the North. Any one must see at once that this sort of comparison is most false and pernicious in its tendency, and casts no light whatever upon the case.

Then, this is true, at least in New Hampshire and in the rural districts of New England and in the rural districts of the North generally, where the school system is extended everywhere, that there is no inch of territory, geographically considered, that is not embraced within the lines of some school district, and every child has his chance, while in these new States, where the institution is just being introduced, hardly two-thirds, if more than one-half, and in many sections not even that, of the territory has as yet been brought under the influence of any common school whatever.

Hon. S. M. Finger, the present superintendent of schools for the State of North Carolina, writes me strongly urging the passage of the bill. He has appeared before the committee, as did the former superintendent on an earlier occasion. Both have pressed the passage of this bill as a necessity for that State. Mr. Finger says in a letter written to me last May:

Your favor of the 20th ultimo came duly to hand. I send you a copy of my last report, on the first pages of which you will find a summary which will, in brief, give you the exact condition of our school system. We have an average of just about three months' terms per annum for both races. Beyond this—

And I call the attention of the Senate to his emphatic language, his despairing language—

Beyond this we cannot advance soon, both because of the inability of our people to bear heavy taxation and because we have in our constitution a limitation of taxation, 66⅔ cents on the $100 of property and $2 on the poll for all purposes of a general nature.

He makes suggestions of some modifications of the bill which he thinks would facilitate its operations in the South. I will not take the time of the Senate to read them, but he gives the strongest indorsement to the general proposition of national aid to common schools. In his report he says very much which demonstrates his great capacity and fitness for the position which he occupies. I might read it, but perhaps it is not necessary. The general fact which he states in his letter, and which is set forth more at length by the former superintendent, is fully sustained by his report on the question of national aid. He says specifically in his report:

Money flows into the national Treasury far beyond the needs of the Government. It is distributed with lavish hand to pay pensions, etc.; but as yet no measure of national aid to schools has been passed. In the light of history this to me is simply remarkable. Knowing the struggle the South has in her poverty, and what she is doing in the matter of education, it would seem that every Northern member of Congress ought gladly to extend aid from the United States Treasury, and that, too, through our State systems, without restrictions. Why any Southern member who is in favor of public education should oppose this measure is beyond my comprehension, all arguments about its unconstitutionality to the contrary notwithstanding. Just now national aid would seem to be just the measure to help us in our time of financial need. If the Assembly can do anything to secure the passage of this measure, they will do the State a great service.

I have a large amount of matter from the State of Tennessee, and what I have is to the point. I will read first from a speech on the subject by Col. A. S. Coylar, of Nashville, Tenn. I have no doubt the Senators from that State are familiar with this gentleman's character and standing. He said in a late address, speaking of the situation of the South:

Look at our condition. The property of Southern people, to the extent of $1,200,000,000, has been converted into citizens. In addition, we are taxed to pay the cost of our subjugation, a debt originally of $3,000,000,000. We are taxed to pay millions and millions in the way of pensions to the Union soldiers. Besides, our country was laid waste and our lands reduced to half their former value. In our poverty we are feebly trying to establish a system of public schools, and the fund we raise has to be applied to both races. I say feebly. In Tennessee we have about 500,000 children that ought to be at school; 221,000 of them never see a school-house.

We are nearly at the foot in illiteracy. We have 90,000 women raising families who can neither read nor write. * * *

To talk of improving our schools without Federal aid; to declare for public schools, and oppose all known means to help them along, is mockery.

And a gentleman writes me from Roan Mountain, Tenn., January 2, 1888, addressing myself:

DEAR SIR: Though an entire stranger to you, I take the liberty, as an admirer of your efforts in behalf of education, to ask you for a copy of the educational bill. I understand one clause is "that none of the funds shall be used in any but public schools." The laws of Tennessee allow school directors to use the school funds in connection with private schools, so that we have a good many sectarian schools here with the public schools. I expect the parties interested in these schools are now opposing your bill, which in this State would include the clergy and most of the politicians. There seems to be something opposing it more than what is seen in Congress. The masses of the people are for it, and I hope it will be passed, as it is in that manner—at least as it is time the present way was broken up.

Yours,

WILLIAM CARPENTER.

This leads me to speak of a matter which is perhaps not generally, but to a large extent, true in the Southern country. There is what has come to be known as the tramp teacher in some places. That is not applied as a dishonorable epithet at all, but it is the business of the teacher to teach, and small numbers are available only in different localities, and the teacher who instructs at all will find in any given locality employment for only a very few days out of the year. The consequence is that no man of ability and intelligence, and few women, can afford to give themselves to the pursuit of teaching with the idea of spending their time in any one locality. So they take a school in a given locality, run it for a few days, exhaust the money there, then go to another, and then to another, and then to another.

Of course, a system of this kind, a peripatetic, itinerative system of instruction of this description, where the school period is very short, where the time the school is kept is so uncertain, when frequently the teacher comes at the busiest season of the year, so that the children can not attend—of course, I say, a school system of this kind, such as it is in many rural districts throughout the South, is to a very large degree inefficient. Naturally the fund of the State, small in amount, comes to be mixed up with private contributions; and religious bodies feel it their duty to do something. And the people do the best they can to get up such schools as on the whole they are able to maintain; but such a system must be exceedingly inefficient, and this man alludes to it. I only speak of this as again emphasizing the impossibility of instituting anything like a comparison, based simply upon the duration of schools, between those of a community where they have existed for generations and a new community, where they are really coming for the first time to be a part of the social organization.

What is true with reference to one rural portion of the country and most of the South, is generally true of the whole. I have a communication here from Virginia, from Thomas A. Walker, principal of a public school in that State, which is to the same general effect as what I have already placed in the possession of the Senate from other parts of the South. I will read the letter:

[Thomas A. Walker, Principal, Oak Level, Va.]

DECEMBER 29, 1887.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR, United States Senate:

I send you a petition to the Senate of the United States for national aid to education, signed by 100 citizens of Henry County, Virginia, praying for national aid to education. These signers have asked me to urgently request you not to abate your efforts in trying to secure the passage of the Blair bill during this session of Congress. Do everything within your power to have your great bill passed at once.

We care but little about the tariff—

I call the attention of politicians to this matter, because Congress seems to be full of the idea that the tariff is a subject of importance, but there are portions of this country where the school question stirs the people and influences their present and their future far more than does the tariff question. Men understand whether their children are being educated; they know that education is indispensable to their children; they know the result of the deliverance of the blacks from slavery as the result of the war; they know the new conditions around them; and the masses of the people, South as well as North, white as well as black, are intent on general education. They care not so much about the tariff; the tariff will take care of itself. Educate the people. They understand the steps necessary then to protect their industries and to protect their own elevation. You can delude an ordinary citizen with the sophistries of free trade or perhaps those of protection, and speak of the arguments pro and con in that way; but the simplest-minded man on the face of the earth knows when he is getting money enough to educate his child, and whether his child, and through his child he is to be represented in the great future; and parental affection is on the side of popular education. The people know whether they are getting the opportunity, and they now realize the absolute necessity of that opportunity as they never did before. Mr. Walker says:

The average pay of teachers here is only $29.20 per month. This is starvation wages, and it is rapidly driving well-qualified teachers out of the profession of teaching. No teacher can afford to qualify himself for teaching and then teach for this pittance. The state of our public schools is deplorable, and that of our school-houses worse. We have but very few school-houses fit to teach in, and no money to build better ones. A great number of our children are growing up in ignorance, and we have no schools for them. We humbly beseech you and every other true patriot in Congress to come to the rescue of the people and have the Blair bill passed at once, and thus help us to banish the illiteracy which, like a cloud, is overshadowing our Southern land.

Can we not do something to enlighten the 6,000,000 illiterates we have in our land when we have a Treasury overflowing with surplus money? Shall we permit these ignorant voters to go to the polls and vote when they are not able to read the ballots which they cast? I pray God that such a state of things may not exist much longer.

What is the prospect of the Blair bill passing this session of Congress? Do you think it will become a law? A few lines from you will be thankfully received by

Your humble servant,

THOMAS A. WALKER,
Principal Public School, Oak Level, Va.

Accompanying this is the petition which, as he says, is signed by 100 names—I have not counted them—which is to the same effect, an earnest, eager, strong prayer to the Congress of the United States to give temporary aid to their common schools.

The importance of this question will not enable me to conclude to-night, as I have a large mass of matter to submit, but I have taken the floor this evening because several gentlemen who are expected to speak and whose names are on the list failed to occupy the time. I will go on to-morrow, with the consent of the Senate. As I began with statistical matter, I should like to proceed with other points to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from New Hampshire yields the floor, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. Before that motion is put, I think, as I now learn that Senators are ready to speak, I will withdraw my suggestion and I will wait until they have addressed the Senate. Any one who has a right to expect the floor will not be interfered with by me to-morrow, and I hope we shall not lose any time unnecessarily. I desire, as far as the convenience and will of the Senate will permit, to press the bill to an early conclusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PUGH in the chair). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 18, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1888.

The House was called to order at 12 m. by Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, its Clerk.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The CLERK. It is the painful duty of the Clerk to announce to the House the indisposition of the Speaker, in which event the rule provides that the Clerk shall call the House to order.

The rule also provides that the Speaker shall have the right to name any member to perform the duties of the Chair, which appointment shall not extend beyond an adjournment. The seventh clause of the first rule provides, however—

That in case of his [the Speaker's] illness, he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding ten days, with the approval of the House at the time the same is made; and in his absence and omission to make such appointment, the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore, to act during his absence.

Nominations are now in order for a Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. MILLS. I submit the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. SAMUEL S. COX, a Representative from the State of New York, be, and is hereby, appointed Speaker pro tempore during the present temporary absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. COX accordingly took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement as to the vote taken on yesterday with reference to the appointment of clerks for members. I was unavoidably called away from the House when the vote was taken. Had I been present I should have voted in the negative on that proposition; and I ask unanimous consent that my vote may be so recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not be in order for the Chair to entertain that request. The gentleman's statement, however, will go into the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to announce that my colleague, Mr. BLAND, is detained from the House on account of serious sickness in his family, as well as on account of being sick himself.

This will account for his absence from the House when the vote was taken upon the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas on yesterday.

CORRECTION.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a correction of the RECORD. My attention has been called to the RECORD of January 13, on page 426, where the amendments that were reported to the resolution in regard to the captured battle flags have been placed under and in connection with the resolution relating to the war records. I desire these amendments to be placed in their proper position in connection with the resolutions adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. MILLS submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives has appointed Hon. SAMUEL S. COX, a Representative from the State of New York, as Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

IMPROVEMENT OF TONAWANDA HARBOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports of examinations and surveys of Tonawanda Harbor and Niagara River, New York, between Black Rock and Tonawanda; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT WEST FORK TENNESSEE, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports of examinations and surveys of the West Fork of the Tennessee River, and Bear Creek, Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF CERTAIN HARBORS, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports of examinations and surveys of the harbors of Duxbury, Manchester, Wellfleet, and Winthrop, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT NEW BEDFORD HARBOR, ETC., MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports of examinations and surveys of New Bedford Harbor and Taunton River, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

BIG HOCKINGHAM RIVER IMPROVEMENT, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports of examinations and surveys of Big Hockingham River, from the mouth to Colville, Ohio, and the Louisa Fork of the Sandy River; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEYS OF ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports of the examinations and surveys of St. Augustine, Fla., for a deep-sea channel on the outer bar, and of Punta Rasa Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF SUPREME COURT CASES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting the manuscript and recommending the publication by Congress of a table of cases argued and adjudged in the Supreme Court of the United States from 104 to 122 United States Reports, compiled by H. D. Clarke, librarian; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BYNUM, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. CATCHINGS, for to-day and to-morrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOUK, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. GLOVER, for one week, on account of important business.

RESOLUTIONS OF WOOL CONVENTION.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent to present resolutions adopted by the conference of wool-manufacturers, wool-growers, and wool-dealers in this city on January 14, 1888, and ask that they be printed in the RECORD. They refer to matters of general interest.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. They are as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the conference of wool-manufacturers, wool-growers, and wool-dealers, at Washington, D. C., January 14, 1888.

The representatives of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers and of the Wool Growers' National Association, speaking, as they believe, for all persons engaged in both of these occupations in the United States with only individual exceptions, proclaim anew their deep conviction that the protection by tariff of the production of wool, and of the manufacture of wool, is demanded by the best interests of all the American people.

The increase in the clip of American wool from 60,264,913 pounds in 1859 to 302,000,000 pounds in 1885, while the imports of foreign wool advanced only from 26,282,935 pounds to 70,596,170 pounds within the same period, demonstrates the effect of protective duties in promoting sheep husbandry in this country, and in thus adding to the sources of national prosperity and wealth.

The fact that the reduction in the tariff on wool in 1883 was immediately followed by a decrease in the number of sheep in the country from 50,626,626 in 1884 to 44,759,314 in 1887, gives warning that the abolition of duties on wool would seriously cripple the raising of sheep in this country, which is the third producer in quantity among the nations; and would thus increase the price of wool all over the world, while the consequent destruction of sheep would materially affect the supply and the price of meat and to a considerable degree of all provisions.

Inasmuch as American manufacturers furnished in 1880 81.9 per cent. of the woolen goods consumed in the United States, although in 1860 only 62.8 per cent. of such goods were produced in this country, no reduction in the tariff can be necessary to afford the American people a full supply and abundant competition in fabrics which enter into use in every family, and for which the prices for like qualities compare favorably with those in foreign countries.

The advance in the consumption of wool in the United States, from 65,749,635 pounds in 1859 to 424,404,109 pounds in 1885 under a protective tariff, is to be attributed to the impetus given to manufactures by the raising of sheep in this country, which, in 1884, furnished 81.3 per cent. of all the wool consumed here. As a means to the development of manufactories at home, the sheep industry, which has so largely aided in the development and civilization of our vast western country, deserves consistent and adequate encouragement in the adjustment of the national revenue.

Under the protective policy the United States has become the foremost manufacturing nation in the world, while its agriculture has been extended and diversified by the incentive of the most profitable markets known to men. Prudence forbids the overthrow of a system of revenue under which such results have been obtained, while the wages of labor and the share of production paid to the American artisan are far greater than in any other country.

The committees here assembled ask for the continuance of protection to their own industries only as they ask for like consideration to every other branch of American productions. They plead for no favoritism to particular interests, but for a broad national policy, essential to the well-being of all our people, and contributing to the prosperity and progress and power of the Republic. They know that the abolition of the duties on wool, almost fatal to our sheep husbandry, would be very damaging to the manufacturers of wool.

These committees urge that no reason can be shown why subsidies should be offered for foreign competition by the repeal or reduction of the tariff, and they suggest that wisdom as well as patriotism requires that all American productions shall have the fostering care of the Government as the safeguard of American nationality.

That we urgently request Congress to immediately pass a joint resolution correcting the present erroneous classification of worsteds, by directing that they be classified as woolen cloths.

That we favor the passage of the Senate bill, known as the "Aldrich bill," to suppress undervaluation of imports.

Schedule of proposed duties on wool and manufactures thereof, agreed on by the conference of wool growers, wool dealers, and wool manufacturers, held at Washington, D. C., January 11–14, 1888.

All wools, hair of the goat, alpaca, camel, llama, and other like animals shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the three following classes:

CLASS 1.—CLOTHING WOOL.

That is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote; down clothing wools and wools of like character, with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes two and three.

CLASS 2.—COMBING WOOL.

That is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used; and also all hair of the goat, alpaca, camel, llama, and other like animals.

CLASS 3.—CARPET WOOLS AND OTHER SIMILAR WOOLS.

Such as Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and including all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere.

The duty upon wool of the first class, which shall be imported washed, shall be twice the amount of the duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed.

And the duty upon wool and hair of all classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the duty to which it would be subject if imported unwashed.

And the duty upon wool of the sheep, or hair of the goat, alpaca, camel, llama, and other like animals which shall be imported in any other than the ordinary condition as now and heretofore practiced, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject.

Wools of the first class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 32 cents or less per pound, 10 cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, 11 per cent. ad valorem. Wools of the first class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 32 cents per pound, 12 cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Wools of the second class, and all hair of the goat, alpaca, camel, llama, and other like animals, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 32 cents or less per pound, 10 cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, 11 per cent. ad valorem.

Wools and hair of the second class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 32 cents per pound, 12 cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Wools of the third class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 12 cents or less per pound, 3 cents per pound.

Wools of the third class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 12 cents per pound, 6 cents per pound.

No wool shall be included in class 3 which shall be imported for any purpose other than for the manufacture of carpets or low grades of blankets, or which shall not be strictly such as are known and recognized as carpet wools.

Wools on the skin, the same rates as other wools, the quantity and value to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Sheep skins and Angora goat skins, raw or unmanufactured, imported with the wool on, washed or unwashed, 30 per cent. ad valorem on the skins alone.

Ring waste, thread waste, yarn waste, top waste, garneted waste, and all other similar wastes or products, composed wholly or in part of wool, by whatever name now known, or by which they may hereafter be known, and of whatever value, and such shoddy, the value whereof shall be 20 cents or more per pound, shall pay a duty of 30 cents per pound.

Noils shall pay the same rate of duty as the washed wools or hair from which they are made.

Shoddy, not otherwise enumerated, and mungo shall pay a duty of 20 cents per pound.

Woolen rags, refuse waste, and flocks shall pay a duty of 10 cents per pound.

All wools and hair advanced from the scoured state by carding or combing, not otherwise provided for, shall be classified as manufactures of wool.

Worsted and woolen cloths, worsted or woolen shawls, flannels, blankets, hats of wool, knit goods, and all goods made on knitting-frames, balmorals, woolen and worsted yarns, and all manufactures of every description composed wholly or in part of worsted, wool, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, not specially provided for in this act, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound; valued at above 40 cents and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound; valued at above 60 cents per pound, 50 cents per pound; and in addition thereto upon all of the above-named articles, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Clothing, ready-made; cloaks, dolmans, jackets, talmas, ulsters, or other outside garments, and wearing apparel of every description, not specially enumerated or otherwise provided for, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, or the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part, by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, 60 cents per pound and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, gimps, cords, cords and tassels, dress trimmings, head-nets, buttons or barrel buttons, or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, wrought by hand or braided by machinery, made of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, or of which wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals is a component material, 50 cents per pound and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Bunting, 10 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, and goods of like description, composed in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, 8 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all such goods weighing over 4 ounces per square yard shall pay a duty of 50 cents per pound and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, and goods of like description, composed wholly of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, or of a mixture of them, 12 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem, but all such goods with selvedges made wholly or in part of other materials, and all such goods with threads made wholly or in part of other materials, introduced for the purpose of changing the classification, shall be dutiable at 12 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all such goods weighing over 4 ounces per square yard shall pay a duty of 50 cents per pound and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Endless belts or felts, for paper or printing machines, 25 cents per pound and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Aubusson, Axminster, Moquette, and chenille carpets, carpets woven whole for rooms, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 60 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, 60 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Brussels carpets, 40 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Patent velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, 35 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Tapestry Brussels carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, 25 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Treble ingrain, three-ply, and worsted-chain Venetian carpets, 15 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Yarn Venetian and two-ply ingrain carpets, 10 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, 25 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Hemp or jute carpeting, 7 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Carpets and carpetings of wool, flax, or cotton, or parts of either or other material, not otherwise herein specified, 5 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem; and mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, and other portions of carpets or carpetings shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpetings of like character or description; and the duty on all other mats not exclusively of vegetable material, screens, hassocks, and rugs, shall be 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Hon. Columbus Delano, of Ohio, president of the Wool Growers' Association; William Whitman, of Boston, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, and Edward A. Greene, of Philadelphia, president of the Philadelphia Wool Merchants' Association, were appointed by the conference a committee to present to Congress the schedule of proposed duties herewith agreed on by the conference this day.

By direction of the conference.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I submit the privileged resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House be authorized to refer to the appropriate committees of the House the bills now on the House Private Calendar reported by the Court of Claims in the Forty-ninth Congress and brought forward.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. REED. I would like to hear something about that.

Mr. TAULBEE. The object of this resolution is to give the committees having jurisdiction of the bills now on the Private Calendar an opportunity to consider the facts before they are called upon to defend or advocate the passage of bills in the House. These are bills referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act for the ascertainment of facts on which Congress and its committees are presumed to act. They are reported back to the House with the findings of fact, and there is no rule of the House heretofore authorizing their reference to the proper committees. The object of this resolution is to give the committees an opportunity to examine the facts found and reported by the Court of Claims, and to recommend to the House such action on the bills as they may think proper.

I do not think any plausible objection can be urged to the passage of the resolution. I find that the committee on which I have the honor to serve is in the dilemma of being expected by the House to give it information with reference to the facts connected with the bills on the Calendar when reached in their regular order, and I further find the fact that this committee has had no opportunity whatever under the rules of the House to consider the facts upon which they are expected to act. I for one am unwilling to be put in that attitude, and I presume other gentlemen serving on these committees are also unwilling to be put in the attitude of defending these bills when they have not had an opportunity of properly considering the facts. This is the object of the resolution, and these are the reasons for its adoption.

Mr. REED. One objection which occurs to me to the resolution as it is formulated is that these cases which should have precedence by being referred to committees will thereby lose their places on the Calendar. It seems to me that after they have gone through a court, and the ascertainment of facts having been made, if they are to be examined by a committee who are to report as to what should be the action of the House, some provision should be made for their retaining their places. I therefore suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky the propriety of making such modification of his resolution as will secure that object.

Mr. TAULBEE rose.

Mr. BAYNE. Before the gentleman from Kentucky proceeds I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. Is this resolution still subject to objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky offered the resolution as a question of privilege connected with the business of the House. That question has not been decided yet.

Mr. BAYNE. Then the question whether the resolution presents a matter of privilege is still open?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution is still subject to the point of order whether or not it presents a question of privilege.

Mr. BAYNE. And also subject to the question of consideration if it should be decided to present a question of privilege.

Mr. TAULBEE. I make the point of order that the House has proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no. I was on my feet some time ago to make the point suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. REED. The Chair was about to ask consent when I interrupted him with my inquiry. Thus far the matter has proceeded informally.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to make this statement, that I have no purpose whatever to rob any of these claims of their position on the Calendar. I see no impropriety in the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, and am willing to agree to an amendment to the effect that when these bills are reported back from the various committees they shall have the precedence on the Calendar which they would have had if they had been left on the Calendar. I have no objection to that proposition, but I think the House should pass this resolution either with or without that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the Chair decide that this resolution presents a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not decided yet.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to hear the Chair's decision as to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On what grounds does the gentleman from Kentucky claim this is a matter of privilege?

Mr. TAULBEE. On the ground that it relates to the business of the House and obviates confusion in its transaction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not consider that under the rule the resolution presents a question of privilege.

Mr. WILKINS. Regular order!

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that this question was settled by the Speaker upon the 20th day of December last, upon a parliamentary point which was then raised. The matter, I say, was settled, and the Speaker ordered these claims upon the Calendar just as they now appear.

Mr. TAULBEE. I was aware of that ruling, but this resolution is designed to accomplish an entirely different object, namely, to allow the committee having jurisdiction of these matters authority to consider them before they are taken up by the House for consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They have all been considered.

Mr. BAYNE and other members. Regular order!

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of the committees for reports.

CIRCUIT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 1245) making an appropriation for continuing the construction of a light-house on Northwest Seal Rock, off Point St. George, California, and asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was so ordered.

BRIDGE AT MEMPHIS.

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2927) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL NOBLE.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 53) for the relief of Samuel Noble; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF CUMBERLAND RIVER.

Mr. WILKINS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a measure which will take but a moment.

Mr. WILKINS. If it takes but a moment I will not press the call for the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the resolution causes prolonged discussion I will withdraw it. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. It has been reported unanimously this morning from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I will explain the object of the resolution. Two years ago an appropriation was made for continuing certain works of improvement on the Cumberland River. The last appropriation bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors contained a clause authorizing the acquisition of title to lands necessary for this improvement; but that bill failed. This resolution seeks to obviate the existing difficulty by giving those prosecuting the work authority to acquire title to the land on which to place the locks and dams. It is recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors," approved August 5, 1886, as relates to the "improvement of the Cumberland River, Tennessee and Kentucky, continuing improvement above Nashville with a view to secure in the channel a depth of 4 feet commencing with the lock at or near the lower island at Nashville, $75,000," be so construed as to authorize the expenditure of such part of the said money appropriated by said act, or any other money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as may be necessary for such purpose, in the purchase voluntarily or by condemnation as the case may be, of necessary sites for locks and dams and purposes necessary thereto, including keepers' dwellings, etc.: Provided, That such expenditure shall be under the direction of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That if the owners of such lands shall refuse to sell them at a reasonable price, then the prices to be paid shall be determined, and the title and jurisdiction procured, in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State in which such lands are situated.

The committee to whom was referred the resolution to authorize the purchase of the lands necessary for the construction of locks and dams on the Cumberland River, having considered the same, find that an appropriation was heretofore made for this work of constructing locks and dams on the Cumberland River; that the river and harbor bill which passed the House and Senate but failed to become a law at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress contained a section giving the authority hereby recommended, and that the Chief of Engineers recommends this resolution. The committee find that the work can not be prosecuted or the money heretofore appropriated be used without the passage of this measure. Your committee therefore report the same back with a recommendation that it pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. I think a statement had better be made by the gentleman from Tennessee of the exact purpose of this resolution, whether it proposes to make a new appropriation by enacting a clause which was contained in the appropriation bill of last year which failed, or whether it applies solely to the acquisition of lands.

Mr. McMILLIN. I realize the importance of satisfactorily answering the gentleman's question, and will make the proper statement.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is this proposition still subject to objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will make a statement which I think will satisfy my friend from Illinois and all other gentlemen. The facts are these: The appropriation has been made. It was not contained in the appropriation bill which failed last year, but was made in the appropriation bill of the year before, which became a law. The object of this proposition is simply to acquire title to the land, so that the appropriation heretofore made can be used in the improvement of the river. At present the appropriation is locked up, and can not be used without the adoption of this resolution, which is, as I stated before, recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is not this case similar to the case of all other appropriations in the last river and harbor bill? Are they not all locked up so that they can not be used?

Mr. McMILLIN. My friend is in error. This appropriation was not embraced in the last river and harbor appropriation bill. It is already a law, having been included in the act passed two years ago. The difficulty is that there is no authority to acquire title to the land necessary to continue the work.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then this is new legislation by which you propose to put the improvements upon this river ahead of all other similar appropriations.

Mr. McMILLIN. Not at all. The other works are not standing in the same situation.

Mr. DUNHAM. I have no wish to object to the consideration of this resolution, but desire the House to vote upon it understandingly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to my friend that this resolution does not seek to make any additional appropriation for the improvement of any river. It simply proposes to authorize the Government to acquire title to the lands necessary to use the appropriation heretofore made.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What will that cost?

Mr. McMILLIN. I can not say. I suppose not $500 to the site. The amount of money involved is insignificant. The necessary land could, I think, have been obtained by donation, but there was no authority on the part of the Government to accept it. This provides that the Government shall acquire the land either by donation or by purchase, and if it can not be purchased that the land shall be condemned in accordance with law. No new appropriation is sought in the resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it the intention that the United States Government shall finally buy any land there?

Mr. McMILLIN. Only the necessary banks on which to put the works near the water's edge.

Mr. DUNHAM. In the section in which I reside the engineers recommend that a river should not be improved until the owners of the bordering land had deeded free to the Government all the necessary property.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important work. We have above Nashville more than 300 miles of one of the richest valleys on the continent, peopled with a magnificent population dependent on this river and this work for transportation, and I hope the House will pass the resolution to-day, that the work may go on.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, in the last river and harbor appropriation bill which became a law an appropriation was made for certain improvements on the Cumberland River. It was found by the engineers that the improvements contemplated could not be made without acquiring certain pieces of ground upon which to locate, I believe, the locks which the plan of improvement provided should be erected in the river.

It was also found that under the law as it stands the Government of the United States could not buy or even accept a donation of the land needed for the purpose, and it was impossible, therefore, on the part of the Engineer Bureau to carry out the direction of Congress for the improvement of the river. Because of this, in the river and harbor bill which passed both Houses of Congress at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress there was incorporated in the legislative part of the bill a general provision covering all such cases as this; but that bill failed to become a law by reason of not receiving the Presidential signature.

The appropriation for the Cumberland River made two years ago has ever since been locked in the Treasury, and not one farthing of it will be spent for the improvement of the river at this point unless this resolution is passed. Its passage is recommended by the Engineer Bureau of the Government.

Mr. JACKSON. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Louisiana, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, whether there is not a large number of Government works in process of construction and only partially completed, and where money already expended is liable to be lost if we fail to do what is asked for in this case. Are there not cases which need your help just as much as this proposed improvement does?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunately true that the failure of the river and harbor bill at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress has resulted in serious detriment to the various Government improvements throughout the country; but that has nothing to do with this matter.

This refers to an appropriation made by a preceding river and harbor bill, which did become a law. The trouble here is that the appropriation heretofore made for the Cumberland River is useless without additional legislation, and this resolution supplies that legislation.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman from Louisiana certainly will not claim that this work is any more important than other public works of improvement in precisely the same condition, and why not wait for a general bill? If, however, he does claim that it is necessary to have instant action, why not bring in a general bill covering all these cases?

Mr. BLANCHARD. A general provision will be placed, I take it, by the River and Harbor Committee in the legislative portion of their bill covering such cases as this; but that bill is not likely to become a law until next July. In the mean time the improvement of the Cumberland River, appropriated for two years ago, is stopped, because of the fact that no law permits the officials in charge of the improvement to acquire one or more small pieces of land necessary to the erection of the improvement works contemplated.

Mr. JACKSON. What public necessity is involved there that this should be made a special case over all other public works?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman's question might be answered and his wish subserved by a bill reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, making an appropriation immediately available for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country; but that is a different question from the one we have now before us. This does not involve an additional appropriation for the Cumberland River, but only gives authority to use so much of the existing appropriation as may be necessary to acquire the ground needed to erect the works of improvement.

Other appropriations contained in the river and harbor bill of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress have been expended for the improvements for which they were intended, but here is one appropriation which has not been expended, and which the Government engineers are unable to expend, under the directions of Congress, because there is no law which will enable them to acquire the land required on which to locate their works.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the resolution again read, as I think there is some misunderstanding as to the amount which is appropriated by it.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee in charge of the resolution to the language of the resolution. It uses the words "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." I find nothing in the resolution which limits the amount of money which is to be appropriated; and in that respect I would like to see this language modified. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what would probably be the cost of this work.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not think it would take $500 to acquire the land necessary—certainly, at the very utmost, not more than $1,500 would be required.

Mr. WASHINGTON. And that is taken out of the appropriation of $75,000 made in the last river and harbor bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there will be no limit to the appropriation in this resolution as it is now drawn, as it appropriates whatever may be required out of any money not already appropriated for this purpose. The language, therefore, as it now stands makes an unlimited appropriation of money. I ask that it be modified by striking out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to agreeing to the modification of the resolution. I now yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. WASHINGTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee modifies his resolution, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding about it, he will now state what that modification is.

Mr. McMILLIN. I modify the resolution by striking out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so there will be no fear of exceeding the appropriation heretofore made.

Mr. CUTCHEON. With that modification of the resolution I will not make further objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was the intention at the time the appropriation was made.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, was received from the President, by one of his secretaries.

IMPROVEMENT OF CUMBERLAND RIVER.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only one word in explanation of the resolution. It is not sought to appropriate a single dollar beyond what has already been appropriated at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress for the purpose of a lock and dam on the Cumberland River, beginning at the city of Nashville, for which $75,000 was appropriated. That money now lies in the Treasury; not a dollar of it has been spent, and not a dollar of it can be used until the War Department has some authority from this House to acquire a title for the Government of the United States to the land necessary to locate the locks and dams upon this river.

This is a simple resolution authorizing the Government to acquire title to a little piece of land not exceeding in all human probability one acre in extent. The money which it is proposed to use is that which has already been appropriated, and the amount required and which will be used for the payment of the land is very small, if indeed the Government will have to pay for the land at all, which is questionable.

Having been in conference with gentlemen at Nashville who are especially interested in this improvement, the locking and damming of the river, I have been assured that citizens there stand ready to donate to the Government the little piece of land necessary to build this first lock, dam, and gate-house. But the War Department assured me the other day, when I called there personally upon the subject, that the Attorney-General of the United States has stated that the Government can not and must not accept, even as a deed of gift, the title to this property, which can only be acquired by authority of law from this House.

All we ask, therefore, is to be permitted to acquire title in the name of the Government, so that we can begin the work of improvement. As it is the engineer in charge can not take out a cubic yard of stone or a shovelful of dirt, and our river which so badly needs improvement, and the improvement of which will confer so much benefit upon the commerce of Nashville, opening up hundreds of miles of rich territory, immense fields of cheap coal, vast areas of valuable timber, must be neglected and remain in that condition because the Government has not the right to acquire title to a little piece of land necessary to construct the first lock and dam.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee if a provision was contained, similar to this resolution, in the last river and harbor bill.

Mr. WASHINGTON. This resolution was embodied in the last river and harbor bill at the request of the Engineer department. In the last river and harbor bill the United States Government was authorized to acquire title to the land necessary. But that bill, as the gentleman well knows, failed of becoming a law for lack of the signature of the President, and hence no work has been done during the past year; and I do hope the gentlemen on the other side of the House will make no captious opposition, but let this resolution pass.

Mr. DUNHAM. That bill did not fail for lack of diligence on the part of Congress, did it?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I was not a member of the House then, and am not prepared to state what reason may be assigned for the failure.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee in charge of this resolution allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman says that this will not involve a total expenditure of over $1,500.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is a large estimate; and every dollar expended for this purpose comes out of the appropriation already made. It involves no new appropriation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand the amount appropriated for this improvement is $75,000?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What remedy is there against the expenditure of the whole amount for the site? Would not this permit the Government to expend the whole sum for this site alone?

Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir; I think not. I now ask the previous question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. One moment. There is nothing here to prevent it. My suggestion is to amend the resolution so it shall provide that a portion of $75,000 appropriated not exceeding $1,500 shall be used for this purpose.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not think that this is necessary, Mr. Speaker, and I say so the more readily because under no circumstances or emergency will a new appropriation be made for this purpose.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then why not limit the expenditure?

Mr. McMILLIN. Because I do not see any necessity for it, and I do not wish to make this special by fixing such an amount when in all probability none will be required.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course, the gentleman does not want to limit it. If you do not move the previous question I will offer that amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. JACKSON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. JACKSON. To submit a few remarks upon the pending proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the previous question.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not like to cut off any one, but as I demanded the previous question before the gentleman rose, I will ask him how much time he desires.

Mr. JACKSON. Not exceeding ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I will yield to the gentleman that length of time.

Mr. JACKSON withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORRECTION.

Mr. FELTON. I rise to correct the RECORD. I discover that on page 495 I am recorded as having voted. I did not vote, being paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio demands the regular order, which is the consideration of bills in the morning hour. The call rests with the Committee on Banking and Currency. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the engrossment and third reading of the bill called up by that committee.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to inquire whether the question of consideration can now be raised; and if so, I raise that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to think it would be too late. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, at a previous sitting of the House. As I understand the rule it is at any time in order to raise the question of consideration when the question again comes before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not under the rule in the morning hour for the consideration of bills. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read clause 5 of Rule XXIV, as follows:

After the morning hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees (or the call completed), the Speaker shall again call the committees in regular order for one hour, upon which call each committee, on being named, shall have the right to call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day on either the House or the Union Calendar. And whenever any committee shall have occupied the said hour for one day it shall not be in order for such committee to designate any other proposition for consideration until all the other committees shall have been called in their turn; and when any proposition shall have occupied two hours on this call it shall thereafter remain on the Calendar as unfinished business and be taken up in its order: Provided, That when the hour herein prescribed shall expire while the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is considering a bill, the said committee shall rise without motion therefor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now will the Chair have the kindness to cause to be read the rule with regard to the question of consideration?

Mr. WILKINS. That clearly does not apply to the morning hour. It applies only to the consideration of bills when taken from the Calendar for consideration.

The Clerk read clause 3, of Rule XVI, as follows:

When any motion or proposition is made, the question, Will the House now consider it? shall not be put unless demanded by a member.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I submit that the exact question before the House now is the one made by the gentleman from Ohio as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency when he proposes to call up at this stage of the morning hour a bill which was under consideration on a previous day in the morning hour, and that under the rule it is entirely competent for the House to determine whether it will or will not at this time consider this question.

Under the rule which was first read, suppose that the bill had been considered in this hour, that it had been considered the second time in the morning hour, then suppose it had gone to the Calendar of Unfinished Business, and that two weeks hence or a month hence the House should go to that Calendar; I submit to the Chair that if at that time the House did not wish to consider this bill, but did wish to consider some other bill in preference to it, it would certainly be not only in accordance with the rule but in unison with the established custom of the House that the House should then determine whether or not it should consent to the consideration of this bill. That has been done repeatedly. It is always in the power of the House to raise that question and decide that question.

Suppose this bill were not considered for six months; that the Calendar of Unfinished Business should then be reached; that the gentleman from Ohio should then call this bill up, but that an appropriation bill should be presented to the House or a statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he desired to call up an emergency appropriation, would not the question then be one within the rule? Would not the House then have the liberty to say whether it would consider this bill or would consider the appropriation bill? Now, that state of affairs is precisely analogous to the condition of this motion at this time.

Mr. DUNHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman from Ohio makes a specific motion.

Mr. WILKINS. I have made no motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman makes what is tantamount to a motion. He calls up a specific bill.

Mr. WILKINS. Oh, no; the bill is already up.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman makes something in the nature of a motion, and whatever that something is, this House has a right to say whether it will or will not consider that something.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide the question. The rules which have been read must be taken together. The Chair is of opinion, as has been decided before by the Speaker, that in this morning hour for the consideration of bills, the committee have absolute authority to continue their bill to the end of the morning hour, and that the question of consideration can not be made in that hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. While that is true, it would be competent for the House, would it not, to lay this bill upon the table, to postpone it indefinitely, or to recommit it in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is another question.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the consideration of this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] that the yeas and nays have been already ordered, so that his motion is not in order at this time.

THOBE VS. CARLISLE.

Mr. CRISP. I ask the unanimous consent to interrupt this proceeding for a moment to present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections. I would not make this request only that the committee is in session, and I am obliged to return to the committee-room.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Elections, submitted a report in the case of George H. Thobe vs. John G. Carlisle, from the Sixth district of Kentucky.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for the reading of that report.

Mr. CRISP. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I only wanted to occupy the time.

Mr. CRISP. The report is presented now only to be printed and placed upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

Mr. CRISP. By direction of the Committee on Elections I ask for the minority the privilege of filing their views, the privilege to extend until 2 o'clock to-morrow, and also that their views, when filed, be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRISP. I give notice now to the House that I hope they will be ready by Friday, at furthest, to consider this case.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that my only object in calling for the reading of the report was simply to use up the morning hour. I did not care to hear the report read at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman's request in that light.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILKINS. I wish to know whether this time that has been occupied on the question of order comes out of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to lay the pending bill on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that there is another motion now pending, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. Does that cut off the right to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be recognized for that purpose after the yeas and nays are taken.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. WILKINS. If the gentleman will permit me, I think I can offer a solution of this whole difficulty.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will do so.

Mr. WILKINS. If the gentleman will permit me to make one statement, I think I can.

Mr. WEAVER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion to adjourn, if it is insisted upon.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I withdraw the motion to adjourn in order to give the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] an opportunity to make his statement.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, when this House adjourned last Thursday it had under consideration the bill that we seek to bring up this morning. On that day I moved the previous question upon that bill. This morning, with the consent of the House, I desire to withdraw the demand for the previous question. I propose to yield the floor and let discussion go on until the expiration of the morning hour rather than that this House and the country should be treated to a spectacle of statesmanship such as that which we had here last Thursday, filibustering a bill that the majority of this House desired to pass. With the consent of the House, then, I will withdraw the demand for the previous question, yield the floor, and let the gentlemen who oppose the bill take the floor and go on with the discussion until the expiration of the morning hour. That ends the matter.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

Mr. WILKINS. Very well; the gentlemen can go on filibustering.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. So far as filibustering is concerned, you have made an attempt here to gag the House.

Mr. WILKINS. No, sir; there is no such disposition. I appeal to the House as to whether I have made any attempt to gag anybody.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, well, that is the effect of it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gagging has been on the other side.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the Chair state precisely the present position of affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the position of the question. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the demand for the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I insist on my motion that this bill lie on the table—a motion which takes precedence of the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the yeas and nays have been already ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. But the call had not commenced; and the motion to lay on the table takes precedence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only motion in order would be to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered the yeas and nays.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I move to reconsider that vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] will insist on pressing this measure to a vote——

Mr. WILKINS. I shall.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. And let gentlemen on the other side take the responsibility of the manner in which they are opposing it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. So far as I am concerned——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] moves to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered upon ordering the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the pending bill.

The question being taken there were—ayes 14, noes 144.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. WILKINS. No quorum is necessary on this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is necessary on the motion to reconsider. No quorum having appeared, the Chair will order tellers. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. May we not have the yeas and nays upon this question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Regular order!

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let us have the yeas and nays. I call for them.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WILKINS. I now move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider. That is in order, I believe.

Mr. WEAVER. The point of "no quorum" has been made, and the House is about to divide by tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair directed the tellers to take their places, no quorum having voted.

The House again divided; and the tellers proceeded to count the vote.

Mr. WILKINS. I appeal to the gentleman from Iowa whether he will not consent to consider the morning hour as now closed, or to let it run on until it is closed, and he can do what he likes with it—continue the discussion if he pleases—and then at the close of the morning hour let this bill go upon the Calendar as unfinished business. That is all our side of the House desires. I am, myself, not unwilling that shall be done.

Mr. WEAVER. That is not the appeal made by the gentleman from Ohio awhile ago. If he now wishes it to go upon the Calendar as unfinished business, why let it go there. That was not his proposition; but now if he proposes to let it go over as unfinished business I do not know that I shall make any objection.

Mr. WILKINS. When I made my statement in the beginning, I offered to withdraw the demand for the previous question. If it be now considered by unanimous consent that at the expiration of the morning hour this bill shall go over as unfinished business, I am willing to yield the floor to the gentleman from Iowa and let him control what remains of the morning hour as he pleases.

Mr. WEAVER. I was dealing with it as I pleased. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILKINS. The gentleman says there was no arrangement proposed to him——

Mr. WEAVER. I do not say that——

Mr. WILKINS. By which this bill might go over.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not say that. I merely took the floor and made this motion. If the gentleman wants it to go over as unfinished business, I have no objection; none at all.

Mr. WILKINS. It is understood, then, that the morning hour is now closed.

Mr. WEAVER. There is no understanding about it. The tellers are still counting the vote, and the House is still dividing.

Mr. WILKINS. The tellers have gotten through with the count, and I ask that the vote be announced by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers report ayes 12, noes 151. So the House refuses to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But this is a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered on the demand for the previous question, and the yeas and nays have been refused.

Mr. WEAVER. But I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I demanded the yeas and nays and they were refused.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to lay this bill upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already decided, after the yeas and nays have been ordered, that motion is not in order.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. The point I make is, that the motion to lay on the table takes precedence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no doubt, up to a certain point, the motion to lay on the table does take precedence. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chair understands some names were called and some responses were made.

Mr. WEAVER. The Clerk had not begun the call of the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk states that the call had been begun. There is at least no official recognition of the fact. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WEAVER. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the gentleman's motion is out of order.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Pending that motion, I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The House divided; and there were—ayes none, noes 38.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as tellers Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. WILKINS.

Mr. WILKINS. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I suggest, by unanimous consent, the morning hour be considered as having expired.

Mr. WILKINS. I hope that will be done.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. We are simply performing for the amusement of the galleries.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object to the gentleman debating the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the morning hour being considered as having expired?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WILKINS. I move to take up the unfinished business for consideration. It is the bill (H. R. 1733) to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national banking associations.

Mr. WEAVER. I move when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It is whether it is not now in order to raise the question of consideration against this bill?

Mr. WEAVER. There is no question about that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If it is in order, I raise that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. WEAVER. I withdraw that motion temporarily.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I raise the question of consideration against this bill, and on that motion would like to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House now consider the bill which comes over as unfinished business?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 119, noes 10.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. WEAVER. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under clause 6 of Rule XXIV it is provided as follows:

> After the hour under the preceding clause shall have been occupied—

That is, the hour for consideration—> it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at the adjournment.

Now, I do not understand that this presents that kind of a question. This is not unfinished business of the character contemplated by the rule, or business in which the House was engaged at adjournment. It is simply unfinished business under the morning hour for consideration, and goes on the Calendar without any special privileges.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that he has not read the latter part of this clause.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will read it. The last clause is:

> And it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

That, however, the gentleman will see has no relation to the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the point of order comes too late. The question of consideration was pending; a motion had been made, and a vote was being taken upon that motion. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. If, however, it should be decided that the House proceeds to consider this, then the point of order would be in time, would it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After that the House would have decided to consider it.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order, which is the motion to adjourn.

PACIFIC LAND-GRANT RAILROAD INVESTIGATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the motion to adjourn the Chair will lay before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 3d day of March last an act was passed authorizing the appointment of three commissioners who should investigate the affairs of such railroads as have received aid from the United States Government. Among other things, the contemplated investigation included a history of the construction of these roads, their relations and indebtedness to the Government, and the question whether, in the interest of the United States, any extension for the time of the performance of the obligations of said roads to the Government should be granted; and if so, the said commissioners were directed to submit a scheme for such extension.

The commissioners were further directed by said act to report in full to the President upon all the matters submitted to them, and he was by said act required to forward said report to Congress with such recommendations or comments as he should see fit to make in the premises.

The commissioners, immediately after their selection, entered upon the discharge of their duties, and have prosecuted their inquiries with commendable industry, intelligence, and thoroughness. A large amount of testimony has been taken, and all the facts have been developed which appear to be necessary for the consideration of the questions arising from the condition of these aided railroads and their relations to the Government.

The commissioners have, however, been unable to agree upon the manner in which these railroads should be treated respecting their indebtedness to the United States, or to unite upon the plan best calculated to secure the payment of such indebtedness.

This disagreement has resulted in the preparation of two reports, both of which are herewith submitted to the Congress.

These reports exhibit such transactions and schemes connected with the construction of the aided roads and their management, and suggest the invention of such devices on the part of those having them in charge, for the apparent purpose of defeating any chance for the Government's reimbursement, that any adjustment or plan of settlement should be predicated upon the substantial interests of the Government rather than any forbearance or generosity deserved by the companies.

The wide publication which has already been given to the substance of the commissioners' reports obviates the necessity of detailing in this communication the facts found upon the investigation.

The majority report, while condemning the methods adopted by those who formerly had charge of the Union Pacific Railroad, declares that since its present management was inaugurated, in 1884, its affairs have been fairly and prudently conducted, and that the present administration "has devoted itself honestly and intelligently to the herculean task of rescuing the Union Pacific Railway from the insolvency which seriously threatened it at the inception of its work; that it has devoted itself, by rigid economy, by intelligent management, and by an application of every dollar of the earning capacity of the system to its improvement and betterment, to place that company on a sound and enduring financial foundation."

The condition of the present management of the Union Pacific Company has an important bearing upon its ability to comply with the terms of any settlement of its indebtedness which may be offered by the Government.

The majority of the commission are in favor of an extension of the time for the payment of the Government indebtedness of these companies, upon certain conditions. But the chairman of the commission, presenting the minority report, recommends, both upon principle and policy, the institution of proceedings for the forfeiture of the charters of the corporations, and the winding up of their affairs.

I have been furnished with a statement, or argument, in defense of the transactions connected with the construction of the Central Pacific Road and its branch lines, from which it may not be amiss to quote, for the purpose of showing how some of the operations of the directors of such road, strongly condemned by the commissioners, are defended by the directors themselves. After speaking of a contract for the construction of one of these branch lines by a corporation, called the Contract and Finance Company, owned by certain directors of the Central Pacific Railroad, this language is used:

"It may be said of this contract, as of many others that were let to the different construction companies, in which the directors of the Central Pacific have been stockholders, that they built the road with the moneys furnished by themselves and had the road for their outlay. In other words, they paid to the construction company the bonds and stock of the railroad so constructed, and waited until such time as they could develop sufficient business on the road built to induce the public to buy the bonds or the stock. If the country through which the railroad ran developed sufficient business, then the project was a success; if it did not, then the operation was a loss. These gentlemen took all the responsibility; any loss occurring was necessarily theirs, and of right the profit belonged to them.

"But it is said that they violated a well-known rule of equity in dealing with themselves; that they were trustees, and that they were representing both sides of the contract.

"The answer is that they did not find anybody else to deal with. They could not find any one who would take the chance of building a road through what was then an almost uninhabited country, and accept the bonds and stock of the road in payment. And when it is said that they were trustees, if they did occupy such relation it was merely technical, for they represented only their own interests on both sides, there being no one else concerned in the transaction. They became the incorporators of the company that was to build the road, subscribed for its stock and were the only subscribers. Therefore it is difficult to see how any one was wronged by their action. The rule of equity invoked, which has its origin in the injunction, no man can serve two masters, certainly did not apply to them, because they were acting in their own interests and were not charged with the duty of caring for others' rights, there being no other persons interested in the subject-matter."

In view of this statement and the facts developed in the Commissioners' reports, it seems proper to recall the grants and benefits derived from the General Government by both the Union and Central Pacific Companies for the purpose of aiding the construction of their roads.

By an act passed in 1862 it was provided that there should be advanced to said companies by the United States, to aid in such construction, the bonds of the Government amounting to $16,000 for every mile constructed, as often as a section of 40 miles of said roads should be built; that there should also be granted to said companies upon the completion of every said section of 40 miles of road five entire sections of public land for each mile so built; that the entire charges earned by said roads on account of transportation and service for the Government should be applied to the reimbursement of the bonds advanced by the United States and the interest thereon; and that to secure the repayment of the bonds so advanced, and interest, the issue and delivery to said companies of said bonds should constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of their roads, and on their rolling stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description.

The liberal donations, advances, and privileges provided for in this law were granted by the General Government for the purpose of securing the construction of these roads, which would complete the connection between our eastern and western coasts; and they were based upon a consideration of the public benefits which would accrue to the entire country from such construction.

But the projectors of these roads were not content, and the sentiment which then seemed to pervade the Congress had not reached the limit of its generosity. Two years after the passage of this law it was supplemented and amended in various important particulars in favor of these companies by an act which provided, among other things, that the bonds, at the rate already specified, should be delivered upon the completion of sections of 20 miles in length, instead of 40; that the lands to be conveyed to said companies on the completion of each section of said roads should be ten sections per mile instead of five; that only half of the charges for transportation and service due from time to time from the United States should be retained and applied to the advances made to said companies by the Government—thus obliging immediate payment to its debtor of the other half of said charges—and that the lien of the United States to secure the reimbursement of the amount advanced to said companies in bonds, which lien was declared by the law of 1862 to constitute a first mortgage upon all the property of said companies, should become a junior lien and be subordinated to a mortgage which the companies were by the amendatory act authorized to execute to secure bonds which they might from time to time issue in sums not exceeding the amount of the United States bonds which should be advanced to them.

The immense advantages to the companies of this amendatory act are apparent; and in these days we may well wonder that even the anticipated public importance of the construction of these roads induced what must now appear to be a rather reckless and unguarded appropriation of the public funds and the public domain.

Under the operation of these laws the principal of the bonds which have been advanced is $64,623,512, as given in the reports of the commissioners; the interest to November 1, 1887, is calculated to be $76,024,206.58, making an aggregate at the date named of $140,047,718.58. The interest calculated to the maturity of the bonds added to the principal produces an aggregate of $178,884,759.50. Against these amounts there has been repaid by the companies the sum of $30,955,039.61.

It is almost needless to state that the companies have availed themselves to the utmost extent of the permission given them to issue their bonds and to mortgage their property to secure the payment of the same, by an incumbrance having preference of the Government's lien and precisely equal to it in amount.

It will be seen that there was available for the building of each mile of these roads $16,000 of United States bonds, due in thirty years, with 6 per cent. interest; $16,000 in bonds of the companies, secured by a first mortgage on all their property, and ten sections of Government land, to say nothing of the stock of the companies.

When the relations created between the Government and these companies by the legislation referred to are considered, it is astonishing that the claim should be made that the directors of these roads owed no duty except to themselves in their construction; that they need regard no interests but their own, and that they were justified in contracting with themselves and making such bargains as resulted in conveying to their pockets all the assets of the companies. As a lienor the Government was vitally interested in the amount of the mortgage to which its security had been subordinated; and it had the right to insist that none of the bonds secured by this prior mortgage should be issued fraudulently or for the purpose of division among the stockholders without consideration.

The doctrine of complete independence on the part of the directors of these companies and their freedom from any obligation to care for other interests than their own in the construction of these roads seems to have developed the natural consequences of its application, portrayed as follows in the majority report of the commissioners:

"The result is that those who have controlled and directed the construction and development of these companies have become possessed of their surplus assets through issues of bonds, stocks, and payment of dividends voted by themselves, while the great creditor, the United States, finds itself substantially without adequate security for the repayment of its loans."

The laws enacted in aid of these roads, while they illustrated a profuse liberality and a generous surrender of the Government's advantages, which it is hoped experience has corrected, were nevertheless passed upon the theory that the roads should be constructed according to the common rules of business fairness and duty, and that their value and their ability to pay their debts should not be impaired by unfair manipulations; and when the Government subordinated its lien to another it was in the expectation that the prior lien would represent in its amount only such bonds as should be necessarily issued by the companies for the construction of their roads at fair prices, agreed upon in an honest way between real and substantial parties. For the purpose of saving or improving the security afforded by its junior lien the Government should have the right now to purge this paramount lien of all that is fraudulent, fictitious, or unconscionable. If the transfer to innocent hands of bonds of this character secured by such first mortgage prevents their cancellation, it might be well to seek a remedy against those who issued and transferred them. If legislation is needed to secure such a remedy, the Congress can readily supply it.

I desire to call attention also to the fact that if all that was to be done on the part of the Government to fully vest in these companies the grants and advantages contemplated by the acts passed in their interest, has not yet been perfected, and if the failure of such companies to perform in good faith their part of the contract justifies such a course, the power rests with the Congress to withhold further performance on the part of the Government. If donated lands are not yet granted to these companies, and if their violations of contract and of duty are such as in justice and morals forfeit their rights to such lands, Congressional action should intervene and prevent further consummation. Executive power must be exercised according to existing laws, and executive discretion is probably not broad enough to reach such difficulties.

The California and Oregon Railroad is now a part of the Central Pacific system, and is a land-grant road. Its construction has been carried on with the same features and incidents which have characterized the other constructions of this system, as is made apparent on pages 78, 79, and 80 of the report of the majority of the commissioners. I have in my hands for approval the report of commissioners appointed to examine two completed sections of this road. Upon such approval the company, or the Central Pacific Company, will be entitled to patents for a large quantity of public lands. I especially commend to the attention of Congress this condition of affairs, in order that it may determine whether or not it should intervene to save these lands for settlers, if such a course is justifiable.

It is quite time that the troublesome complications surrounding this entire subject, which has been transmitted to us as a legacy from former days, should be adjusted and settled.

No one, I think, expects that these railroad companies will be able to pay their immense indebtedness to the Government at its maturity.

Any proceeding or arrangement that would result now, or at any other time, in putting these roads, or any portion of them, in the possession and control of the Government, is, in my opinion, to be rejected—certainly as long as there is the least chance for indemnification through any other means.

I suppose we are hardly justified in indulging the irritation and indignation naturally arising from a contemplation of malfeasance, to such an extent as to lead to the useless destruction of these roads or the loss of the advances made by the Government. I believe that our efforts should be in a more practical direction, and should tend, with no condonation of wrong-doing, to the collection by the Government, on behalf of the people, of the public money now in jeopardy.

While the plan presented by a majority of the commission appears to be well devised and gives at least partial promise of the results sought, the fact will not escape attention that its success depends upon its acceptance by the companies and their ability to perform its conditions after acceptance. It is exceedingly important that any adjustment now made should be final and effective. These considerations suggest the possibility that the remedy proposed in the majority report might well be applied to a part only of these aided railroad companies.

The settlement and determination of the questions involved are peculiarly within the province of the Congress. The subject has been made quite a familiar one by Congressional discussion. This is now supplemented in a valuable manner by the facts presented in the reports herewith submitted.

The public interest urges prompt and efficient action.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 17, 1888.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask whether the report, spoken of there, embraces the minority as well as the majority report. Are the two to be printed together with the message?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a note appended to this message which may indicate the papers which accompany it. The Chair will cause the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

NOTE.—The testimony taken by the commission accompanies the copy of this message to the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My motion is to print both of the reports with the accompanying message.

Mr. HOLMAN. The testimony will be printed by the Senate, having been referred to that body.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us hear the exact language of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HOLMES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMES. Does the motion embrace the printing of the evidence also?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has gone to the Senate, and the Chair is informed will be printed there, according to custom.

Mr. NELSON. Let us understand whether this motion will include the printing of the minority report of Governor Pattison?

Mr. RANDALL. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My motion is to print both reports, and the accompanying message of the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understood, and supposes that the testimony will be printed by order of the Senate, and accompany the reports.

Mr. HOLMAN. The testimony having been referred to the Senate, it will be printed by that body, and if an order were made by the House now it would simply duplicate this printing.

Mr. RANDALL. The question is, are the two reports here with the message, so that they may be printed together?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that both are here and in print.

The motion of Mr. RICHARDSON was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he had perhaps better have a larger number of the copies of the reports printed than is usually the case, as these are very important.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would necessarily go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was going to offer a resolution to print extra copies, and ask its reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will permit me I will submit this resolution:

That 10,000 copies of the President's message, and the accompanying reports of the Pacific Railway Commission, be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I trust my friend will not order so many that we will never get the reports from the office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection this resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me a moment, to offer a resolution?

Mr. WEAVER. I will temporarily withdraw the motion to adjourn for that purpose.

PRINTING PRESENT TARIFF LAW.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to offer the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House 10,000 copies of the tariff law as now in force.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. Pending the motion to adjourn, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion has been voted down, and it is not in order.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday.

The question being taken on Mr. WEAVER's motion, there were—ayes 3, noes 92.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. WILKINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were 7 in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. WILKINS. Count the other side.

The negative vote being taken, there were—noes 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote, the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is not required to order the yeas and nays. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Friday next.

The question was taken; and there were—yea 1, nays 248, not voting 74, as follows:

YEA—1.

Smith.

NAYS—248.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GAINES.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. WHITE, of New York.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. BACON with Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR.

Mr. CATCHINGS with Mr. HOUK.

For this day:

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. BAKER, of New York.

Mr. FRENCH with Mr. GEAR.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, with Mr. JACKSON.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to state that my colleague from Indiana [Mr.

JOHNSTON] is absent attending a meeting of the Committee on Elections. If present, he would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the consideration of this bill be indefinitely postponed; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DUNHAM. How long are these gentlemen going to carry on this kind of a deal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not answer that question. The Chair would decide that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa for indefinite postponement is not in order at this time, pending the motion for the previous question. The Chair will have the rule read.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the question of consideration is withdrawn would the motion to indefinitely postpone not then be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not decide suppositious cases.

The Clerk read clause 4 of Rule XVI, as follows:

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motion shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order, and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to lay the pending motion on the table; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided that proposition; that it is not in order when the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. What is the pending motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I submit to the Chair that that is a mistake. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa is to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The question of consideration has been raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the unfinished business be disposed of? What is the unfinished business? Is it not the engrossment and third reading of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But when that question was stated I raised the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is, Shall the unfinished business be now considered?

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER called for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 148, noes 58.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we should have the yeas and nays. Let the sense of the House on this bill be taken right now.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 66 members voting therefor.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the Chair please state the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the consideration of this bill. Shall the bill be now considered?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 98, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—143.

So the House decided to consider the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. There have been so many changes in the vote that I think the names had better be read.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. MILLS with Mr. BUCHANAN, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. WEAVER. Pending that motion, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was rejected—ayes 102, noes 107.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Tellers are asked for. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 92.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 130, not voting 93; as follows:

YEAS—100.

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following proceedings took place:

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. My colleague [Mr. BREWER] is detained at his room by sickness. If he were here, he would vote "no."

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the hall when his name was called?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I was not in, but let me explain. I understand that the Committee on Elections have permission to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a good excuse for not voting, but the Chair can not entertain the request of the gentleman to be allowed to vote now.

Mr. MAISH. I voted under the apprehension that I had a right to vote because the Committee on Elections has leave to sit whilst the House is in session. I am, however, in the same position as the gentleman from Virginia, and I therefore ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to say that if I had been present when my name was called, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. WILKINS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. WEAVER objected.

The following additional pairs, for the rest of the day, were announced:

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. BIGGS with Mr. FELTON.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. FARQUHAR.

Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. STRUBLE.

Mr. YOST with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. GIBSON with Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. WISE with Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. BRUMM, on this question.

The result of the vote was announced, as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] for a recess.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If the House will permit me to make a suggestion, by unanimous consent——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. WILKINS. I hope the gentleman from Kansas may be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. After conversation with the gentleman in charge of the bill, I wish to say—and I am speaking only for myself—that I have been working to obtain debate and an opportunity to present amendments to this bill. As I understand the gentleman, he is now willing for that——

Mr. CUTCHEON. He offered such opportunity several hours ago.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no. The demand for the previous question was pending all the time.

Mr. WEAVER. We can not hear what is being said.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House seems to be in admirable order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether it would be agreeable to him that when this bill comes up again—it is now late—there shall be opportunity for debate and for offering amendments.

Mr. WILKINS. Most assuredly. I have said that all the time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not so understand. The gentleman has constantly had the previous question pending.

Mr. WILKINS. I have offered to withdraw the previous question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes; but you would not agree that we should amend.

Mr. WILKINS. I am quite willing that the gentleman shall discuss and amend to his heart's content.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is what we could not do with your motion pending for the previous question. Now, I make the suggestion for myself only, that the House adjourn—it is now late—and when this bill comes up again that the gentleman allow us opportunity for debate and amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say for one that I am not willing to make any agreement which will facilitate the passage of this bill, a measure which I believe to be pernicious. I have no objection to a season of debate on the bill when it comes up again, but I notify the gentleman from Ohio and the House now, that I shall try to defeat this bill. If not able to do so otherwise, I shall try to accomplish that end by applying properly the parliamentary rules of this House. To defeat the measure is my object, and I will not under any circumstances agree to any course which will facilitate its passage.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Allow me to say——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Just a moment. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and the gentleman from Kansas is out of order. The question is on the gentleman's motion that the House take a recess till 8 o'clock this evening.

The question being taken, the motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes none, noes 171.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for a division.

Mr. WEAVER. I now move that the House adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 322) to authorize the Southwestern Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Ouachita River, in Arkansas;

A bill (S. 426) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservoirs;

A bill (S. 447) to amend the laws relating to inspection of steam-vessels; and

A bill (S. 928) in relation to marriage between white men and Indian women.

Mr. WILKINS. It has been demonstrated we have votes enough to carry this bill, and therefore I move the House adjourn

The motion of Mr. WILKINS was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 18, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INDIAN MARRIAGES.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill reported by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] was passed yesterday. I was not aware of the fact that it had been passed until the Journal was read. I ask the Secretary to read the title of the bill. It relates to the marriage of white men and Indian women.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 928) in relation to marriage between white men and Indian women.

Mr. BUTLER. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

Mr. BUTLER. I have just been informed that the bill has been sent to the House of Representatives. I move that the bill be recalled from the House, if that is the proper motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the House of Representatives will be requested to return the bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, with correspondence on the subject of the purchase of needed supplies from Indians at the Uintah and Ouray agency, Utah, and recommending such legislation as will permit the Quartermaster's Department to purchase direct from the Indians hay, grain, etc., which they offer at market prices in the vicinity of Indian posts; which, on motion of Mr. DAWES, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 4, 1888, certain information relating to the volunteer company enlisted in the State of California of which Julian (or Julius) Martin was captain; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 81) to authorize the purchase of the lands necessary for the construction of locks and dams on the Cumberland River, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by a mass meeting of the citizens of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the passage of such laws as shall effectually exclude the Chinese from any entrance whatever in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Burlington, Iowa, the Chicago (Illinois) Lumberman's Exchange, and the mayor and city council of Burlington, Iowa, in favor of the proposed world's exposition to be held in Washington, D. C.; which were referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. FARWELL presented a memorial of citizens of Bureau County, Illinois, remonstrating against the repeal of the internal-revenue taxes, and favoring a repeal of the duties on sugar, salt, lumber, wool, woolens, leather, iron, steel, and coal; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of Isaac Sharpless, president, and other members of the faculty of Haverford College, at Haverford, Pa., praying for the speedy enactment of an international copyright law; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of the heirs of the late Dr. Henry Perrine, who was massacred during the Seminole Indian war, praying for certain relief; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BUTLER presented a letter from R. A. Tavel, secretary of the Charleston (S. C.) Exchange, indorsing the proposed constitutional centennial celebration in 1889, the world's exposition in 1892, and a permanent exposition of the two Americas; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of James L. Barbour and other residents of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1060, to authorize the construction of the proposed Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of E. C. Dean and other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1054, for the construction of the proposed Rock Creek Railway; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of George Truesdell and other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1063, to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at Woodley Road, in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of Ella M. Grover, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Cuvier Grover, late colonel First Regiment Cavalry, United States Army, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants' Exchange, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the protection of manufacturers and consumers of lard against the adulteration of that article. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PADDOCK. Similar petitions which have been presented in relation to the adulteration of lard were referred to the Committee on Agriculture, which is considering that subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that reference; but I will inform the Senator from Nebraska that the Committee on Finance is now considering a bill of great importance, prepared for the purpose of applying to all adulterations of food, whether the article be imported into the United States or be manufactured or made in the United States. While the subject itself is now under consideration by the Committee on Finance, I have no objection to this petition in respect to lard, a single article, being referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PADDOCK. A bill on the subject of the adulteration of lard is under consideration at the present time by that committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I have no objection to the reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of the Marietta (Ohio) Centennial Monument Association, praying for pecuniary aid in erecting a centennial monumental structure to commemorate the acquisition of the Northwest territory and its permanent settlement, etc. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on the Library, and invite the attention of that committee to the statements made in the petition.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE presented a petition of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' Exchange, praying for the passage of a law to prevent the adulteration of lard; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of 62 citizens of Astoria, Oregon, praying for the prohibition of the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the bill known as the Blair educational bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of the Twenty-first Congressional district of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill for the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and importation of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 103 citizens of the Eleventh Congressional district of Illinois, praying for the prohibition of the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of 78 citizens of the Fourth Congressional district of Missouri, praying for the passage of the bill prohibiting the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of Charles E. Malstrom, of Utah County, Territory of Utah, protesting against the admission of Utah into the Union; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

PASSPORT FEE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1027) to fix the charge for passports at $1, to report it favorably, without amendment, and as it is but three lines long, and its object will at once be seen, I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Ohio asks for its present consideration?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. It will take but a moment. I think a similar bill has passed the Senate once or twice before, and there will be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that a fee of $1 shall be collected for each citizen's passport issued from the Department of State.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the fee now—$5?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is $5. The bill has been recommended several times by the Department of State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. B. WILSON.

Mr. QUAY. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 81) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased, to report it favorably, without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill may now be considered. A similar bill has passed the Senate twice, but has failed for the want of consideration in the House of Representatives. There can not be a question as to the propriety of its passage in the mind of any Senator when he understands the facts.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read for information, reserving the right to object.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, let it be read for information, subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury refund and pay to H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, in full satisfaction of the claim of the estate of the said Tinder for money paid by said estate upon a judgment of forfeiture upon a bond for the appearance of one Evans, who was charged with crime by indictment in the circuit court of the United States for the district of West Tennessee, and who was afterward captured by the said administrator and returned to the custody of the court, and convicted and punished for the crime with which he was charged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that the bill may now be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to object to this bill, but it is the second bill which has been brought here from committees this morning that we have been asked to consider at once. I shall not object to this, but I want to say now that hereafter I shall object to all bills being considered in this way.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 280) donating to the city of St. Louis, Mo., a certain strip of land for street purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 314) for the relief of Henry M. Rector, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLODGETT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John McGrath, praying an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 1512) granting an increase of pension to John McGrath; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 741) for the relief of William Tabb, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 576) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1057) to settle and adjust the claims of any State for expenses incurred by it in defense of the United States, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the amendments proposed by the committee be read now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported from the Committee on Claims will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

We recommend that the bill be amended by striking out in the third line the words "proper accounting officers" and inserting the word "secretary," and by striking out "they are," in the fourth line, and inserting "he is;" and that the bill so amended do pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a petition of 99 ex-soldiers and citizens of Centralia, Ill., praying that John Prendergast may be restored to the pension-roll, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 330) granting a pension to Marion Varngordon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 331) granting a pension to John Kalbfleisch, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a paper relating to the bill for the relief of Henry Pickett, of Washington, D. C., for services as teamster in the Quartermaster's Department, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 868) for the relief of Paymaster James E. Tolfree, United States Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 882) for the relief of pay-clerk Charles Blake, United States Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 744) relating to the pay and retirement of the mates in the Navy, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 29) authorizing the appointment of a delegate to the Fourth International Prison Congress, to meet at St. Petersburg, in the year 1890, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1026) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance, to report it favorably without amendment. I wish the Senator from Colorado would allow me to put the bill on its passage.

Mr. TELLER. I do not like to object, but it is very apparent that if bills are to be reported and at once put on their passage, we may find ourselves either engaged in some very improper legislation or the morning hour will be destroyed. As I did not know the Senator from Maine would make this request when I said I should object to the consideration of bills when reported, I must adhere to my objection. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 131) for the relief of Jabez Burchard, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 954) for the relief of the heirs, legal representatives, or legatees of James W. Schaumburg, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MONUMENT TO NEGRO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the Committee on the Library be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 406) making an appropriation for the erection of a monument to the negro soldiers and sailors who gave their lives for the preservation of the Government, which was introduced by me on the 12th of December, and that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The reason for my making this request is that, owing to a want of examination of the statute, the Speaker of the House of Representatives has appointed five members of the Joint Committee on the Library on the part of that House. The duties of that committee are largely fixed by statute, as it is their duty to make regulations for the Library, the Congressional green-house, etc., and the statute provides that the committee shall consist of three members of each branch. Mr. CARLISLE'S attention has been called to the mistake, and he proposes to remedy it at an early day. I understand from the papers that he is ill, and I should like to have the bill placed on the Calendar. A similar bill has been reported from the Committee on the Library at a former session, so that there will be no objection to it on the part of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the Committee on the Library be discharged and the bill placed on the Calendar. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1513) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1514) to establish a national art commission; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1515) granting a pension to Helen Plunkett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1516) to provide for inquests under national authority; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 1517) for the construction of pier lights on the great lakes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1518) for the relief of Maria Black; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 1519) to change the location of a certain alley in the city of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1520) for the relief of certain night inspectors in the customs service of the United States at the ports of New York and Baltimore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAMPTON introduced a bill (S. 1521) for the relief of M. C. Mordecai; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 1522) to amend the national-bank act, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 1523) granting a pension to Isaac Bilby; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 1524) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River between Bridgeport and Sheffield, in the State of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1525) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Cumberland River between Burnside, Ky., and Carthage, in Tennessee, or the south fork of said river between Burnside and Tateville, in Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1526) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Caney Fork River, between Rock Island and Carthage, in Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 1527) for the relief of D. H. Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1528) for the relief of Lipman Meyer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 1529) to amend paragraph 3 of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1530) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Franklin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 1531) for the relief of Evans, Nichols & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1532) for the relief of Thomas S. Brooke & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1533) for the relief of Robert C. Murphy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 1534) to provide for the disposal of the interest received on the Virginius indemnity; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COLQUITT (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1535) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph V. Connerat; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 1536) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 39) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to have struck copies of certain medals, and to deliver the same to certain Departments and to the various States and Territories; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1029) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

CATTLE CLAIMS AGAINST OSAGE INDIANS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report to the Senate all papers, information, and action thereon by the Interior Department relating to the claims of Thomas S. Brooks & Co. and of Evans, Nichols & Co. for and on account of cattle stolen from said parties by the Osage Indians on or about the month of September, 1866.

MATTHEWS'S PORTRAIT OF LINCOLN.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be, and is hereby, directed to inquire into the advisability of purchasing the life-size picture of Abraham Lincoln by William T. Matthews, of New York.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring herein), That there be printed 28,000 copies of the first annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the appendices thereto, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for the use of the commission.

CHARLES R. WESTBROOK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered on a previous day by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The resolution submitted by Mr. HALE, January 17, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General is hereby directed to report to the Senate the facts attending the employment of Charles R. Westbrook as an assistant to the district attorney for the southern district of New York, together with copies of all correspondence on the subject, the emolument paid to him, and the appropriation from which paid, and if the said Westbrook received also extra compensation for any time previous to such employment, he not being a sworn officer of Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered on a previous day by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

The resolution submitted by Mr. MANDERSON, January 17, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to make investigation and report to the Senate what steps have been taken by the Omaha and Council Bluffs Railway and Bridge Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and if he shall find the construction of said bridge has been commenced, to investigate whether said structure is in accord with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1887, and plans and specifications heretofore approved by the Secretary of War, and whether said bridge is being constructed as a combined railway and wagon bridge, or a wagon-bridge only.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have not been able to obtain some information I desire in respect to the resolution, and I therefore ask that it may go over another day. In the mean time I shall probably get the information I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the resolution may lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not object to that postponement. It may be taken up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow. The Calendar will now be proceeded with under the rule.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAX.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to recommit the bill. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have a division. I understand the proposition is to recommit the bill to the committee for further examination and amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Finance. A division is called for.

The ayes were 13——

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better have the yeas and nays, as there may be no quorum on a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are 20 in the negative. Is there a second to the demand for the yeas and nays?

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the call for a division, so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for a division is withdrawn. The "noes" have it. The Senate refuses to recommit the bill. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add:

All claims under the trust hereby created shall be filed with the governor of such State or Territory and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, respectively, within six years next after the passage of this act; and all claims not so filed shall be forever barred, and the money attributable thereto shall belong to such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, respectively, as the case may be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.]

Mr. BERRY. I sent an amendment to the desk when the bill was before the Senate the last time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas rise to speak to the pending amendment?

Mr. BERRY. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to decide from the sound.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment being voted upon is an amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], proposing a statute of limitation, requiring that the claims against the States shall be presented within six years. I see no objection to that amendment. I thought it had better be left to the States entirely without limitation, but still I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the amendment be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next amendment, one offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 11, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert the words "or any other person;" so as to read:

Provided, That where the sums, or any part thereof, credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, have been collected by the United States from the citizens or inhabitants thereof, or any other person, either directly or by sale of property, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 14, after the word "those," it is proposed to strike out the words "of its citizens," and insert the word "persons;" so as to read:

Such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for the benefit of those persons or inhabitants from whom they were collected, or their legal representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. Is the bill still open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is still open to amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I beg leave to offer an amendment as additional sections.

Mr. BERRY. There was an amendment offered by me when the bill was last before the Senate, and it lies on the table. I desire action on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator fron Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, at the end of line 13, it is proposed to add the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That no part of the money collected from individuals, and to be held in trust as aforesaid, shall be retained by the United States as a set-off against any indebtedness alleged to exist against the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, in which such tax was collected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not encumber the bill with this amendment, or with any amendment of similar import. There can be no pretense under the bill that this money, which belongs to individuals and is put in the hands of the States as trustees, could be treated in the way suggested. It is only belittling the question, in my judgment, to put on an amendment which invites aggressive attacks upon this fund. I hope, therefore, that the Senator wil be satisfied with the decision of the Supreme Court on this subject.

Mr. BERRY. It is a well-known fact that the officers of the Treasury have withheld money from the States which they had no right to withhold. If it be true, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, that the effect of this bill is the same without the amendment as it is with it, then there can be no possible objection to its adoption. I can not see why he should object to its adoption if this money can not be withheld without the amendment being adopted. I think the law is as the Senator states it, but I assert again that the officers of the Treasury have withheld money from States which they had no right to withhold. The amendment makes it absolutely certain that they can not do that, and the Senator from Ohio says it does not change the effect of the bill. Therefore, inasmuch as there may be doubt about it, I insist upon the adoption of the amendment so that there can be no doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 22, noes 21.

Mr. VANCE. I move to add to the bill what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following additional sections to the bill:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit and pay to each State a sum equal to the amounts collected therein respectively as a tax or duty on raw cotton, under the provisions of the act approved July 1, 1862, and the supplemental and amendatory acts thereto, which sums, when so credited and paid, shall be accepted and held by the States in trust, first, for such of the producers who paid said tax or duty, or their legal representatives, as may make claim to and prove their identity, and the amount of taxes paid, in two years after the passage of this act, and, second, the remainder, if any, to be held and used only as a permanent free-school fund: Provided, That where cotton was produced in one State and, under permit from the Government of the United States, shipped to another State, and the taxes thereon collected in the latter State, then the amount of all such taxes shall be paid to the State in which the cotton was produced.

SEC. —. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That any State accepting the trust hereby created is prohibited from paying any part of the funds received to any person, syndicate, or corporation except the producers who paid the taxes on cotton grown by them or their legal representatives; and in no case shall the payment be made to an assignee of such claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss myself or to provoke a discussion upon the constitutionality of the tax upon raw cotton produced in the South. I simply ask a vote of the Senate upon the question. If the direct tax is to be refunded, this is equally a direct tax. If the direct tax was a hardship, this is equally a hardship. In addition to that, its want of uniformity, its being considered a tax upon exports, and its being levied upon the peculiar production of one section of the country, which prevented a compensating taxation upon the other sections of the country, make it such a case as demands, if the one tax is refunded, that the other should be also.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to make one single observation with reference to this amendment. The constitutionality of the cotton tax was referred to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court was equally divided upon that question, there being only eight members of the court.

I desire to say in addition that the tax being upon a raw product of land, not in its manufactured state at all, was in effect a tax on land. Being a tax on land, it was a direct tax under the Constitution of the United States, which could only be levied in pursuance of that provision of the Constitution which requires direct taxes to be apportioned among the States according to their Federal population.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I desire to add one word in addition to what has been said by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

This tax was levied upon the cotton produced, and the producers of cotton were required to pay it. It differed from most Federal taxes which are paid by the consumer, for the price of cotton is fixed by the market in Liverpool, and the tax had nothing whatever to do with fixing the price of cotton. Consequently those who produced the cotton in the South paid this entire tax. It fell upon the people of that section of the Union in 1865 and 1866, when they were least able to pay it. Four-fifths of the money under the direct-tax refund bill will go to Northern States, or to the people of the Northern States. It does seem to me that if it is just that money should be refunded to the people of the Northern States, this cotton tax, which fell wholly on the people of the South at a time when they were least able to bear it, should be refunded also; and if we are going to do equity in refunding taxes, this cotton tax should be returned to the producers of the cotton who paid it at the time.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I believe that the Government of the United States ought to pay to the cotton-planters of the South the money that they paid as a tax on raw cotton. Whenever the question comes up in a shape that I can properly vote for it without, in my opinion, injuring another measure that I think equally just, I shall take great pleasure in voting for it; but I feel very confident that if we adopt the amendment, which I favor in principle, it would defeat the bill now pending. As I believe this bill ought to pass, and think the two measures ought to be separate and come up and be voted on separately, I shall vote against the amendment, not that I disapprove of the principle of the payment proposed, but because I am unwilling to ingraft it on this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from Georgia in respect to the policy which I think ought to be observed in dealing with these very important questions. This question of the cotton tax has not been before the Committee on Finance. They have had no opportunity to favor us with a report of their opinion upon it. It is a very grave question, and there would be serious difficulty found in carrying this money back to the persons who contributed the tax to the Government of the United States, which should be provided for by the careful work of a committee.

I favor the bill reported by the Committee on Finance, because I think it is a measure of peace and reconciliation. I think that the Government of the United States owes it to every State in this Union to take up the burdens imposed on them and relieve them from liability for the taxes that have not been collected. I believe that is one of the best means we can resort to of producing entire and complete reconciliation between the States, and removing all causes of heartburning in regard to that great struggle. On our side we say it was a contest between States; on the other side it is said to have been a contest between the Government of the United States and the seceding States. Whatever may be the true legal status or the moral or political status of that controversy, there remains no doubt that the people of the United States still have the idea that some of the States have contributed much more than their portion to the support of that war.

It is true that in the South we suffered everything; the loss of all our property, the loss of many of our liberties, and a long period of political imprisonment, I will call it, in which we suffered severely, sore distress in political affairs; but we understood that when we assumed the attitude we did towards the Government of the United States, and we thought that the liberties that we were trying to defend and protect by our war were worth all the sacrifices that were made and all that we could make. But I am not asking anybody to repay us anything on account of those sacrifices. When we came back into the American Union my fealty to that Government depended upon the convictions of what I believed to be an honest and sincere heart. I did not come like a whipped man or a cowardly slave to take my position in the Government of the United States because I had been compelled to do it. Neither do I stand here to be induced by any considerations of a monetary character, or of public honor, or anything else, to do my duty to the Government of the United States. I do that because the era of strife has passed, the time of reconciliation has come, and the people of the United States with one accord have renewed their allegiance to the old Union, and being of those people, having cast my lot here, as I had a right to do, claiming the protection and the honors of this Government, my fidelity is due to it as a man of honor and is due upon principle.

Now, sir, I wish to remove from out of this household of States, this great assemblage of sovereignties, all causes of heart-burning, crimination, and recrimination that may linger in the minds of any people on this subject in any section of this great country; and I believe that the measure reported from the Committee on Finance has that tendency. I desire to support it because of its merits, and I do not desire to have it connected with any other great proposition which may embarrass its passage.

The proposition introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] is a very disputed one. Mr. Boutwell made a report here, I believe, from the Committee on Finance—I am not sure—a report which I have not read for a year or two, that seemed to me as presenting a phase of the question that it would tax the most powerful and astute mind to answer. I must say that, although I know that the tax collected from my people would be very comfortable to those who contributed it. I wish a dispassionate, a sincere, and an honest investigation of the constitutional claims of the people of the South to have this money refunded to them, and if it shall turn out that they have not got a constitutional claim to it, I shall never set up that they have an equitable claim to it, for after all it was the right of the Government of the United States to tax the people of the South while the war was going on, if the theory that they contended for was the correct one, that the Union was impossible of dissolution by the secession of the Southern States. The legal question left in that attitude challenges my investigation as a lawyer, and I wish time to consider it before I pronounce judgment in a matter that my people are so greatly interested in, a question of so much gravity, and that I do not feel able at this moment of time to give a definite opinion upon. I shall therefore sustain the position taken by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have but a few words to say in regard to this matter. In the first place, I must express my surprise that Senators who I supposed were so strongly in favor of this bill, and for the benefit of whose people it is really introduced and has been recommended by the Department for several years and passed the Senate twice before, should interpose such an obstacle to its passage as this.

The refunding of the cotton tax is a subject involving some sixty or eighty million dollars. I believe that that tax was right and just. I shall stand here to defend that position whenever the matter comes up. I will not debate it on a collateral question like this. If this amendment is intended as a means of defeating the bill, I am perfectly willing to accept it as such. I have no particular interest in this bill. This bill grew out of the complication of accounts between the Government of the United States and several of the States.

That complication became so serious, so embarrassing for a number of years, that several Secretaries of the Treasury have recommended as the best mode of solving it the refunding of the whole direct tax. That would put things in statu quo and enable the States to pay back to those persons who have paid their portion of the tax. In other words, it would restore things to the condition they were in before the direct tax was levied; and now to offer an amendment at this period of the discussion, when we are considering the bill in the morning hour, involving a refund of $60,000,000, is substantially a defeat of the proposition, because if we have got to discuss the merits of the cotton tax and its refund on this bill, that is the end of the passage of the bill probably for the present session. If Senators are really in earnest about this matter and really desire the pending bill to pass, I hope they will not embarrass it with any such obstacle as this, for certainly if the cotton-tax question is put on this bill I shall change my position and oppose the whole measure.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, if the chance comes I can satisfy my conscience by voting against the bill; but I can not see why, if the direct tax should be refunded to the people from whom it was collected, the cotton tax should not be also. The one tax was not assailed by reason of its constitutionality, the other is. The one tax named in the bill which is proposed to be refunded is not assailed by reason of any want of uniformity or injustice in the levying and in the collecting of it; the other one is. One amounts to about $17,000,000 which is to be returned, and the other to $68,000,000. If justice is to be measured by the amount involved, then I admit that one has more justice than the other, but I can not see it in that light. If it were improper to collect the direct tax out of the people of the United States, and if it is proper to restore it to them, certainly it was improper to collect the cotton tax out of the people of one section of the United States, and it would now be just to restore it.

I have no desire to push the matter further. I submit it to the Senate.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, certainly the Senate of the United States in considering any measure ought to be able to present some ground in good reason for it. What is there in this bill that can be defended? The Senator from Alabama says that he supports it in the interest of harmony between the people. If it had any such effect as that; if it is necessary at this period of time, when there is nothing but peace and good fellowship; if at such a time some concession was needed, whether it was demanded by the public interest or otherwise, it might be advisable; but that is not the case. This is a simple proposition to refund certain amounts of money to the different States, a tax lawfully imposed on the people under a law which has been executed according to its terms and has exhausted itself. The direct-tax act provided that this tax should be collected and should be a lien on the lands for two years, a tax upon the generation then existing, and it is now proposed to tax the people of this generation, a different one—for what purpose? To refund it to those who paid it? To those States which under permission of this act assumed the tax and paid it, the money, if it is still unsettled; goes back to the States. It is refunded to them to replace the tax collected by them from their own people. In the State of Kansas and other States it was settled by the sum due the State for advances made in raising troops and in expenses incurred by the State for the war under an act of Congress authorizing it. Where the law was executed directly the property was bought in by the United States or by speculators.

The tax was an infinitesimal one; the people who paid it are gone; the small amount paid by each is not worthy of being looked after; it is not a burden upon them, and the repayment now would be of but little advantage. Upon principle why, then, tax the people of this generation and the property of to-day to refund it when there is no great measure of public policy or propriety in it; and upon what ground of constitutional authority can you do it? I am not one of the Senators who split hairs upon constitutional provisions; but by what right can you levy a tax to refund a tax lawfully imposed and lawfully collected? It is not within the proper province of government, nor within its proper policy. But the cotton tax was a different one. The cotton tax has been held by four out of eight justices of the supreme constitutional tribunal of the country to have been absolutely void.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator is mistaken there.

Mr. CALL. I so understand the effect and force of their opinion of the decided case.

Mr. MORGAN. No; the court has not so decided.

Mr. CALL. Then I am mistaken. If it was constitutional, it was a valid tax, and the four justices of the court would not upon any ground of expediency have asserted that the tax was not binding unless it was utterly void and without power to be levied or collected by Congress. There can be no escape from that decision. The four justices of the Supreme Court would not have declared that tax to have been an improper one and one which the Government could not levy without declaring that it had no power to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired under the rule.

Mr. BECK. As one of the members of the committee which reported this bill two or three times, I have supposed that it was a fair measure of justice to restore to the States which had paid their proportion of the direct tax the money they had paid, or else to put the machinery of the Government, with all the force that could be brought to bear, to collect the tax not yet paid off the property of the people of the States which did not pay the amount. One thing or the other ought to be done; and as far as my vote will go, if this refund is not agreed to, I will enforce the tax against every State that has not paid if there is any power to do so, because uniformity among the States in that class of taxes is required by the Constitution, and ought to be carried out.

I submitted heretofore a statement of the condition of the account. I submitted a report of Secretary Folger, which appears in the RECORD of January 11, 1888, which exhausts the whole argument, and if Senators will read it carefully they will find the whole case stated fully. Among other things, he says:

> Indeed, it would be unjust to the people of the loyal States to release the people of the once insurrectionary States from their liability without refunding to the former the sums paid by them, and there are analogies in the legislation of Congress.
> It can scarcely be expected that there would be cheerful aid from the State authorities in the enforcement of it. It may be doubted whether there would be any. Indeed, it would, without further legislation, have to be enforced by the machinery provided by the act under which it was laid. This would call for the appointment of numerous Federal officials who would go among the people as obnoxious exactors. I think it must be conceded that there is, and ever will be, great reluctance to ever setting about the collection of this tax. That it never had great favor is shown by that it was never put in force but one year. In practical effect, then, the law for it is obsolete. Why, then, should there remain this unenforced liability, a menace to the people, the enforcement of which is called for by no public need nor by any public opinion?

In my judgment the people and the property of the States in default should be relieved and discharged from it.

He argued it from that standpoint, and that is the standpoint from which the Committee on Finance regarded it, that we ought not to put the machinery of the Federal Government in motion to endeavor to collect this tax at all, and that as we were required to have uniformity, justice required that the States which had paid it should receive back just what they had paid, because nearly every State, as shown by the statement furnished, had paid it with the 15 per cent. discount, which we do not propose to allow. This may not work exact justice; all the money may not go exactly into the hands of the people from whom it was taken, but this is the nearest approach possible, and I am for it, standing on the report of Secretary Folger, to which I again call attention. I think Senators will find the argument substantially exhausted there.

I agree that the cotton tax was unjust; the Supreme Court has passed on that, but any question connected with that ought not to form any part of this measure. I would rather see it defeated than have it amended in this way. I do not believe any gentleman has any particular interest in the bill except to do what the Treasury Department recommended, and what the Senate with great unanimity has always thought best to do, to settle the question of whether or not we have a right to hold on to the money that is due to any State. The State of Georgia and other States will get clear of that trouble if we pass this bill.

That was the view of the committee. We had better vote down the bill and leave the law as it is, rather than have all these other great questions pressed on us now.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida has already spoken, and has exhausted his right under the rule.

Mr. CALL. I move to strike out the last word of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on that amendment. The Senator is entitled to the floor upon it.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if he is not aware that the Supreme Court has decided that the direct law can never be enforced, that it exhausted itself. The language of the court is that the lien expired in two years; that it was a tax on the individuals and a lien on their land which expired in two years. The court has therefore declared that that law can never be enforced. It expired by its terms. Therefore the argument made by Secretary Folger as to relieving these States is met by the fact that no obligation ever rested upon them, and none now rests upon the people.

But, Mr. President, I wish to correct a remark I made when before on the floor. I said that the Supreme Court had decided the cotton tax to be entirely void. One-half of the Supreme Court affirmed that proposition, but I had forgotten to state—the fact did not occur to my mind at the time—that the court did not decide by a majority vote. One-half of the tribunal, for reasons which are perfectly manifest, and which I think not even the ability of the Senator from Ohio can touch, held that the cotton tax, as a self-evident proposition, was entirely void, because, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has stated, it was directly contrary to the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. BECK. The collection of the direct tax was limited to two years, but the law is not exhausted. It had to be assessed on individual property within two years.

Mr. CALL. It rests upon the individuals. They may be all dead.

Mr. BECK. One-half of them are not dead. The property in the State was perhaps held by one-half of the people. It makes very much hardship on those who are there now to seek to enforce it against them at this late day. The law with all its machinery can be enforced. It was simply the lien that was limited to two years; and it was to avoid bringing about such difficulty to the property and people of these States that the Committee on Finance reported the bill in the way it is proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida insist on his amendment to strike out the last word?

Mr. CALL. No; I withdraw it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the pending amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. VANCE.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to say a word or two in explanation of the vote which I shall give on this question.

I have no admiration for what is called the cotton tax. I have a very decided opinion upon the subject of its justice and perhaps of its legality; but the attempt to rectify any error in connection with that subject now is to defeat the bill which has been reported by the Finance Committee. That bill I look upon as a measure of high justice, and very creditable to the gentlemen who have been most active and prominent in bringing it forward. I am not about to discuss any of its features or provisions. It is a matter, however, that has been considered in the Committee on Finance more or less for the last two or three years, and is a measure of substantial relief in some respects, and of absolute justice in all.

I appeal to the Senators who think as I do on the subject of the cotton tax not to encumber the original bill with the amendment which is proposed. That defeats the whole concern. At the proper time and under proper circumstances nobody will go further or consider more favorably the proposition embraced in the amendment than I will.

The question is not always, Mr. President, what is just, but what is practicable and attainable. Let us take the good we can, which is within our reach, and then grasp after more hereafter, if a hereafter on that subject should come.

I look upon the bill as presented here as a practical measure, settling and closing up a difficult subject, one that has embarrassed the Treasury in its accounts, and one which has worked inequality, irregularity, and injustice to many States.

I desire to say this much because I rank myself one of those who think that the cotton tax was a measure perhaps of oppression and injustice. I do not intend that my vote against this amendment shall be misunderstood as unfriendly to relief on that point, but I should look upon my vote for that amendment now as a vote against this bill, which I heartily concur in.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the bill brought in by the Finance Committee; I did so at the last session; but I would like to call the attention of the Senate to two or three facts to show the peculiar hardship under which the citizens of my State labor.

The quota of South Carolina was $363,000. By the report of the Treasury it is shown that, by the sales of lands and the payment of money, the State actually paid $377,000, an excess of $14,000 above the quota. In addition to that there were 53,000 acres of the most valuable sea-island lands. The whole county of Beaufort was sold, and the profit which the Government has made from the resales of land amounts to $315,000, so that practically the State of South Carolina was assessed $363,000 and actually paid within a fraction of $700,000.

My main object in calling the attention of the Senate to these facts is to have some member of the committee say whether, in the opinion of the committee, in relation to this payment from the United States Treasury of the direct tax, if the money is refunded to the State, this excess, this profit that the Government made, of $315,000, will be included in the refund? If any member of the committee will give me information upon that point I shall be very glad to get it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I will state to the Senate that the peculiar case of South Carolina was brought to the attention of the Committee on Finance; but it was thought that it was better not to deal with that or with any special equities it might have beyond a refund of the actual money received by the United States; that it had better be left to a separate bill and separate legislation. It could not be acted upon in the general bill, as it related only to South Carolina.

I am not so familiar with the facts in regard to the matter as the Senator from South Carolina, but as the land was bought in by the United States, and subsequently sold to the freedmen at a higher value, more money came into the Treasury of the United States than the share of South Carolina.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me a word?

Mr. HAMPTON. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. When the matter was before the committee there had been a great deal of legislation in internal-revenue and other acts in regard to these questions in South Carolina; but we thought that to act on them in this bill would embarrass this bill so greatly that they ought not to be brought up here.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from South Carolina will allow me to state, in addition to what has been stated by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kentucky, that in every instance where the property of the citizen was sold for the collection of this tax, it was sold at exceedingly low rates, whether bought in by the Government or by private individuals, and where the title passed either to the Government or to a private individual it passed at a very inadequate consideration, and there was profit to the purchaser, whether Government or individual; and if we go into that question we must make such provision as will enable us to inquire into the equities of every case where property was seized and sold for the collection of the tax.

Mr. BECK. Whenever any money was paid into the Treasury beyond the actual amount expended by the Government, its disposition has been heretofore provided for.

Mr. HARRIS. That is true. Wherever there was an excess realized over and above the assessment and it went into the Treasury, there is already a law, and has been for years, requiring it to be refunded to the real owner.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired under the rule.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the time we have consumed by interrupting him will be extended to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed, if there be no objection.

Mr. HAMPTON. I will offer an amendment on that point, if it be necessary; but I wish to say one word in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I agree with him in the justice of the measure he proposes, but it is my fortune to have been, and to be now, a planter. I feel that I should not be acting with personal propriety if I voted upon a question in which I am directly interested, and I request of the Senate that I may be excused from voting upon this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be excused, if there be no objection. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). Understanding that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], with whom I am paired, would vote "nay" on this proposition, if present, I vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—16.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Bate, | Coke, | Jones of Arkansas, | Reagan, |
| Berry, | Daniel, | Pugh, | Vance, |

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move the amendment which I submitted the other day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 1 by inserting after the word "from," in line 6, the words "the treasuries of."

Mr. CHANDLER. I want the other amendment read in connection with it.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is further proposed to amend in section 3 by striking out the proviso beginning in line 8, as follows:

Provided, That where the sums, or any part thereof, credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, have been collected by the United States from the citizens or inhabitants thereof, or any other person, either directly or by sale of property, such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for the benefit of those persons or inhabitants from whom they were collected, or their legal representatives.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

All moneys assessed as a part of said direct tax and collected by the United States from individuals, either directly or by the sale of property, shall be refunded to such individuals, or their legal representatives who may bring suit therefor in the Court of Claims.

Mr. CHANDLER. The two amendments may be considered as one, and they present a question which I desire to raise before the Senate. The proposition of the two amendments is that there shall be paid back to the State the moneys which have been actually taken from the State treasury, and that the money received from individuals, two million and a half of dollars, shall be refunded directly to the individuals through suit in the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is before the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think the amendment ought to pass in the form proposed. The money ought to be returned to the persons who paid it. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire would return the money in most cases to the treasury of the State. They will have to come to Washington and employ agents here to assist them to get it out of the Treasury. If you are going to pass the bill, you ought to make the remedy accessible to the people of the States, as much so as possible. Therefore, I think the amendment ought not to prevail. I do not think any part of the bill ought to pass, but if you pass it you ought to make it as accessible to the people who will derive the benefit as possible, and not compel the people who are entitled to the money to employ claim agents here to go before the Treasury Department to get at the money. If it were not for that feature I should be glad to see the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire prevail. The matter can be attended to much more readily and rapidly by the State authorities than by the Treasury of the United States. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not succeed. I have no doubt that claim agents will be glad to have the amendment pass, because they will receive part of the money paid out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the next amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to inquire whether the verbal amendments I suggested have been acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have been acted on.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the proviso beginning in line 8 of section 3 and in lieu thereof to insert:

All moneys assessed as a part of said direct tax and collected by the United States from individuals, either directly or by sale of property, shall be refunded to such individuals or their legal representatives who may bring suit therefor in the Court of Claims.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). My colleage [Mr. GEORGE] is temporarily absent, but is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], I think. I call the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly; I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, but I saw him here this morning.

Mr. WALTHALL. He has been called away.

Mr. BLAIR (who had voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who is detained from the Chamber by the sickness of a relative. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment if present.

Mr. BECK. My colleague would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My colleague [Mr. GRAY] is paired on this question with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 48; as follows:

YEAS—10.

| Farwell, | Jones of Arkansas, | Pasco, | |

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. At the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who offered certain amendments to the third section of the bill, I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 6 of section 1, to harmonize that section with the other as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, at the end of line 6, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to insert "or from any of the citizens or inhabitants thereof, or other persons;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to each State and Territory of the United States and the District of Columbia a sum equal to all collections made from said States and Territories and the District of Columbia, or from any of the citizens or inhabitants thereof, or other persons, under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the amendatory acts thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment to section 3, to come in at the end of line 15:

And provided further, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid out by the governor of any State or Territory, or any other person, to any attorney or agent under any contract for services now existing or heretofore made between the representatives of any State or Territory and any attorney or agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to a proposed amendment, which has been printed.

Mr. PLUMB. I now offer that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to repay the sums collected from persons in the military or naval service of the United States during the war of the rebellion the percentage on the compensation due them by reason of such service, known as the income tax. Such payment shall be made to the person from whom collected, his heirs or legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this bill is essentially unjust towards most of the Western States. It is nearly twenty-seven years now since the original tax was imposed which it is proposed to refund. Since that time the Western States have largely increased in population by emigration from the older States and by some other causes. It is now proposed to levy upon those people a tax, not for the purpose of putting down the rebellion, not for any public purpose, actual or supposable, but to pay into the treasuries of the older States a certain gross sum of money, and the pretext that this is money which they paid into the Treasury of the United States during the rebellion is without any practical warrant. It is only used as a method of compensation and as an excuse for the expenditure, perhaps.

There were then in the State of New York and the State of Ohio and all the older States, especially the Northern States, many hundreds of thousands of people who have gone out from those States to the Western States and Territories. They were persons who in their time contributed their aliquot proportion of whatever was paid by those States to the war, to the $20,000,000 of direct tax. They have now got to pay it over again in the shape of taxes levied upon them to repay it—not that they will get any part of it, but to pay it back to another class of persons entirely.

Suppose the proposition now was to levy a tax for this purpose, would it be levied upon the people, or the municipalities, or the States as they were at the time when this tax was originally levied, or would it be levied according to the population and its distribution at the present time? Yet that is exactly what this bill proposes to do. It proposes to levy upon the people now existing, upon the present generation, money, not for the purpose of giving it back to those who paid it, but of giving it to somebody else.

The State of Kansas paid as its proportion of this tax about $71,000. There will be levied on its people half a million of dollars to pay now its proportion of this $20,000,000; and for whom? Not under the guise of promoting education, not upon any assumed obligation or anything of that kind, but because some clerk up in the Treasury Department has got stuck on a matter of book-keeping. That is all. The Senator from Ohio does not dignify it more than that. He simply says that they have got stuck up in the Treasury Department in their figures, and he thinks, on the whole, it is better to appropriate these millions instead of getting some one more expert in accounts, and to collect $20,000,000 from the people of the United States to pay this money back to the several States. There is no other pretext. There is no foundation for this legislation. Why should you collect now this $20,000,000 to pay it back, any more than the many millions of dollars collected from the people of the United States in the shape of income tax, and by the increase of the tariff, and so on, for the purpose of putting down the rebellion? More than that, it is doubly offensive in this, that the individual persons from whom this tax was collected in the several States which were in rebellion at that time were generally disloyal persons. A part of the penalty of their disloyalty was the collection of this tax from them. And now it is proposed to pay a premium on that disloyalty by giving this money back to them. We are to collect it from all the citizens of the United States, loyal and disloyal alike, for the purpose of remitting to these people a part of the penalty which the law at the time imposed on them for their disloyalty.

In addition to that, this bill is liable to the very serious objection interposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. It is making a claim that no person now living will ever see the last of. The General Government is, without any warrant in law or in equity, imposing a trust upon the several States which they may or may not exercise, but if they exercise it in such a way as to give any one a grievance he will come to Congress with it and we shall have bills and bills by the score extending over, perhaps, the next twenty or thirty years of time for the purpose of rectifying this injustice—all for what? Just simply because the Treasury Department, as I said, has come to have some little trouble in adjusting these accounts. There is no pretense that these States want the money. The Senator who has the bill in charge will not say that the State of Ohio wants this money or needs it at all. He is on record here as saying, in effect, that it did not need the money for any purposes whatever, because he has voted three or four different times, and will vote again in a day or two to levy a heavy and enormous tax on the people of that State to educate children thousands of miles away. So the State of Ohio does not want this money, does not need it; the State of Pennsylvania does not need it; the State of New York does not need it; the other States do not need it; and yet there is to be levied on the people of the United States this large sum of money to be paid back to those States.

In that part of the bill which provides that the money paid by individuals shall go back to them, there is something in the nature of a refund; but in this there is no proposition to refund, because it will go to an entirely different class of people. The people who paid it will not get any.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to reply, although I should like to do so if we had more time. I wish to have a vote on this bill now.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will not get a vote before 2 o'clock.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Kansas if he proposes to equalize burdens between the East and West by repaying the income tax? For every dollar paid by the West, ten dollars were paid by the East of the income tax, and yet he proposes to refund the income tax in order to equalize the burdens between the West and the East.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Massachusetts leaps at a stile that does not exist. I did not make a proposition of that kind. I propose simply, if you are going to pay disloyal persons, that some of the loyal people shall have something, and that the officers on whose salaries a 5 per cent. was levied shall be repaid. That is all. That would not be justified except on the supposition that Congress is going to do something worse, and the measure might be remedied by something that had in it some measure of justice. That is all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the unfinished business be laid aside informally, with a view of closing this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the unfinished business be informally laid aside, for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas objects.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I submit the motion to proceed with the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, notwithstanding the arrival of the time for the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas I suppose he did not expect to have adopted. In the first place, it will be impossible to state to what income tax he refers by the way the amendment is drawn. But that is not enough. The same argument that he makes now to prevent the passage of this bill might apply to every bill which relates to an expenditure or a debt contracted ten years ago. What right have we to take the moneys in the Treasury of the United States to pay any part of the national debt, to take the money of the people of Kansas, collected from them, to pay a debt that was contracted during the war? At the beginning of the war Kansas was a very small but still very important community; but now it is a very powerful community. The same argument that the Senator makes now would apply to every bill that comes up before us for the discharge of any obligation. Any State might object to taking money now in the Treasury, collected the last year, to pay an obligation contracted thirty or forty years ago. There is nothing in that argument.

The Senator, I presume, is opposed to this bill because the State of Kansas will not get as large a proportion of the money as it would if the apportionment was based upon the present population. That is true, and to the extent that that is an objection to the bill it ought to be fairly considered. But this is not an apportionment bill; it is not a bill taking money to be apportioned among the States; it is not a distribution bill, as the act of 1836 was. It is simply a bill refunding a tax which at the time was known to be hard against the spirit of our institutions, a direct tax, to be apportioned among the States, and which has not been fairly collected—collected from some and not collected from others, paid by citizens in some States and not in others. Great inequalities have occurred, and those inequalities we seek to correct. That is all there is about it. Kansas will get back just as much money as she paid. If she was not then big enough to pay as much as she would have to do now, it is her misfortune that she was not big enough in 1861 to pay three or four hundred thousand dollars instead of seventy thousand. It will make no difference to a great State like Ohio, because it preserves its general average, and so of the great body of the States. I do not think the people of Kansas will object to making this clean settlement between the General Government and the several States merely because the share they will get back will not be quite so much as it would be if it was based on the apportionment of 1880.

I hope we may have a vote upon the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, it is not a debt, as the Senator now seeks to claim for the first time. It is in no sense a debt. The people of Kansas do not want it paid to them. They do not regard this as a debt. There is no assumption that it is a debt. It is simply now the Government of the United States paying, as a gratuity to the older States, a certain sum of money, and for the purpose of justifying this spoliation it is gravely proposed to pay back to the disloyal people from whom taxes were collected two millions and a half of money. That does not commend itself to the people of Kansas; at least I do pot think it does; and I do not think it will commend itself to the people of this country in any part except among those who are to receive the money.

Mr. President, if this bill is to be upheld at all upon the assumption that taxes which were levied in an unusual way during the war are to be given back to those who paid them, I submit that the income tax was an unequal tax. I am perfectly willing that it shall be repaid to all the persons who paid it, although I believe that the class to which I have referred in my amendment were more meritorious than any other class of people. The Government took into its military and naval service officers of all grades with a stipulated compensation, which it did not fix for the purpose of enabling them to more easily pay this tax, and then it proceeded to levy a tax of 5 per cent. on their pay. It was collected by the paymaster before the salary of the officers was paid to them. Certainly, so far as equity is concerned, it is with these people a great deal more than it is with the States, and certainly more than it is with the men from whom this direct tax was collected at the point of the bayonet, and who were then in rebellion against the Government of the United States. It is proposed by this bill to pay a premium for disloyalty, for absence in the Confederate army, for giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the Union. That is what it amounts to. I hope we shall not hear anything more about some of these very stale subjects when a proposition of this kind can receive the sanction of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not find any constitutional difficulty myself in voting for this bill; but I must confess to some amazement at the votes which have been given in reference to some amendments to it by gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. If this is not a simple proposition to take out of the Treasury money and devote it to certain people in one view of the case and the States in the other, then no such proposition could be made. It is as clear a proposition on the one hand, if it is passed, to refund this money to people who paid it, to take money out of the Treasury to give to individuals, as it is possible that language can be used to do that thing. If it does not do that, then it is a proposition to take money out of the Treasury and to give it to the States.

Now, I do not find a great deal of trouble myself in giving money to the States out of the public Treasury, holding as I do that the authority to collect the money is the principal thing that should trammel Congress; but having collected the money the power to appropriate it is certainly as great as the power to collect. I say to my friends on the other side that that has pretty good Democratic authority. It has the sanction of President Monroe in his famous internal-improvement message, which was quoted here the other day.

The right or wrong of this question I do not propose to discuss to any great extent. When this tax was laid the Territory of Colorado was in existence. You taxed that Territory $22,000—that was its proportion—utterly without warrant of Constitution, as everybody must see who reads the Constitution. You taxed the Territory of New Mexico $60,000, and other Territories in proportion. The Territory of Nevada was taxed, I do not remember how much, but it paid $4,000. I have not looked at the figures lately. At that time the Government of the United States owned all the real estate in Colorado. It had never made a patent to an acre of land within the limits of the present State; it had never recognized a pre-emption claim or a homestead claim within those limits; and yet it proposed to take, and did take, from the people of that Territory $22,000, which was levied on the real estate in the Territory.

We paid $1,500 of that out of some moneys due the Territory by the Treasury Department; and when we paid, under a statute of the United States, the expense of taking a census in 1875, about $20,000, that was kept out. When we made our application to the Treasury Department to be refunded under the statute, we were told that we were indebted to the United States somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000, and that was deducted; so that as it now stands on the books Colorado has paid $22,000. The late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States of course will release all that money to the State of Colorado. So we have no very special interest in this bill; and the only question is that suggested by the Senator from Kansas, whether, after a period of so many years, it is worth while to take up this matter and pay the money back to the States, over $2,000,000 to New York, $2,000,000 to Pennsylvania. This tax was borne by those States, just as they bore every other tax during the war, uncomplainingly and without objection, and perhaps it was paid as easily as any other tax they paid. But that money is now to be taken, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, from the Western States.

Those Western States that have grown up and doubled their population, and doubled and trebled and quadrupled their wealth, are now to come in and pay back their part of the tax which was imposed many years ago, and which ought now to be considered as ended, in my judgment.

It can not be said that my State owes anything because we did not contribute as much money as others at that time. We contributed just as much money to the support of the Government during the war, in proportion to our wealth and our population, as any other community; and the State that I have the honor in part to represent contributed more men in proportion to her population to the support of the Government than any other State in the Union, although she did not at that time have a representative in this end of the Capitol, and we paid all the debts that belonged to us to pay. Now, having increased our wealth, why should we be called upon to make up to the old States that which it was a part of their duty to do at that particular time?

I want to submit to my Democratic friends, where do you find the constitutional authority, you men who can not vote for the educational bill, who can not find any authority in the Constitution for the purpose of voting money out of the national Treasury for the aid of education, the most beneficent grant that could be made—where do you find the power to take money from the Treasury, collected from the whole people, to pay back to New York $2,000,000 that she paid more than a quarter of a century ago? I submit that question to my Democratic colleagues in this Chamber, and more particularly to those of them who can not find the power to vote money for the education of the illiterate people of their very section of country.

I do not myself see any trouble in this case. I think if the Government of the United States were to put on its books, to the credit of the States, the unpaid tax, and so settle the account, that would be a fair and equitable way.

Where the books show an account against the State of Colorado, or Arkansas, or Delaware, we can readily, by a few lines of legislation, authorize the accounting officers to give the necessary credit, and thus settle the matter so far as the difficulty in the Treasury Department is concerned. But that is not the purpose of the bill; the purpose is to give to certain States a large amount of money, which I say they have no equitable right to, because nobody pretends that this was not a legal tax. If it was a case like the cotton tax, where it is a question whether it was a legal tax or not, and if it then appeared that the Government had wrongfully received from the people money which did not belong to it, then there would unquestionably, under any view of the Constitution, be the power to pay back that tax, because it can not be said decently that the Government, having taken a citizen's property wrongfully, could shield itself under a constitutional power and say it could not repay. But here was a tax honestly paid, legally collected, and nobody doubts it. It may be hard, as all taxes are hard; it may be a little harsher than other taxes; but it is a tax that was paid legally and properly, and if you can take this money or if you can take any money out of the Treasury to pay this claim, it is a declaration that the power exists to pay any claim within the will and judgment of the legislative department of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I am not going to occupy the attention of the Senate in further discussion of this bill. I presented my views on it a few days ago. I do not believe that we have the right, the power, the constitutional warrant, to take money out of the Treasury for the purpose of distributing it among the States for any object. Consequently I can not vote for this measure; but I presume it will pass. I want to state this as the primary reason why I shall vote against the bill, because I do not believe there is constitutional warrant for any such action.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. Understanding that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], with whom I am paired, would vote for this bill if present, I vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I see that he is absent. I understand if he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—48.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BLAIR. On the vote last taken I find that I voted inadvertently, being paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. Had he been present he would have voted "yea," and I did vote "nay." It was a mistake, but it made no difference in the result. I wish this to appear in the RECORD just as if I was paired on the vote.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask leave to report from the Committee on Foreign Relations an amendment to the deficiency bill now pending in the Committee on Appropriations, with a view to having it referred to that committee. I will not ask that it be printed, because I am informed by the Committee on Appropriations that there is not time to print it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without printing.

Mr. STEWART. I offer an amendment to the deficiency bill, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4881) making an appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural-experimental stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto;" in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880," and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

JOHN G. MERRITT.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses, to whom was referred the following resolution, to report it favorably:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint John G. Merritt, a disabled soldier and faithful officer of the Senate, a messenger, acting assistant doorkeeper, until further orders of the Senate, and that his salary be paid out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I hope there will be no objection to immediate action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent of the Senate to consider at this time the resolution just reported.

Mr. BLAIR. Not displacing the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the regular order will be informally laid aside. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be again read.

The resolution was read.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4881) making an appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experimental stations, in connection with the colleges established in the several States, under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. ALLISON, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate now resume the consideration of the educational bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have discussed the questions which arise in the consideration of this bill at very considerable length on each former occasion when it has been before the Senate. I do not care to go over the same line of argument, or occupy ground which I have already occupied, and I do not think it is at all necessary to detain the Senate by a discussion of the merits of the pending measure, known as the Blair bill.

While the Southern States have made decided progress in the education of the people since the year 1880, on account of the great mass of ignorance existing there when the colored race were enfranchised and made citizens, the burden of educating the children of the two races in the impoverished condition of the Southern States was so great that those States were not able to meet practically the demands upon them; and while the energetic measures adopted by those States have done much in the right direction, there still exists a great necessity all over the Southern country for common-school education and for increased facilities for the instruction of both races. I believe the whole people feel as much interest in the pending measure as they have felt on any previous occasion when it has been before the Senate, and that the defeat of the measure would be received with great regret throughout that whole section of country.

As already stated, it is not my purpose to discuss the general merits of this bill on the present occasion. That duty has been ably performed already by the Senator who is the author of the bill, and by other advocates of the measure, and I should not have occupied the floor on the present occasion had I not noticed in the debate that more importance on this occasion than on former occasions seems to be attached to the constitutional question involved.

Most of the attacks made upon the bill thus far have been upon constitutional grounds.

It is said that there is no grant in the Constitution of the United States which authorizes Congress to make such an appropriation. On this point it seems to me the able and distinguished Senators who have discussed the question are in error. The Constitution of the United States, in Article I, section 8, declares that Congress shall have power to lay and collect duties, taxes, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Now, there seem to be three objects contemplated by this provision—the money is to be raised first to pay the debts, second to provide for the common defense, and third to provide for the general welfare of the United States. Here is a distinct grant of power to raise money either by taxes, duties, imposts, or excises, and to raise it for either of the three objects specified, but it is said that the general-welfare clause is not intended as a grant of power, but that it only gives Congress the right to exercise the delegated powers which promote the general welfare. This seems to me to be a narrow and limited construction, not justified by the context and not intended by the framers of the Constitution.

I think there is a distinct and general field for operation where Congress has the discretion to make appropriations for money for the general welfare of the people of the United States. In doing this Congress can not impair or violate any of the other delegated powers, as this provision must be construed with the other provisions of that character. Nor can Congress violate or usurp any power expressly reserved by the Constitution to the States themselves. But in cases where the power is not expressly reserved to the States or expressly delegated by other portions of the Constitution of the United States for other objects Congress may exercise a sound discretion, and exercise or refuse to exercise such powers as are not otherwise expressly delegated to the United States for other objects, or reserved to the States.

I am aware that learned commentators upon the Constitution of the United States and distinguished statesmen have differed on the question as to the extent of power which Congress may exercise under the general-welfare clause. But it seems to me that the contemporaneous construction which is found in the early practice of the Government and the continuance of the practice during the whole period of the Government has, by construction and practice, settled the question in favor of the exercise by Congress of a sound discretion in passing acts of this character for the promotion of the general welfare.

From an early period in the administration of General Washington down to the present session of Congress there has been an almost unbroken line of precedents in favor of the exercise of this power by Congress. Take as illustration, the establishment of the West Point Military Academy, the Naval Academy at Annapolis, the purchase of Florida, the purchase of Louisiana, the grant of swamp lands to the States, the grant of particular sections of land in each township for school purposes, the grant of lands in the different States to colleges or universities, the appropriation of money to relieve the sufferers in Ireland, the appropriation to relieve the sufferers from earthquake in Venezuela, the assumption and payment of the debt of Texas on her annexation to the Union, the appropriation or donation of what is known as the college land grant some twenty-odd years ago, the appropriation of money to relieve the sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River, the appropriation of money to erect a monument to George Washington in the District of Columbia and to Thomas Jefferson in the State of Virginia, and the appropriation of money to fill and beautify the parks of Washington with equestrian statues and other monumental structures, the appropriation of money to decorate the national cemeteries in different States of the Union, to maintain our beautiful flower garden in this city, and a thousand and one other appropriations of like character, establish beyond question the construction put upon this provision not only by the great men who framed the Constitution and who administered it in the early period of this Government, but by the statesmen and successive legislative bodies which have met in Congress under the Constitution from year to year from the earliest period of our history down to the present date. If anything can be settled by the practice of the Government, this question, it seems to me, has been settled.

I desire, Mr. President, to add a quotation from my remarks on this question on a former occasion, where I have referred to the messages of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and John Quincy Adams. I will ask the Secretary to read a portion marked on page 2250 of the volume of the RECORD which I now send to the desk, volume 15, part 3, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the matter sent to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

I know that those of us who are strict constructionists have seldom been willing to admit that we find the authority for anything under the general clause for the promotion of the general welfare. I believe I never heard any one who belongs to my school of politics admit that a particular power fell under the general-welfare clause. If no other power falls there, then as there is nothing that I am aware of which can do so much to promote the general welfare as the general diffusion of knowledge, I am willing to put this under the general-welfare clause and say that if the framers of the Constitution meant nothing else by that clause they did mean that Congress might make appropriations for the education of the people to prepare them for the exercise of the rights of citizenship. Under that clause I think I am justified in this statement by the action of the fathers of the Republic who framed the Constitution. They surely knew what they meant, and they were men of that character for integrity and honesty of purpose that they would in no case have willfully violated that instrument.

In his first annual address, as it was then called, President Washington said:

"Nor am I less persuaded that you will agree with me in opinion that there is nothing which can better deserve your patronage than the promotion of science and literature. Knowledge is in every country the surest basis of public happiness. In one in which the measures of government receive their impressions so immediately from the sense of the community as in ours, it is proportionably essential. To the security of a free constitution it contributes in various ways: by convincing those who are intrusted with the public administration that every valuable end of government is best answered by the enlightened confidence of the people, and by teaching the people themselves to know and value their own rights; to discern and provide against invasions of them; to distinguish between oppression and the necessary exercise of lawful authority; between burdens proceeding from a disregard to their convenience, and those resulting from the inevitable exigencies of society; to discriminate the spirit of liberty from that of licentiousness, cherishing the first, avoiding the last, and uniting a speedy but temperate vigilance against encroachments with an inviolable respect to the laws.

"Whether this desirable object will be best promoted by affording aid to seminaries of learning already established, by the institution of a national university, or by any other expedients, will be well worthy of a place in the deliberations of the legislature."

Again, he says in his eighth annual message:

"I have therefore proposed to the consideration of Congress the expediency of establishing a national university and also a military academy. The desirableness of both these institutions has so constantly increased with every new view I have taken on the subject, that I can not omit the opportunity of once for all recalling your attention to it.

"The assembly to which I address myself is too enlightened not to be fully sensible how much a flourishing state of the arts and sciences contributes to national prosperity and education.

"True it is that our country, much to its honor, contains many seminaries of learning highly respectable and useful; but the funds upon which they rest are too narrow to command the ablest professors in the different departments of liberal knowledge for the institution contemplated, though they would be excellent auxiliaries.

"Among the motives to such an institution, the assimilation of the principles, opinions, and manners of our countrymen, by the common education of a portion of our youth from every quarter, well deserves attention. The more homogeneous our citizens can be made in these particulars, the greater will be our prospect of permanent union; and a primary object of such a national institution should be the education of our youth in the science of government. In a republic, what species of knowledge can be equally important; and what duty more pressing on its legislature than to patronize a plan for communicating it to those who are to be the future guardians of the liberties of the country?"

Mr. Jefferson also has something to say upon this question. In his sixth annual message he says:

"The present consideration of a national establishment for education, particularly, is rendered proper by this circumstance also, that if Congress, approving the proposition, shall yet think it more eligible to found it on a donation of lands, they have it now in their power to endow it with those which will be among the earliest to produce the necessary income. This foundation would have the advantage of being independent on war, which may suspend other improvements by requiring for its own services the resources destined for them."

Mr. Madison, in his eighth annual message, says:

"The importance which I have attached to the establishment of a university within this District, on a scale and for objects worthy of the American nation, induces me to renew my recommendation of it to the favorable consideration of Congress."

President John Quincy Adams, speaking on the same subject, says:

"Among the first, perhaps the very first, instrument for the improvement of the condition of men is knowledge; and to the acquisition of much of the knowledge adapted to the wants, the comforts, and enjoyments of human life public institutions and seminaries of learning are essential. So convinced of this was the first of my predecessors in this office, now first in the memory as living he was first in the hearts of our countrymen, that once and again in his addresses to the Congress with whom he co-operated in the public service he earnestly recommended the establishment of seminaries of learning to prepare for all the emergencies of peace and war—a national university and a military academy. With respect to the latter, had he lived to the present day, in turning his eyes to the institution at West Point he would have enjoyed the gratification of his most earnest wishes. But in surveying the city which has been honored with his name he would have seen the spot of earth which he had destined and bequeathed to the use and benefit of his country as the site for a university still bare and barren."

Mr. BROWN. I now ask the Secretary to read the portions marked on page 2205, from the speech of Senator Garland, of Arkansas, now the Attorney-General of the United States, on the same subject. Also, the portion marked on page 2697, which gives extracts from Senator Garland's speech on this subject:

The Secretary read as follows:

But this matter came once so clearly before the Supreme Court long before the recent amendments were ever adopted, or before they were ever dreamed of, when the complexion of the court was essentially different from what it is now and from what it has been for the past twenty years, that I deem it not inappropriate to cite the language of the unanimous court, speaking through Judge Campbell, in 18 Howard's Reports, the case of Cooper vs. Roberts, page 177. This case came from Michigan:

"The appropriation of public lands for that object became a fundamental principle by the ordinance of 1787, which settled terms of compact between the people and States of the Northwestern territory and the original States, unalterable except by consent. One of the articles affirmed that 'religion, morality, and knowledge, being necessary for good government and the happiness of mankind,' and ordained that 'schools and the means of education should be forever encouraged.' This principle was extended first by Congressional enactment (1 Statutes at Large, 550, section 6), and afterward, in 1802, by compact between the United States and Georgia to the Southwestern territory."

After citing the history of that, he proceeds:

"But the constancy with which the United States have adhered to the policy in the various compacts with the people of the newly formed States and the care which Congress has manifested to prevent the accumulation of prior obligations which might interrupt it fully display their estimate of its value and importance. There is obviously a definite purpose declared to consecrate the same central section of every township of every State which might be added to the Federal system to the promotion of 'good government and the happiness of mankind' by the spread of 'religion, morality, and knowledge,' and thus, by a uniformity of local association, to plant in the heart of every community the same sentiments of grateful reverence for the wisdom, forecast, and magnanimous statesmanship of those who framed the institutions for these new States before the Constitution for the old had yet been modeled."

That is the preface of Judge Campbell, speaking for a unanimous court, to the law in the case which he afterward announces. In this same volume a very important case came up from St. Louis in reference to schools, the somewhat noted case of Kissell vs. St. Louis Public Schools Board, decided by the same court unanimously; and in passing I will say that that St. Louis grant made in 1812 came three times before the Supreme Court for construction, for interpretation, and a defining of the extent of that grant as interfering possibly with other grants; and yet with all this litigation, and with a case from Michigan before it, and a case from Wisconsin in ninety-fifth United States Reports, the point never occurred of bringing in doubt or in dispute the power of Congress to make these grants in any case it saw proper; and as the Senator from Florida well said, if you could grant lands you could of course grant the money; if you could grant land worth a dollar and a quarter an acre you could grant the dollar and a quarter in money.

* * * * * * *

I have alluded to an act of 1812 in reference to a grant for school purposes at St. Louis. By the act of 5th of April, 1826, 6 Statutes at Large, page 339, there was granted for the education of the deaf and dumb and for the erection of an asylum in Kentucky one township of land, excepting the sixteenth section, to be located in one of the Territories on lands to which the Indian title had been extinguished. By the act of March 3, 1843, the trustees of the Centre College of Kentucky were invested with all the rights of the deaf and dumb asylum of Kentucky in the grant, provided that the proceeds of the sale of the lands were not diverted from the purposes and intention of the original grant. So this was combined with the capital of the Centre College of Kentucky, from whose academic shades have come some of the best scholars in the country. Now, going back to 1812—

"The grant to Jefferson College, Mississippi, is concisely stated in the order of the Secretary of the Treasury dated October 5, 1812."

That was an important grant, and one that was specially guarded and taken care of. So we go on—it would take too long to cite these different grants—until we come to the latter-day grants, one of which I wish to allude to more particularly:

"July 2, 1862, Congress enlarged the national educational endowment system by the donation to each State of 30,000 acres of public lands not otherwise reserved (no mineral lands could be selected, and selections must be of quarter-sections) for each Senator and Representative (to which such State was entitled under the apportionment of 1860) for the support of colleges for the cultivation of agricultural and mechanical science and arts. It was championed in the Senate by Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, of Vermont."

Subsequent to that, within the past two or three years, we passed a bill, under the management and direction of the same eminent Senator, not going as far as this bill, but a bill going in the same direction, by a vote that amounted to two-thirds of the Senate, I believe. I cheerfully advocated and voted for that bill, as I do for this.

Then look, Mr. President, not to detain the Senate by reading, at the 2 per cent. funds, the 5 per cent. funds of the net proceeds of sales of public lands for school purposes, heretofore so freely and bountifully given to certain States.

* * * * * * * *

The trustees of the Peabody fund, at their meeting, in 1880 designated a committee to address Congress on the very subject we now have in hand. That committee consisted of the present Chief-Justice of the United States, who presides over the first court that sits in the civilized world; of an ex-Attorney-General and an ex-Secretary of State, Mr. Evarts, and of the accomplished Secretary of the Interior under Mr. Fillmore, Mr. Alexander H. H. Stuart, of Virginia. That was the committee appointed by these trustees to draught a memorial to Congress. They draughted this memorial, and I wish now to read some parts of it. After showing the necessity of Congressional aid, they say, on page 11:

"The next point which your committee have felt it to be their duty to consider is, does Congress possess the constitutional power, not to control, but to contribute to, the education of citizens of the States?"

This bill does not control, for, as I stated in the analysis I have made of it, it does not attempt to interfere with the management at all except in section 5, where it speaks of a certain limited course to be pursued.

"Does Congress possess the constitutional power, not to control, but to contribute to the education of citizens of the States?

"If doubts were entertained as to the existence of such a power in an unqualified form, it might well be contended that the case of the colored population is surrounded by such peculiar circumstances as to take it out of the influence of any general rule. But fortunately this question, even in its general aspect, is not a new one, presented now for the first time to be decided. It may be regarded as res adjudicata. The laws of the United States present innumerable precedents in which Congress has exercised the power to contribute toward the general education of citizens of the new States, and in no instance has its constitutional right to do so been questioned."

They proceed; they go over the same precedents the Senator from Florida alluded to the other day, and some of which I alluded to. Then there is a discussion which I will not detain the Senate with upon the new feature of the large class of population enfranchised to which the Senator from Florida called our attention on Friday. Then they say:

"The experience of this board has demonstrated the propriety of using the officers connected with the school systems of the respective States as agents in the application of the funds of the Peabody board to the purposes of the trust."

That is what this bill proposes to do.

"All the Southern States seem now to have awakened to a sense of the importance of a general system of free schools. Most of them have organized efficient systems of instruction so far as their limited means will allow them to go."

I desire the Senator from Kansas who sits nearest the door [Mr. PLUMB] to hear this part of this memorial, because it answers some of the propositions that he stated the other day to the Senate.

"Most of them have organized efficient systems of instruction so far as their limited means will allow them to go. Faithful and competent officers have in most instances been put in charge of them. These agencies are too important to be overlooked."

Mr. BROWN. The Secretary will now please turn to page 2697 and read the remarks of Senator Garland which are marked on that page.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the executive department of this Government can not know any officer of the State legally, except the governor, and if Senators will take the pains to run through the many statutes they will find that it is a constant proceeding to call on the governor. The Secretary of the Interior certifies a list of swamp lands under the act of 1850 to the governor, and the governor certifies back that it is all right, and he demands a patent for the lands so certified, and he gets it. The Secretary of War certifies a list of muster-rolls under the act of 1873 to the governor, and the governor examines and certifies that there are so many companies and they are entitled to a distribution of arms under the act.

* * * * * * * *

I corresponded a good deal with the Secretary of War for arms for Arkansas, which he did not give me, when I was governor. I corresponded frequently with the Secretary of the Interior about swamp lands, some of which he gave me and some of which he did not. I did not feel insulted, nor did my people. You can not deal with anybody else but the governor of the State, or you do not know legally any other person there, and the statutes are full of such instances.

Mr. BROWN. I now desire to have the Secretary read from Senator Garland's speech on the bill relative to foot-and-mouth disease among cattle in certain portions that I have marked in the pamphlet copy of his speech on page 5. I send the pamphlet to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

In the first volume of Story on the Constitution, sectional page 978, commenting on the clause of the Constitution which provides for levying taxes, imposts, etc., to pay the debts and provide for the general welfare, we find that eminent judge quoting with approbation the report of Mr. Hamilton on manufactures in 1791. He says:

"The terms 'general welfare' were doubtless intended to signify more than was expressed or imported in those which preceded—

That is, to levy taxes for the purpose of paying the debts, etc.—

"otherwise numerous exigencies incident to the affairs of the nation would have been left without a provision. The phrase is as comprehensive as any that could have been used; because it was not fit that the constitutional authority of the Union to appropriate its revenues should have been restricted within narrower limits than the general welfare, and because this necessarily embraces a vast variety of particulars which are susceptible neither of specification nor of definition. It is therefore of necessity left to the discretion of the National Legislature to pronounce upon the objects which concern the general welfare, and for which, under that description, an appropriation of money is requisite and proper."

Then, in section 979, Judge Story says:

"But the most thorough and elaborate view which perhaps has ever been taken of the subject will be found in the exposition of President Monroe which accompanied his message respecting the bill for the repairs of the Cumberland road (4th of May, 1822). The following passage contains what is most direct to the present purposes:"

President Monroe, as quoted in sections 984 and 985, said:

"SEC. 984. I have dwelt thus long on this part of the subject from an earnest desire to fix, in a clear and satisfactory manner, the import of the second part of this grant, well knowing, from the generality of the terms used, their tendency to lead into error. I indulge a strong hope that the view herein presented will not be without effect, but will tend to satisfy the unprejudiced and impartial that nothing more was granted by that part than a power to appropriate the public money raised under the other part. To what extent that power may be carried will be the next object of inquiry.

"SEC. 985. It is contended on the one side that, as the National Government is a government of limited powers, it has no right to expend money except in the performance of acts authorized by the other specific grants according to a strict construction of their powers; that this grant, in neither of its branches, gives to Congress a discretionary power of any kind, but is a mere instrument in its hands to carry into effect the powers contained in the other grants. To this construction I was inclined in the more early stage of our Government; but on further reflection and observation my mind has undergone a change, for reasons which I will frankly unfold."

Story quotes Monroe with approbation. Then Monroe proceeds at length to give his views why he had changed his opinion. It is not necessary to read that. Now, in a note to this Judge Story says:

"There is no doubt that President Washington fully concurred in this opinion, as his repeated recommendations to Congress of objects of this sort, especially of the encouragement of manufactures, of learning, of a university, of new inventions, of agriculture, of commerce and navigation, of a military academy, abundantly prove.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to quote also from pages 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 of that speech, and I will ask permission to insert it in my speech without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

On the present occasion the Senator from Kansas presents the fact that, overleaping the local and domestic authorities of the State of Kansas, a disease there exists which threatens to become general in its character over the whole country whose interests are bound up in this great industry. If the cod-fishery bounty was constitutional, as Story said, for the purpose of encouraging the formation of a hardy class of men who should be ready for the Navy, why is not this? Those bounties were granted, says Story, not silently, but after long debate on the constitutional theory involved, and passed as early as 1792.

* * * * * * * *

Story states three or four instances, to which I have referred and on which I have commented somewhat. I have made an abstract of most of the subsequent acts for the information of the country.

In 2 Statutes at Large, page 730, is "An act for the relief of the citizens of Venezuela," approved May 8, 1812, which appropriated $50,000 for the purchase of provisions for the relief of citizens of Venezuela who suffered in the late earthquake. Under what power of Congress, if you are acting on a strict and rigid interpretation of the powers granted, did we get the authority to relieve the suffering people of Venezuela? That measure was supported by some of the first men who ever stood in this country, whose names are not only historical but whose lives are classic. Even as early as the second volume of the Statutes at Large we have that precedent set, in the year 1812.

Then in 3 Statutes at Large, page 211, we have "An act for the relief of the inhabitants of the late county of New Madrid, in the Missouri Territory, who suffered by earthquake."

* * * * * * * *

In 9 Statutes at Large, page 207, is a joint resolution authorizing the employment of the ships Macedonian and Jamestown in transporting provisions for the famishing poor of Ireland and Scotland, approved March 3, 1847.

In 14 Statutes at Large, page 369, is a joint resolution for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine, approved July 27, 1866. One town in the State of Maine that suffered by fire was relieved in 1866; one town not quite as big as the State of Kansas, nor quite as broad as the line between Missouri and Kansas; and yet we are told we can not relieve this calamity!

* * * * * * * *

In 14 Statutes at Large, page 567, will be found a joint resolution authorizing the employment of a public vessel for the transportation of provisions to the people of the Southern States suffering from the failure of crops, approved February 22, 1867, approved on the anniversary of the day General Washington was born. That was to relieve suffering from the failure of crops. Here is an industry now that is threatened with prostration which will be worse than the failure of crops to the people who suffer from it, and it is not worth while to say, "Wait till the blow is struck and the calamity done; then relieve it." The sound of the fire-bell is always unpleasant, especially when you have to get up at night to go out to suppress the fire and endeavor to save life and property. We had better take precautions in advance, and not wait until these people come crippled here and say, "Our industry is gone." Let us take time by the forelock with this threatening aspect before us. But let us proceed.

On the 10th of February, 1871, was approved a joint resolution authorizing the use of a naval vessel to transport breadstuffs to Europe. (14 Statutes at Large, page 596.)

Then February 5, 1872 (17 Statutes at Large, page 51), was approved an act for the relief of sufferers by fire at Chicago. That is very significant. There was another fire in a bigger town, with more people than Portland; it was a calamity of a character not local or domestic, so that the State authorities could reach it, and the exigency called for the exercise of the power of Congress.

In 18 Statutes at Large, part 3, page 34, is an act to provide for the relief of persons suffering from the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River, approved April 23, 1874, which authorized the temporary issue of army rations and clothing. Then on May 13, 1874 (same volume, page 45), was an act to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the act of April 23, 1874, which appropriated $70,000 for the purchase of supplies of food for sufferers by the overflow of Lower Mississippi, described in the act of April 23, 1874. And still further, in the same volume, page 287, was a joint resolution authorizing the issue of army provisions and clothing to the destitute people in the valley of the Tombigbee, Warrior, and Alabama Rivers, rendered destitute by the recent inundation of their homes in those valleys.

Again, in the same volume, page 230, the sundry civil appropriation act, approved June 23, 1874, appropriated $400,000 to carry out the act of April 23, 1874, and the joint resolution of May 28, 1874, and also allowed part of the money to be used for the relief of destitute people on the Tennessee River suffering from the recent overflow of that river.

These are some of the precedents of Congressional legislation that I have taken the pains to note. I undertake to say that there is no case upon this list that is more important and urgent than the appeal now made to Congress. There is not one based on higher or more general considerations than this that we now have in hand. But these are not all. Where did we get the power to do these things? Where do we get the power to appropriate for educating the children, as we have done and probably will soon be called upon to do again?

Mr. President, under your gallant lead [Mr. HARRIS in the chair] Congress a few years since established a national board of health to guard against yellow fever and cholera and small-pox, and all those ravaging diseases which afflict the human family. After long debate—every inch of ground was contested and fought a battle over—the Senate passed that bill. And what I advocate now is but the doctrine I stood upon then in urging the passage of that bill, and the same doctrine I advanced and argued for when we had the hard struggle over the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River in this body some two years and more since.

* * * * * * * *

It is only a short time since, comparatively, when I was called upon and voted very freely and not grudgingly to supply the people who had been afflicted by the locusts in the Western country with money to buy seeds to replant. It is only a short time since, comparatively, when I voted money for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi Valley, in which I am directly interested. Where do you get the authority to do all this unless you get it from the power that I have attempted to discuss? It will not do to say that it is sympathy. There is not anything said in the Constitution about sympathy. I do not believe that the word is in there, from A to Z.

Where do you get the power to keep the flower garden near your Capitol? What power in the Constitution is that necessary to execute? Or take the Library building that most of us voted for some time since; why is that? It is done for the general welfare of the people of the country. Where do you get the power to erect the statues of great men, men whose reputation in life has been won in killing their human brethren? You get it under this power, and nowhere else. It is not necessary to any war power or any naval power to erect these monuments or these statues. Where does the Senator from Missouri get the authority to vote for sending books and pamphlets from the Agricultural Department or any other Department to his constituents in Missouri? It is because it is for the general welfare, to educate the human mind.

* * * * * * * *

I state now, as I stated once before and probably oftener, that Judge Story in assuming and adopting the language of Monroe and the other Presidents who had signed these papers and had approved these calls and appeals and demands, adopts the language first beginning with Mr. Hamilton in his report on manufactures in 1791, and even that of Mr. Jefferson himself, who was the father of what we understand as the State-rights school, who worshiped State rights as devotedly as ever the Persian bowed before the eternal fires of the sky. How did Jefferson himself buy Louisiana? How did he get possession of Louisiana except from the fact that he said it was essential to the general welfare of the country that we should have that territory, and that river, and the mouth of that river?

* * * * * * *

Now, following up the line of precedents, I will call them to mind simply from memory. Where did we get the authority to go and exhibit ourselves at the Centennial Exposition? That was debated here at length before I came into the Senate. It was debated for days, and the Senate, I believe by a unanimous vote, said that we should appropriate money for it

* * * * * * *

But a short time since we went down to Yorktown and made speeches and enjoyed ourselves very much. Where did that authority come from? That was not the war power, although we went there to celebrate a victory. Where did we get the authority to send off the expedition that we voted a short time since to hunt Greely and his lost crew? Going further back, where did we get the power to donate the swamp lands to the States, as we did by the act of September 28, 1850? This was a donation pure and simple. So of the grant of lands to aid agricultural colleges, and the grant for the benefit of insane asylums.

Before leaving this topic one thing more occurs to me. We are purchasing the papers of great men. We bought Jefferson's works in times gone by; we bought Mr. Adams's works, and Mr. Madison's; and since I have been in the Senate we have passed a resolution through both Houses to buy the papers of a distinguished French gentleman. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] who sits to my left introduced but a short time since a resolution to purchase the papers of somebody else. Where did we get all this authority and this power?

Now, it is time, if we can not do this, to call a halt. But imbedded and concreted as this action is in the very theory of our Constitution as interpreted by some of its best lights and expounders, interpreted and applied by President after President, piled almost as high as Pelion upon Ossa, it is too late in the day for us to say we can not do it. We must turn back the history of this country almost a century, and reverse its whole order. When I cite the precedents here and the interpretation, I cite that which is legitimate, because, as Sir James Mackintosh said, "No government has ever been made, but governments grow."

We have construed the Constitution, we have interpreted it, we have applied it time after time, day after day, month after month, and year after year. It is too late now to say that we can not apply it in this instance, when our country is threatened with cattle disease, as we have it from gentlemen who are familiar with the subject and whose duty it is to speak of it. It is too late, I say, to question the authority. It is there; it is written in the text, for what is understood in the text is a part of the text. It is written in the precedents which have become a part of the law of the country.

Mr. BROWN. I now ask the Secretary to turn back to the copy of the RECORD before him and to read from page 2368 the marked portion of the speech of the then Senator Lamar, now Mr. Justice Lamar, of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a few moments, not with the expectation of adding anything new to the arguments that have been advanced on this subject, but simply to state my own reasons for the vote which I shall give. I have bestowed upon the constitutional question involved in this measure the study which its importance deserves. I shall not go over the ground already occupied by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Jones], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Garland], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], nor will I recite the imposing authorities arrayed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. I have no doubt about the constitutional authority of Congress to pass this measure. Indeed, if we should reject it on the ground that it is unconstitutional for Congress to give aid to the States in the exercise of their exclusive jurisdiction over the education of their people, we would be reversing the settled policy of this Government.

The refinements and subtleties about the distinction between the granting of land and an appropriation of money for educational purposes do not satisfy my mind. Even if such a distinction would hold it does not apply to the constitutional question that is made. It is not the kind of aid granted, whether it be in land or in money, but the purpose for which it is granted, that is to be considered. It is the threatened intervention of the Federal Government into the educational affairs of a State to which the constitutional objection applies, and intervention is as menacing when it comes in the form of a land grant as when it comes in the shape of an appropriation. I do not regard it as a menace in either case.

Mr. BROWN. I now ask the Secretary to read a short extract from a message of President Pierce in the Thirty-third Congress. I send the volume to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

I have been unable to discover any distinction on constitutional grounds, or grounds of expediency, between an appropriation of $10,000,000 directly from the money in the Treasury for the object contemplated and the appropriation of lands presented for my sanction; and yet I can not doubt that if the bill proposed $10,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States for the support of the indigent insane in the several States, that the constitutional question involved in the act would have attracted forcibly the attention of Congress.

I respectfully submit that in a constitutional point of view it is wholly immaterial whether the appropriation be in money or in land.

Mr. BROWN. I now turn to a copy of the speech of my able and eloquent friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and I read the overwhelming facts as to the practice of the Government on this question, which he enumerated with burning eloquence in the speech referred to. I will insert the portion which I desire, on pages 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, without reading, with the consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

What do we see when we turn to this policy? Every State admitted into the Union since the adoption of the Constitution has received upon her admission a birthday present, as it were, a rich donation of lands, an educational endowment in behalf of the children she was to bring forth and train up for duty as American citizens. This was a present from the National Government to every State; to yours, sir [Mr. HARRIS, in the chair], and to mine; and what a splendid endowment it has been! Can I stand here and forget what was done for my own State? Indiana had her sixteenth section; she had her university lands; she had her land-scrip given to her in lieu of lands that could not be taken up in her own borders. Am I to ignore these facts when an appeal is made to me by people who have had thrown upon them an unnatural and abnormal condition of affairs in the liberation and enfranchisement of a whole race buried in ignorance? New States came into the Union with natural surroundings and with no exceptional burdens. The Southern States are struggling to-day with a problem heretofore unknown in human history, and with a responsibility far beyond their power to meet. But with no such appalling circumstances surrounding the other States of the Union, the policy of this Government toward them has been all the time in the exercise of that power which is now denied by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and other Senators on this floor, when it is invoked for the relief of the afflicted States of the South.

Every sixteenth section of public land in the States admitted prior to 1848 and every sixteenth and thirty-sixth section of such land in the States and Territories since organized have been granted for educational purposes. The lands granted for educational purposes, both for common schools and universities, throughout the Union have amounted to nearly 100,000,000 acres. Yet I am told that the Government has not the power to aid the cause of education in the States. Why not the power?

Do you answer that lands can be granted, but not money? I had promised myself that I would not waste any time on that point. Money is no more a thing of value than land. One is a commodity as the other is. Money is worth only what it can be exchanged for, and so are lands; and when lands are donated it is with the express understanding that the State can exchange them at once for any other commodity, money or anything else, that will best promote the cause of education. I shall waste but little time on that point. According to this distinction between the donation of lands and the donation of money Congress has the power to grant the recently acquired Territory of Alaska to the several States for educational purposes, well knowing that the States would sell the Territory and apply the proceeds to their schools, but Congress could not have donated the seven millions to the States for school purposes which we paid to Russia for the Territory. Such a proposition only needs to be stated to be rejected.

The following table of lands granted for school purposes will be of interest as illustrating the policy of the Government on this subject:

| State. | Acres. | Year. |
|---|---|---|
| Ohio | 704,488 | 1803 |
| Indiana | 650,317 | 1816 |
| Illinois | 985,066 | 1818 |
| Missouri | 1,199,150 | 1820 |
| Alabama | 992,774 | 1819 |
| Mississippi | 837,584 | 1803 |
| Louisiana | 786,044 | 1806 |
| Michigan | 1,067,397 | 1836 |
| Arkansas | 886,460 | 1836 |
| Florida | 908,503 | 1845 |
| Iowa | 995,144 | 1845 |
| Wisconsin | 958,649 | 1846 |
| California | 6,719,324 | 1853 |
| Minnesota | 2,969,990 | 1857 |
| Oregon | 3,329,706 | 1859 |
| Kansas | 2,801,906 | 1861 |
| Nevada | 3,935,428 | 1864 |
| Nebraska | 2,702,044 | 1864 |
| Colorado | 3,715,555 | 1875 |

In addition to these grants to the States there have been donated over 30,000,000 acres to the eight organized Territories of the United States, making an aggregate of lands granted to the States and Territories for school purposes of 67,893,919 acres.

Then, for the purpose of aiding in the establishment of universities, still other lands have been donated to the States and Territories, amounting in all to 1,165,520 acres.

Next comes the land-scrip. I have other tables and figures here which I will not dwell on at length. But I see that one university in Indiana is put down in this official report as the recipient of over $212,000, proceeds of the sale of land-scrip which was issued to Indiana in lieu of land that she could not locate within her borders. There are some striking revelations in these statistics. The need of the South is very sore, and yet abundance has in some instances been given where nothing was needed. California, coming into this Union thirty years ago with a crown of gold upon her head and untold wealth in all her veins, was the recipient from the Government of nearly seven million acres of land for educational purposes. She was rich, with a magnificent future before her; yet the power of the Government was thought to be equal to the task of giving her a great domain besides; now it is denied to the States that are poor and depressed indeed.

Allow me to call attention also to the transactions of 1836 between the Federal Government and the States, which resulted in vast assistance to the cause of education within the States. They illustrate the fact that Federal assistance has taken every shape. In 1836 the Federal Government found itself with a surplus of revenue on its hands, and by act approved June 23, 1836, provision was made to deposit the same with the States in proportion to their representation. The amounts thus deposited with the States will be shown by the appended table:

|---|---|
| Maine | $955,838.25 |
| New Hampshire | 669,086.79 |
| Massachusetts | 1,338,173.58 |
| Vermont | 669,086.79 |
| Connecticut | 764,670.60 |
| Rhode Island | 382,335.30 |
| New York | 4,014,520.71 |
| New Jersey | 764,670.60 |
| Pennsylvania | 2,867,514.78 |
| Delaware | 286,751.49 |
| Maryland | 955,838.25 |
| Virginia | 2,198,427.99 |
| North Carolina | 1,433,757.39 |
| South Carolina | 1,051,422.69 |
| Georgia | 1,051,422.69 |
| Alabama | 669,086.79 |
| Louisiana | 477,919.14 |
| Mississippi | 382,335.30 |
| Tennessee | 1,433,757.39 |
| Kentucky | 1,433,757.39 |
| Ohio | 2,007,260.34 |
| Missouri | 382,335.30 |
| Indiana | 860,254.44 |
| Illinois | 477,919.14 |
| Michigan | 286,751.49 |
| Arkansas | 286,751.49 |
| Total | 28,101,644.91 |

And although the law making this distribution provides for the return of the money to the Federal Treasury "whenever the same shall be required by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of defraying any wants of the public Treasury," yet no such requirement has ever been made. Thus we see that for nearly fifty years past the States have enjoyed a practical donation from the Federal Government of more than twenty-eight millions in actual money, which in almost if not quite every instance has been converted into the school funds of the several States. New York thus appropriated the four millions and over which fell to her share, and the other States generally followed her example, while the Federal Government gave its approval by its silent acquiescence.

What else has been done in the matter of education as a national work? Do Senators forget recent events? Since the war more than $6,000,000, not in lands, but in money, have been appropriated by Congress for colored schools in the South. I have the appropriation acts here if there is any question as to my statement. The freedmen's schools have been fed with national appropriations during the last twenty years, and to the extent of over $6,000,000. Is it not somewhat late in the day to call in question the power of Congress to pass the pending measure? I give you a precedent in your own day and generation. How is it to be answered? Do you who oppose this bill say that the schools for the freedmen were unconstitutional? Why then was that question not tested in the courts? It could easily have been done at the proper time.

But, sir, I come to a still later date and even a more striking illustration. Within the last twelve months, during the last fiscal year, Congress appropriated $400,000 with which to educate the Indian children at Hampton and at Carlisle. How will you answer that? Where were the voices now so eloquent, where the speeches now so learned and so long, when that bill passed the Senate, taking $400,000 of tax-raised revenue out of the Treasury with which to instruct and enlighten the little copper-colored, dark-eyed, straight-haired children of the desert within a hundred miles of this Capitol? Where were these vigilant sentries of the Constitution then? Were they dozing on their posts, or is the dusky Indian dearer in their regard than their own blood and kin? The white child is in this bill; the white face is here as well as the dark one. Is the barbarian's child of the forests, the offspring of the frontiers, a more important and cherished object of your care than the white child of the South? Does the Constitution expand in its application in one direction and contract in another? Is there a certain elasticity in the Constitution toward the schools at Hampton and Carlisle and a contractability in the same instrument when applied to schools of your own?

I am amazed; it fills me with wonder when I hear some of the arguments which have been advanced on this floor. There is not a year, nor a month, nor a week, nor a day since 1789 to the present hour in which the authority in this bill, in one shape or another, has not been the active policy of this Government for our own people as well as for other races. This policy fills all our history with its precedents, and the whole land with its blessings.

But, Mr. President, we have heard much able and learned discussion in regard to a strict construction of the Constitution. Sir, I am for a strict construction of the Constitution. I am for strictly construing it in order to accomplish, not to defeat, the great ends for which it was ordained. I wish to so construe it as to promote and fulfill those beneficent and lofty aims proclaimed in the instrument itself. I would strictly construe that immortal instrument as a vital, affirmative force for the achievement of its own declared purposes, and the accomplishment of our destiny as a united and enlightened Republic. To me it means what it says; to my mind there is not a meaningless provision in it. When it declares its purpose "to promote the general welfare," and declares, further on among the grant of powers, that Congress shall provide for that great end, I do not feel at liberty to assume that the framers of the Constitution were indulging in words, mere words, without meaning, life, or force. I firmly believe, too, that the power of self-preservation exists in this Government. The object of its creation was to live, not to die.

* * * * * * *

No; the simple truth is Jefferson saw that the exclusive possession of the channel and of the mouth of the Mississippi River was necessary to the general welfare, the prosperity, advancement, wealth, and growth of the country, and he grasped the occasion to accomplish these legitimate objects of Government with more eagerness and zeal than is usual in an executive officer. Nearly the entire correspondence on the subject with the minister of the great Napoleon will be found in Jefferson's own hand, although his Secretary of State was one of the most accomplished men of his times.

Texas came to us upon the same principles which governed Jefferson in securing Louisiana; then the vast acquisitions of territory following the Mexican war, until now all that mighty region from British America to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, stands to-day, and will stand forever, as a monument to the foresight, sagacity, and prophetic statesmanship of Thomas Jefferson while executing the welfare clause of the Constitution, without a single specific grant of power to warrant the first steps taken or any that followed. There it stands, the seat of present and future empire. We secured it all during the days of strict construction. Louisiana, Texas, and all the other vast regions I have mentioned confront us as a stupendous refutation of the idea that we can do nothing for the general welfare under a strict construction of the Constitution.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, these references to the unbroken practice of the Government for almost a century seem to me to be overwhelming on this question.

I have listened, with great pleasure, as I always do, to the eloquent argument made by each of the Texas Senators against the constitutionality of this bill. With an immense public-school fund in cash, the proceeds of the public lands of the State of Texas, and with nearly 30,000,000 acres of land from which the State has yet to realize for the benefit of her schools and colleges, I envy the Senators, as their State has the most magnificent school fund of any like number of people on the face of the earth. They therefore have no possible need of the proposed relief, and I regret that they find insuperable constitutional difficulties in the way of voting for the bill.

But even my friends from the rich State of Texas, like all the balance of us, have voted annually for an appropriation to buy seed to send all over the Union to our constituents, and when, a year or two since, the drought ruined the crops in a number of counties of Texas and a bill was introduced to furnish an increased quantity of seed of different varieties to the drought-stricken counties of Texas, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] voted for the bill, and his present colleague, then a member of the House, I believe also voted for it. I admit that they did only what we all did, with few exceptions, and which we do every year when we make the annual appropriation to furnish seed to be sent out to our constituents, but under what section of the Constitution did they find the delegated power to do this, unless it be the section to which I have referred.

A few words more, Mr. President, and I have said all I intend to say. My highly esteemed friend from Missouri, Senator VEST, in his able and eloquent speech the other day in opposition to this bill, held, as it seemed to me, in terrorem over the Senate the veto of the President of the United States, in case this bill should pass. I did not understand the Senator to say that he had any information from the President on that subject, or any personal knowledge of the President's intentions. I suppose he received his impressions from his knowledge of the convictions of the President, usually, on questions of a public character. But I can not concur with my friend in contemplating even the possibility of a veto in case of the passage of this bill. I have already read you quotations from the able and unanswerable speech of Senator Garland sustaining the constitutionality of this bill, and extracts from the speech of Senator Lamar, now Mr. Justice Lamar, unequivocally affirming the constitutionality of the act. The newspapers made a point on Senator Garland, when his name was spoken of for Attorney-General, that he was not a suitable man because of his latitudinarian construction of the Constitution. He and Mr. Lamar were probably the two ablest advocates of this bill in the Senate. They both concurred in the constitutionality of the bill, and they were both invited into the Cabinet, notwithstanding the adverse criticism growing out of their construction of the Constitution, where they have both remained until a few days since, when the President was so much pleased with Mr. Secretary Lamar that he invited him up to a higher position, to take a seat on the bench, where all constitutional questions are to be decided in the last resort. The appointment and continuance of Attorney-General Garland and the two appointments of Mr. Justice Lamar were no doubt made with full knowledge on the part of the President of their position on the constitutional question involved in this bill.

But that is not all. The ablest and most eloquent defense which any one has made on this floor of the President's administration and policy was that submitted by my highly esteemed and eloquent friend, Senator VOORHEES, of Indiana. He, too, unequivocally indorses and ably sustains the constitutionality of this measure. If, therefore, the President may be judged by his actions, and by his appointments of able men to high positions who unequivocally sustain the constitutionality of this measure, then I feel that I may safely say that we have nothing to fear from an executive veto. But suppose there is danger of a veto, what has that to do with it? Each Senator has a duty to perform at this stage of the bill. In case of its passage the responsibility of the executive then begins. And in case of a veto our final responsibility then attaches. I submit this question without further remark. I have no doubt about either the constitutionality or the necessity and sound policy of this measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Education and Labor report in section 8, line 10, after the word "authority," to insert the words "including interest money from any source."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

Mr. BLAIR. The amendment just acted on is the only one from the committee. The next is one offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], to which he desires to speak. He is not in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Territories, and in the District of Columbia, in proportion to their population, respectively, according to the census of 1880: Provided, That all of said money remaining undistributed at the date of the publication of the returns of population as shown by the census of 1890, shall be divided as aforesaid in proportion to the population according to said census of 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, as I know the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] desires to be heard upon his amendment, and is not present, if no one else desires to take the floor now, I will resume, and give a little more evidence.

I will now read to the Senate a short extract from an address by Dr. Curry, so long distinguished as the agent of the Peabody school fund. He is now our minister to Spain. Referring to the efforts of the South, which had come under his observation, to establish a system of common schools, and invigorate it so far as possible with contributions and with features of efficiency, he says:

Despite these patriotic efforts illiteracy abounds fearfully. Of the school population of the South nearly half are not in school. The whites of educational age, under nineteen, not enrolled number 1,719,723; the colored, 1,126,815. Nearly one-half of the white children and more than one-half of the colored are growing up without educational advantages.

The resources of the South are wholly inadequate to meet the heavy burden which is upon her. In her present financial condition, universal education without Federal aid is distant, is impossible. In the most advanced and prosperous countries schools and their management are not upon a satisfactory basis. Governor Butler is reported as saying that even in Massachusetts 92 per cent. of the children receive no education after they attain the age of fifteen years. On an average, our people do not get more than thirty months' schooling.

This is true in highly prosperous localities; but the Southern States are poor. I am no pessimist nor alarmist. The progress in mining and in manufactures has been great, but agriculture and tillage and common roads are not in a flattering condition. Excluding Delaware, Maryland, and Missouri, the assessed valuation of property in the remaining Southern States diminished between 1860 and 1880, $2,432,730,524. The State of New York is said to be worth in taxable property as much as all the Southern States. Ignorant labor dooms to poverty. It is idle to be drawing roseate pictures of the "new South," until the laboring classes are far ahead in intelligence and skill of present attainments. The loss from stupid or unskilled labor would educate a hundred times over every child in the South. With her sparse population, with means not half what they were in ante-bellum days, with double the number of children to be educated, it is impossible for the South, by any tax short of confiscation, to provide education for the children within her borders.

It is well to open our eyes to stubborn, irremovable facts, and confront the perils growing out of them. Reference has been made to the alarming fact that in the late slaveholding States and in the District of Columbia there is a non-attendance of 1,719,723 white children, and of 1,126,815 negro children. That may be prospective peril, but its fearfulness may be estimated if we consider that the South had in 1870 4,189,972 illiterates, and in 1880 4,741,173, an increase of over one half a million in spite of the educational activities of the intermediate ten years. The total number of illiterates of voting age in the slaveholding States in 1870 was 1,146,707; in 1880, 1,363,844, an increase of illiterate voters of 217,137. The total number of males of voting age in the South in 1880 was 4,119,908, and of these 1,363,844 were illiterate. Thirty-three and one-tenth per cent. of the voters in the South are illiterate. Of the illiterate 69.8 per cent. are colored, and 30.2 per cent. whites. It is specially significant that these figures show an increase of illiterate voters in the last decade.

If my first postulate be true, that education is fundamental to the right discharge of the duties and functions of American citizenship, may I not, in homely language, ask our governors, What are you going to do about this illiteracy and consequent peril? The life of the Republic is one desperate and prolonged struggle against ignorance, and the States are impotent in the encounter.

I will next read a letter from a gentleman of distinction in Louisiana, who, in the year 1884, delivered the commencement address upon national aid before the faculty and students of the Louisiana State University, Judge A. A. Gunby, of Monroe, La. In this address, as a whole, he strongly advocates the constitutionality and the necessity of national aid. In inclosing his address he writes me a letter from Monroe, dated November 23, 1887. He says:

MONROE, LA., November 23, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have received yours of 19th instant, and assure you that I feel great interest in the subject of national aid to education. By thorough and comprehensive study of our constitutional history and legislative precedents I have satisfied myself of the sound constitutionality of the measure advocated by you, and my own observation and knowledge as a Southern man convince me of its expediency and necessity.

Our State Educational Association, which met at Shreveport in August, 1887, adopted a resolution heartily indorsing your bill and urging our Representatives to support it. All the enlightened educators of our State, in fact everybody who really believes in public education, is an advocate of national aid to education, and fully recognizes the pressing necessity of extraneous assistance in the education of both white and colored citizens.

As far as my knowledge extends, those who oppose your measure in this State are either free-trade fanatics or belong to that class of rigid and narrow thinkers who entertain and foster a natural and ineradicable hatred to all intellectual culture at public expense. In this city we keep our public schools open nine or ten months in every year by a special tax. But our teachers are poorly paid, and in less favored localities three months of public schools is the average per year. In the state of our public debt and our private financial condition, it is equally impossible for us to devote more of the taxes to education or to increase the rate of taxation.

But why should I rehearse these details? If education is a public good, we ought to have it in larger abundance than it has ever been enjoyed in the South. As a matter of simple justice in return for the enforced citizenship of former slaves, and the consequent imposition of reckless and impoverishing carpet-bag governments, the Federal Government should aid the South in the development of both her mental and her material resources, and the same liberal interpretation of the Constitution which enables you gentlemen at Washington to vote appropriations for internal improvements, warrants and encourages appropriations from the same source for aiding in educating, enlightening, and forming American citizens.

Please excuse the length of this, and let me know if I can serve you further. I bid you Godspeed in your noble and patriotic efforts in the highest of all human causes.

Very respectfully,

A. A. GUNBY.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
United States Senate.

I have a communication from Rev. J. A. B. Lovett, A. M., principal of the Male Institute and Business College at Huntsville, Ala. He says:

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., November 30, 1887.

KIND SIR: Your letter, asking me to inform you concerning the educational needs of Alabama, has been received, and the following items are given in answer to same:

1. Our public-school terms are only about three months in the year.
2. The average monthly pay of teachers is about $22.
3. Our population is rapidly increasing, making the per capita allowance from State fund only 71 cents for white children, and 66 cents for colored.
4. It appears that our State is doing about as well as some of our best Northern States, in proportion to taxable valuation of property.
5. Our State needs assistance. She can not educate the masses with her own efforts—at least we can not hope that she will.
6. I think I can safely say that a large majority of the people of Alabama would most gladly see the passage of the Federal aid bill. In inclosed clipping from the last number of the Alabama Teachers' Journal, of which I am editor, you will see how it stands on the question. I expect to attend superintendents' meeting in Washington next February, at which time I shall be pleased to meet you again.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. B. LOVETT,
Superintendent City Schools.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

I will send the editorial alluded to, which is to be found in the educational journal of the State, to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the editorial, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION.

It is known to most of the present readers of the Alabama Teachers' Journal that we have been an advocate and warm friend to the cause of Federal aid to education. We are aware that some of our teachers and people oppose this measure; at the same time, we know that a large number of our people would rejoice to see the great benefits that the passage of the educational bill would bring to the children of the State. Those favoring the measure are not by any means confined to the teachers of public schools, and to those who are unable to educate their children—they are to be found among our ablest statesmen, and men of every profession and calling. The truth of the matter is, illiteracy is making fearful strides in our State, the increased percentage being seen, noted, and felt each year. What is to be done? Our population is rapidly increasing, thus reducing the per capita apportionment every year, and no funds with which to counteract the direful results.

There is perhaps no State in the Union that needs more speedy assistance than Alabama. Think of the shriveled salaries our teachers are forced to receive! Think of the more shriveled school terms our children must put up with! How can the masses be educated to careful and intelligent citizenship with the teachers on half pay and the children on fourth rations? It just can't be done, and it is but the following of our natural instincts and reason to turn our eyes to the General Government, the political father of us all, whose citizens we are, and expect the assistance we need and the aid we must have, if our rising generation is looked to for the elements of sound, patriotic, and intelligent citizenship—such a citizenship into whose hands it will be safe to place the ballot of future years.

The fact that our educational system is in distressing need of more funds can not be denied. The expediency of accepting money from the General Government is the question at issue. Some nice points of constitutional law have been pleaded by the opponents of the measure; on the other hand, these "constitutional objections" have been ably considered by those who advocate Federal aid. The way the matter stood in the last session of Congress it was quite plain to be seen that very many of our greatest statesmen were warm friends of the measure.

This article is not written to fill up our space. It is written for a definite purpose. Though we have written nothing on the subject for a number of months, we still have faith in the cause we here advocate. The Federal-aid question is not dead. Large streams flow slowly; so great national questions like this, wherein millions of people are directly concerned, can not reach a hasty conclusion.

The Congress of the United States pauses to hear from the people through their representatives. A plan on a magnificent scale is now being perfected by the Southern educational journals, by which the people will be appealed to on this question. We deem it our duty in the premises to give the people a chance, that, by proper petitioning to Congress, they may give expression of their wants in the matter.

Mr. BLAIR. I now read a letter of C. D. Nicholas, Mobile, Ala., dated January 3, 1888. I understand him to be a citizen of character and distinction in that city. I ask the Secretary to be so kind as to read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

MOBILE, ALA., January 3, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: There has been noted with a great deal of interest by many citizens in this section of our State the effort of yourself and others to get an appropriation by Congress for the purpose of providing better educational facilities for the very great mass of illiterate children in this and other sections of our great country, the majority of the States being unable to provide necessary school accommodation, because of want of money with which to do so. Especially is this true of the Southern States, the result of which is, that the periods of time during each year in which public schools are open are very short indeed; and particularly is this so in the country districts, where the great mass of illiteracy exists.

It is not doubted that the States have been and are now doing in that direction as well as it were possible for them to do; but at the same time their inability to meet the demands upon them are very plainly shown by the fact that there is no diminution in the number of the illiterate in proportion to our growing country, but rather an increase. This great evil it is believed, in fact there is no doubt of its truthfulness, can be remedied by the passage of the "Blair educational bill," and it is greatly hoped that you and your associates will continue to success your efforts in so grand a cause, the good result of which the entire country must ultimately feel and acknowledge.

With great respect, I am, very truly, yours,

C. D. NICHOLAS.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BLAIR. I have here a letter from Mr. T. J. Ellis, also of the city of Mobile. He writes:

MOBILE, ALA., December 29, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Your bill, "the Blair educational bill," is looked upon with intense interest in this section of the country by that class of citizens who are so greatly in need of national aid or some assistance other than that which they have at present for the education of their children. In the rural districts for ten or perhaps more scholastic years the appropriation was so small that a term of three months' average was difficult to obtain, for in many townships the school fund was too insignificant for one month's school. In some localities the patrons were in better circumstances than those of an adjoining locality, and would supplement the fund apportioned them and thereby have their three months' school, which is equal to no school at all after a vacation of nine months with but little exceptions. I cite, for instance, township 5 south, range 2 east, of Baldwin County, Alabama, where I have taught school.

There are 250 children within educational age in said township, and for several years the annual appropriation has not exceeded $270, and a similar condition of affairs exists in said township and other adjacent ones to-day. To say the least, from a lack of sufficient funds in many places, illiteracy is appalling. However, if your bill meets with desired success, the bright light of intelligence emanating therefrom will disperse said ignorance and a diffusion of knowledge and education will be in lieu thereof. We hope that the bill will meet with favorable results in both Houses. Feeling interested in the matter, I take occasion to send you the above statistics, and hope that they may be of some service to you. When I say "we" I voice the sentiments and wishes of that class of citizens above named, and of those who are friends to the cause of education and have contributed liberally of their personal means for the advancement of same.

Yours, with prayers for success, very respectfully,

THOS. J. ELLIS.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

I have also matter from the State of Virginia, which I may as well introduce at this time, perhaps, as any. Here is a letter from a little girl which she writes of her own condition, and I wish somebody who has the money would take care of this girl. She writes from Markham, Va., January 5, 1888, addressing myself. She says:

MARKHAM VA Jan 5 1888.

DEAR MR. SENATOR I am a little girl 9 years old and I goes to school evry day if it aint to bad I want to get lerning but cant get all the books I want and my mother is so pore she cant by non for me I herd you is a good gentman an you want to see the poor children get a good lerning and wont you plese to send me som school books that is all an I will be so glad truly

MAMIE W. SANDERS

My mother is name Mary and she is a colord woman I forgot to say I am a litle colerd girl and I am tring to lern all I can so you plese to send me som Books—if you please Sir a white lady say I mus rite to you an you wod do it for me she no.

I put that letter in the RECORD, and I hope somebody will take care of this girl. She is typical of hundreds of thousands. It is not any use to starve this hunger for knowledge upon the constitutional whimsicalities, on the strength of which we fought the war and came very near ruining our country, and laying the foundation for other wars, if that same doctrine obtains prominence again.

I have here a letter published in the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, written by a lady of distinction, as I am told, who resides in Lynchburgh, Va. She writes in December, 1887, and her name is Miss Orra Langhorne. I ask the Secretary to read the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read at the desk, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PUCLIC SCHOOLS AT THE SOUTH—A SOUTHERN WOMAN ON THE BLAIR BILL AND SOUTHERN CONGRESSMEN.

To the Editor of the Republican:

Probably no subject has ever been of more importance to the rank and file of the Southern people, and none has ever inspired more interest, than the measure known as the Blair bill. The poor whites and the negroes hailed with delight the public schools, which were among the first fruits of the great revolution in Southern society, caused by the civil war and the emancipation. The old aristocracy were slow to accept the common school, which was opposed to all the ideas in which they had been reared. There has been a great change of sentiment among them in this respect, and some who have not changed their views feel compelled to yield to the inevitable, and profess to have done so.

The public-school system had been in operation but a short time in Virginia, and presumably in other Southern States, before it became evident that the available means were wholly inadequate to the work in hand. In large towns the system has met with remarkable success. In the smaller towns and country villages it has done reasonably well, and is an improvement on the old plan, which only reached the class able to pay for education. In the rural districts public schools have by no means met the hopes cherished by the advocates of the system, and in many sections are an utter failure. The complaints are everywhere the same, differing only in degree. The school-houses are too far apart to benefit the children, and are often so rude in construction, or so dilapidated in condition, as scarcely to be fit for habitation. The school terms are so short that people say the children forget in the long vacations what they learned during the session. In short, there is not money enough to make the schools effective. The letters of the Hampton graduates, printed year after year in the Southern Workman, tell the pathetic story of the struggles of the colored teachers against adverse conditions. Often only the frame of a log cabin is furnished by the school board, and the pedagogue must turn carpenter and mason, fit windows and doors, work on the chimney, and make his benches, feeling grateful if he has the floor to put them on.

When the weather is cold he and his pupils must gather fuel as they can, and it is not surprising if the attendance is irregular when the children must come five or six miles to school. Several cases have come to my knowledge where young white women of good family, forced to earn their own living, have taught in district school-houses where it was necessary to wear a water-proof cloak and rubber shoes when it rained. The young schoolmarm, thus arrayed, walked up and down the dreary barn of a cabin while teaching the shivering children, the chimney refusing to draw, and the rain and snow falling unhindered about them. Even in such circumstances the poor girls were willing to teach in order to support themselves, but the term seldom lasts over a few months and they must look elsewhere for means to live. Probably few regions of the United States have a better appreciation of education than Rockbridge County in this State. "Log colleges" were flourishing there before the Revolution, and the sister schools of the Virginia Military Institute and Washington and Lee University have for many decades done valiant work in the training of youth. Yet in Rockbridge County the public schools are pronounced a failure. "I may almost say they are worse than no schools at all," said a gentleman connected with one of the colleges to me within the last two months.

About four weeks ago the Baptist general association of Virginia met in this city. Probably no more strictly representative body, one coming nearer to the masses, could be collected in the State, than this intelligent and substantial assembly of Baptist preachers and lay delegates. The Baptist Church is the most progressive religious body among us. Their zeal for education is notable, and they are fast occupying ground once claimed by older denominations. The association showed every grade of society from the rough mountaineer, uncouth, ill-clad, and ignorant, to the polished city pastor or college professor, arrayed in the latest style, and displaying all the advantages of culture and society. Among the assembly were preachers, teachers, and editors who have made their mark upon their generation, some of them having more than local reputation. The report of the committee on education was of remarkable interest, particularly the portion referring to candidates for the ministry. In describing the quality of the material furnished the college, one might have supposed the professor, who spoke with deep earnestness, was referring to negroes; it was hard to realize that he talked of white men.

The speaker said it was important for the local societies to examine this raw material carefully before recommending it to the theological seminary, adding pathetically that he and his brethren sometimes had to work six years on a long, lank, awkward country youth before he was fit for ordination. The doctor expatiated on the need of primary education for the candidates, some of whom could scarcely read and write and knew almost nothing of grammar and geography. It was no use to send such youths back; there was no "back" there. The speaker wound up with an energetic assertion that he "knew no better means to prevent a young man from getting an education than to send him for several years to the public schools in the rural districts of Virginia."

Doubtless these facts and a great many more are fully known to the Southern members of Congress. They must also be aware of the great popular desire for the passage of the Blair bill. Why, then, do they either oppose it or give it such lukewarm assistance that it amounts to antagonism? In a private letter from the author of the bill about two years ago, Senator BLAIR remarks, "The great trouble all the time has been the opposition of Southern Congressmen." As the Republican members of Congress from the South may be counted upon to support the bill as a party measure, if for no stronger reason, it is not necessary to include them in the present discussion of the subject. The Democratic members are divided into two distinct classes as regards the measure. As Democrats they object to allowing any bill which has already won popular approval and is sure to redound to the honor of the party which introduced it to become a law. Hoping either to defeat it altogether or to change the form of it, so that national aid to education may seem to come from Democratic sources, an effort has been made to change the character of the bill.

The Republican members of our General Assembly lately brought a resolution to urge upon the Virginia members of Congress advocacy of the Blair bill for national aid to education. A "Bourbon" Democrat offered as an amendment the words "or some other plan." Democratic Congressmen and assemblymen of the old school, the men of aristocratic birth and breeding, have no genuine sympathy with popular education, least of all for interference with our States' rights of illiteracy. There is, however, a large class of Democrats who have come to the front in recent years. These are men who had to struggle with adverse conditions in early life, who found it hard to acquire education and attain social position. Such people do have some honest sympathy with the desire of the masses for the national aid they feel to be indispensable to the efficiency of our public schools.

Our whole nation, forgetting sectional animosities and civil strife, mourned as a united people over the sufferings and death of the great captain of the Union armies, but does any one remember the advice given with prophetic earnestness in his last message to Congress? After reviewing the great disorders then existing in the South, due to the fearful illiteracy of the people and the investment of the ex-slaves with the right of suffrage, General Grant, with solemn warning of the peril to the nation if these evils were unchecked, offered three noble and patriotic suggestions, earnestly urging their adoption. These were national aid for education according to the illiteracy of the States, with compulsory education and an educational qualification for the right of suffrage in the whole country. General Grant added that he earnestly hoped these reforms would be in successful operation by the year 1890. "If ye love me keep my commandments," said a greater than General Grant. Is it not high time that all considerations of party should be laid aside and the great work indicated by the hero of the civil war inaugurated? The whole country is now, as when the message was delivered, endangered and its progress retarded by the fearful masses of illiteracy in the South. Let the Fiftieth Congress accept the task before it and give to the awakening South the great boon she demands. "Learning driveth the ignorance, barbarism, and fierceness from men's minds."

ORRA LANGHORNE.

LYNCHBURGH, VA., December, 1887.

Mr. BLAIR. I have in my hand a copy of the Portsmouth Enterprise, published at Portsmouth, Va., which I take to be a Democratic newspaper, although I am not familiar with it. The date is December 18, 1887, and, as tending to show the popular feeling among the masses of the people, I read the following editorial:

The Blair educational bill, as it passed the United States Senate last winter, has been again reported in that body by the Committee on Education. The report was unanimous, and the bill will pass the Senate. Should the Democrats in the House of Representatives fail to pass it, there will not be the remotest chance of Virginia and North Carolina casting their electoral votes for the Democratic candidates for the Presidency next fall. We are not a croaker, but we believe we know the sentiment of the people of Virginia, especially upon this measure. They are very heavily taxed to support the public schools and to educate the colored children. Millions of dollars of Government money are being given away at the North for pensions and other things. No better expenditure could be made of the millions which are accumulating in the Treasury than in relieving the Southern white people of some of the burdens which have been imposed upon them by the results of the war in educating the colored children.

I have communications from the State of Arkansas, one from Mr. A. A. C. Rogers, whose name, I have no doubt, the Senators from that State will recollect. It is dated at Pine Bluff, Ark., November 28, 1887, and addressed to myself. He says:

PINE BLUFF, ARK., November 24, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been solicited by Hon. Frank G. Wise, of this city, our efficient secretary of public schools, and one of the leading educators of this State, to give my views upon the actual necessity of national aid to our public schools. His request was based upon the fact that I have always taken a great interest in public schools and have had many opportunities throughout the Second Congressional district of learning the wants of the people.

I will preface my statements by saying that what is known as the Blair bill has been made more or less a political question by a few politicians, who hold that there is no warrant in the Constitution for the proposed temporary aid. I think this question has been settled.

I find that there is great complaint among the people as to the length of the school year. Under our State constitution and the school law it is measured by the school means of each school district. The report shows that the limit of school taxation has been reached, and that the longest school year is only twelve weeks. The masses in the rural districts being poor and the population sparce, and the districts large, the poor advantages of even the twelve weeks are not enjoyed. The long vacation of nine months, the necessity for the physical labor of the children when they reach the age of twelve or fourteen years, has caused the already appalling illiteracy among our people to increase. This does not rise from any want of interest in the matter of education, but from a feeling that the State is not able to do more than is now being done in taxation, which is almost universally regarded as extremely onorous. It is my opinion, as well as that of the leading educators of this district, that the public-school interest must suffer without the proposed aid. The interest of the rising generation, as well as the welfare of the Union, demands that education be insured. Without keeping alive the principles upon which our Government and its institutions were founded, it must sooner or later go down.

You deserve the blessings of the American people for your noble efforts in behalf of the future life of the nation.

Pass your bill.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. C. ROGERS.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

He adds:

I was a member of the Forty-first Congress and am well known to several of your brother Senators.

Objection is sometimes raised to help being given because it tends to prevent the development of that self-reliance which is so necessary to the American citizen and to a true and elevated character of the human being. I would ask any Senator who holds to that doctrine, how much he had to do with his own education, with providing that which we are undertaking now to provide for these people. No man ever made the school in which he was educated, built his school-house, or even went to the extent of furnishing himself with the books which he studied. To the child the means of education are universally furnished, and it is not a question what is to become of those who are now upon the active arena of life, but it is a question whether those means of education which have been enjoyed by the most vigorous and self-dependent communities when the citizenship of those communities was in childhood—whether that sort of help which those communities have enjoyed shall be extended to other communities where those opportunities do not now exist.

It is a great absurdity, it seems to me, for Senators to talk in that direction, as they are inclined to do; but it is necessary to find something to say in opposition to a bill like this, and it is not strange that they are driven to suggestions of the utmost simplicity.

I have here a letter, also from the State of Arkansas, dated November 24, 1887, addressed to myself. It is written by Frank J. Wise, secretary of the school board of the city of Pine Bluff. This gentleman is a lawyer. His letter-head indicates that he practices in all the courts, attends to all business, etc. He says:

PINE BLUFF, ARK., November 24, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours 19th instant asking for information concerning the actual necessity for temporary aid from the General Government to the public schools of the country was received yesterday. I received a similar request last June, but I deferred compliance until I could procure the statistics upon the subject and examine it thoroughly.

You will find the results of my investigation relative to the increasing illiteracy of the country in my address before the State Teachers' Association, held at Lonoke, Ark., in June, 1887, which I send you.

I have here his address in full, which is a vigorous, strong, and able presentation of the whole subject.

To give you an idea of my opportunities for observing the educational progress of this section of the State, I will say that I have been the secretary of the public schools of the city of Pine Bluff for ten years, and county examiner of Jefferson County for eight years, devoting all my spare time when not professionally engaged to the advancement of popular education.

As far as this county is concerned, I can safely assert that illiteracy is on the increase. I believe this to be true of every county in the State of Arkansas. This does not include the status of the educable children in cities and towns having public schools.

The length of the scholastic year, which averages sixty school days; the sparseness of the population, which necessitates large districts and long distances to and from school-houses; a state of society which requires the establishment and support of separate schools for two races, and an inadequate school revenue created by an onerous taxation extended to its constitutional limit, are among the causes of our increasing illiteracy. The legal school age is from six to twenty-one years, and the educable children thus enumerated are constantly on the increase, through natural means and by immigration. The masses in the cotton-growing districts have but little property, and the number of schoolable children is out of all proportion to the school revenue, as pupils increase more rapidly than taxable property.

While the people are doing all they can for the education of the young, both by public and private means, yet there is a feeling of discouragement arising from the want of money which renders the schools less efficient than they otherwise would be. School officers receive no remuneration whatever. School revenues are devoted to the maintenance and support of the public schools alone. If the present annual school fund was supplemented by Congress for a term of years with an annual grant of money, it would enable the people to extend the school year to six or eight months; to elect better school officers on account of the increased interest that would be engendered by the feeling that something was being accomplished proportionate to great work; to procure more competent teachers, trained and skilled in better methods of instruction, and to build and equip more school-houses, now so badly needed in this State, and, in fact throughout the whole South.

The annual increase of illiteracy in this country, and particularly in the cotton-growing States, is, in my opinion, an indisputable and lamentable fact. I believe the census of 1890 will show it; but if does not and the converse is the truth, I shall be as highly gratified as any opponent of "national aid." In my argument before the teachers of this State at Lonoke I established, to my satisfaction at least, that there is no constitutional objection to the principles or policy involved in the "Blair bill." After a long discussion of the question of national aid, the State Teachers' Association of Arkansas adopted resolutions asking for the passage of a bill embodying the idea of Congressional aid to public schools.

I trust that Congress will realize the importance and necessity of this measure, and give the country such legislation as will conduce to the ends so devoutly desired by the patriots and the statesmen of the Republic. I sincerely hope that the education of all the children, upon whom must soon devolve the duties and the rights of citizenship, will not be subordinated to any mere partisan measure. If it be true that ignorance is displacing intelligence, which is the basis of our institutions, it is a question paramount to all others. Whatever effect "national aid to education" may have on the tariff or any other measure is a matter of small moment when compared with the obligations of the present and those we owe to posterity. I care not whether it has its origin in the Republican or in the Democratic party, its merits, suited to the pressing demands of the hour, find a full-hearted, though a humble advocate in me.

With many wishes for the passage of your measure, I am,

Your obedient servant,

FRANK J. WISE,
Secretary School Board, etc.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
United States Senator, etc.

The address of Mr. Wise is extended and elaborate, covers the whole subject, and is marked by a degree of ability which shows that whatever this gentleman may have to say is entitled to the attention of the Senate or of any other deliberative body.

The State of Texas has by its representation on this floor declined emphatically, upon conscientious and constitutional grounds, to receive this aid, and has done from the beginning its uttermost to defeat this measure. Its Senators have previously voted for the passage of bills of precisely the same nature, stronger if anything, so far as any wrenching of the Constitution is concerned; and it does seem that any one who is earnest in a matter of this kind, as those Senators, who have devoted the most vigorous and powerful efforts of their lives to the destruction of the Constitution, might be willing that it should be stretched even a little for the benefit of their people. But, of course their consciences and their conduct are in their own keeping. I only make this remark in passing because it occurs to me and I feel just as I say about it.

I have here, sent me through the mail, an editorial which shows something of the way this matter strikes people in other parts of the country. It is an editorial from the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier of January 10, entitled "A subject for plain speaking." It is as follows:

A SUBJECT FOR PLAIN SPEAKING.

The Blair educational bill will occupy a considerable portion of the time of the Senate this week it is said, and there is little reason to doubt that it will pass that body. The main opposition to the measure comes from those who have no need, or comparatively no need, of assistance in educating their people, while it ought to be adjudged by those whose power in education is least and whose needs are greatest.

Singularly enough one of the most persistent opponents of the bill is the Senator from Texas, a State which owes all that it is, and has become what it is, through the expenditure of the blood and the treasure of South Carolina and the other States of the "old thirteen." They won this land of Texas for the United States, and it would have been competent to them to take any part of its enormous territory and divide it out as public domains among the commonwealths who bought it on so costly terms. Instead of this Texas was welcomed as a joyous and superb sister among the States.

All the wealth and all the possibilities of wealth that can be hers were given to her. The other States paid the debt. By lapse of time, and by contact with their civilization, and by the firm support that the older States have given, the "Lone Star State" has become so rich, though it has but a scanty population, that it can afford to give millions of acres of the public domain to a speculative ring to perpetuate the glories of Texas in its capitol at Austin.

It is this thankless child who now rebukes and taunts South Carolina and Virginia for their willingness to accept from the General Government the assistance they would never have required if they had dealt with the Northwestern territory, in the olden days, as they had a right to deal with it; and if they had parceled out a part of the empire of Texas, as they might have done.

But the American Congress, it is to be hoped, will regard both the equities and the necessities. The equities have been suggested in what has been said about the Northwestern territory and about Texas. The necessities are exhibited in the imposition of a vast body of ignorant voters and their descendants in the Southern States, and which can not by any possibility be met unless with national assistance, which Senator REAGAN, of Texas, scorns and repudiates because he has, through the charity of the United States in other days, no need of help or assistance, and, he may think, no need of salvation.

South Carolina has more right to be heard on this question than Texas has. And South Carolina has borne unto the breaking point the burden of taxation for education. This State has endured it because it believed that education through the common schools was the only way in which the freedmen and their descendants could be converted into assimilable parts of the vast body politic. But the people here, as in other Southern States, have borne the load about as long as they care to bear it. And if the Congress, at the dictation of insolent commonwealths, who, being rich, have no thought of the poor, shall cast us out into the cold and keep us there, the people here will adapt their policy probably to that of commonwealths which are different in their circumstances, and will look to other means than love of country and the three rules of reading, writing, and arithmetic for the perpetuation of intelligent dominion in these parts.

I do not approve of all the sentiments expressed.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. The reading of the paper of course gives the character to it that the importance the Senator attaches to it would necessarily imply. The editorial contains some assumptions which are very extraordinary and which ought not to go on the record without being challenged.

It is assumed there that South Carolina and other States acquired the territory of Texas. I should like to know when and how. The Republic of Texas achieved her independence, made her Republic, and had it in successful existence for ten or twelve years before annexation. Citizens of South Carolina and citizens of other States emigrated to Texas, but they became Texans and they achieved their independence and acquired the territory.

Then it is said in that article that Texas owes it to the charity of other States that she has lands to give. The statement is preposterous. She achieved her own lands and her own independence together.

It is said in the editorial that if the Government had dealt with the lands of Texas as it did with the lands of Virginia and other States which had lands, the State of Texas would not have been in a better condition. The Government had no power to deal with the lands in that way. Texas consented to annexation with her territory, and it was a question to be settled not by the United States independent of the action of Texas, but it had to be settled with the concurrence of that Republic, and annexation was agreed to upon the terms that suited both parties. It is improper, it is a violation of what is known to be the history of that incident, to make such statements as are contained in that editorial, and especially for such a purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose the editorial was written from the standpoint of those who were American citizens at the outbreak of the Mexican war, when Texas was situated between two powers, when she was very liable to become the prey of a foreign country, if not of Mexico, through an alliance between Mexico and that foreign country, or by subjugation by a foreign country itself. Apprehensions at least of that kind were entertained, and the Mexican war was the result, and Texas came into the Union as a result of that war. She came in, receiving what no other State received, her public lands remaining at her own disposal, and they have been appropriated, to a considerable extent at least, as a fund for common schools.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. BLAIR. I say I suppose the article was written from that standpoint, but I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, if he wants to say anything further.

Mr. REAGAN. I only wish to say that I think the Senator is mistaken in suggesting that annexation was the result of the Mexican war; the war resulted from annexation. The Republic of Texas had sustained itself, as I said, for ten or twelve years against the power of Mexico, and felt itself competent to sustain itself as an independent republic; but homogeneity of feeling and the fact that it was populated by people of the United States mainly, the love of the Constitution and the institutions of the United States and blood relationship on the part of the Texans influenced them, while the desire for more extended territory, for the control of a large and valuable part of this continent, doubtless influenced the people of the United States. But I simply meant to say that the Senator probably was mistaken in his announcement that annexation was the result of the war; the war came after annexation.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the annexation was in one sense the cause of the war, but there were other causes. The war made annexation effectual, and Texas is to-day a part of the United States because of the war. I think the Senator will not object to that statement as the substance of the history of the times; but, however that may be, I present what I have read as a very general expression of the public sentiment.

I will now introduce some evidence as to what the actual condition in Texas is, as to which there has been some controversy between the Senators from Texas and statements presented by me from that State. The other day I showed from official documents, or from communications taken from the public press (and nobody has disputed that they were authentic), that the State of Texas owes to her teachers $900,000 to-day, or did then, a little while ago, unpaid salaries for the instruction of her children, and I have here——

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me for a moment?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. I have papers in my possession which show that the statement that $900,000 are due is not a truthful one. It is a very great exaggeration of a deficiency that does exist. The deficiency exists because the taxes due for the current year have not been paid as promptly in a portion of the State, the drought-stricken portion of the State, as they usually have been, and I suppose from the papers I have received on the subject that by this time the entire deficiency has been pretty well settled up and that the teachers have their pay. There is no man or woman teaching school in Texas who is not perfectly certain of getting the pay that was promised; and if any of them have been delayed a little while for the causes I have stated, it was one of those unavoidable things which will sometimes occur, but which is purely temporary, and which doubtless has been remedied before this time.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's colleague the other day, when this statement was made, suggested that it was owing to drought. Certainly it is a very singular method of accounting for a deficiency of nearly a million dollars in the teachers' fund that it is attributed to a drought in a locality so limited that in the Senator's own estimation an appropriation of $10,000 for relief was deemed sufficient.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me, I will make an explanation of that. A very large portion of the lands belonging to the school fund of Texas lies in this drought district. These lands are leased and they are sold. They are leased for a certain amount per acre per annum; they were sold on a long term of credit, the interest being payable annually. These moneys constitute the resources of the school fund. The interest on the land notes goes to the school fund.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not want to take part in this controversy in Texas. I do not inquire whether the trouble is the result of drought or of dew. I only wish to get the facts before the Senate. I have here the letter of the superintendent of public instruction of Texas, published in a newspaper in reply to many inquiries about the pay of teachers, which has been sent to me since the debate of the other day, when this matter was alluded to, in which the superintendent says he does not know how to remedy it, but hopes before a great while they will be able to have the money. I have seen a statement that the teachers have been compelled to sell their certificates at a large discount in order to realize any money upon them. I have not the paper with me, but I can find it no doubt before we get through the debate.

I have here a letter from a physician and gentleman of wealth, who makes a statement in regard to the condition of schools in Texas, and requests me not to give his name for the reason that telling the truth would result in what he calls "social ostracism" there, and yet he is anxious that the truth should be known. He appears to be a gentleman of character, judging from what he writes, which I will give to the Senate. I will withhold the name and any particulars relative to identification for the reason stated in the letter. He says:

> I would be pleased to receive your speech on the Blair educational bill. I do not understand your "educational bill," but think it must be a good thing for the whole country, and especially for the South, although our Senators and Representatives appear to oppose it, for what reasons I can not for my life understand, for there certainly is no State that needs education more than Texas. I have been a citizen of Texas since 1859; have resided in—

Two counties which he mentions—> during all that time, and if we have ever had more than three months' free schools anywhere in those counties I have never heard of them. The great mass of the people of Texas, both white and black, are very poor, and are unable to educate their children, and of course they are uneducated. Texas has a large surplus of school lands, and also taxes for educational purposes, but from some cause has not given her children much benefit of free education. Our politicians may oppose your "educational bill" for the same reason I heard urged by a distinguished opponent of J. H. REAGAN for United States Senator several years ago, that free education was a dangerous thing in a republican form of government.

They seem to have had confidence in Senator REAGAN at all events.

> If the masses should become educated they would wish to take charge of the Government and run it to suit themselves, etc. I think myself that there is a good deal of the old slavery prejudice against both the poor whites and negroes that causes their opposition.

He says he is a native of North Carolina. He gives his ancestry, some of the most distinguished names in the United States, and says:

> Have been formerly a Democrat, but am so disgusted with politics that I am now an Independent.

He says that his children are past school age, and have no need of the $77,000,000—> but would be glad to see every child, both black and white, well educated. * * * Texas will never [educate] her children, that [is] without aid and compulsion. We will never have good government till our people are educated. The masses of our people would rejoice to have your bill to become a law, for they see the need of it. It is only the politicians who oppose it, and many of them through policy; for not to be a Democrat and an anti-Prohibitionist in Texas is to lose caste in society and business and be ostracized.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him here? I have a statement of the condition of the school fund for the year 1885:

> The total available resources for the year were $3,762,785.02. These are the official figures. But the year closed with an unexpended balance of $513,097.78 on the 31st of August, 1885. This balance deducted from the above total shows that $3,249,687.24 had been expended.

|---|---|
| The State treasury held | $175,980.22 |
| The county treasuries held | 292,377.32 |
| The city treasuries held | 44,740.24 |
| Or the above stated total | 513,097.78 |

> This indicates that during the year $3,762,785.02, less the $513,097.78, was expended on public schools in Texas. There were, according to the official report, 300,969 children enrolled in the public schools that year. To supply tuition for these children $3,249,687.24 was expended. The average cost of tuition is officially reported at $1.45 per capita per month; so apparently the large sum expended ought to have maintained an eight-months term.

Mr. BLAIR. If all the money mentioned there had been applied faithfully and with good judgment to the matter of education, it would not have given the children of Texas, assuming that they had the school facilities, more than one-fifth of the amount of money expended for their education that is expended in many of the Northern States.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like, with the Senator's permission, to make a statement, which I know will not be objectionable to him.

In addition to the school fund, which is about as stated by my colleague, the State is divided into school districts, which are taxed for school purposes under a law of the State. The district where I live imposes a tax for schools for ten months of the year, and in nearly all the school districts of the State, I will say to the Senator, taxes are levied by the vote of the people, and the schools are carried on from six to eight or ten months in a year. I state this because it is simply the fact.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not want to state the facts worse than they are; but the statements on the other side by educators and people who are interested in the subject have been presented by me; and there may be some confusion in the figures. I have here the Dallas Morning News, containing a communication headed "The school-fund muddle—Some rather startling exposures—The financial affairs of Texas free schools under rigid investigation." This is a three-column communication, and it is sufficient to say that it does not take the same view of the subject which the Senators do. It goes into many particulars, enumerating a very large proportion of the counties of the State. It speaks of several counties and contrasts them. It gives the county of Angelina as having $12,573.51, with a school term of 4 months; Gonzales County, 4½ months; Erath County, 4½ months; Houston, 5 months; Red River, 4⅝ months; Young County, 4½ months; six other counties are given, in which the term is, in one 10⅝ months, in another 9, in three others 8 months, and in another 8¼ months. The communication then proceeds:

> Whether founded upon fact or not, the impression will be made by such statements, gleaned from the official records of the transactions of the schools, that the State benefaction does not induce the application of school money to maintain schools. The more the loose cash on hand the shorter the school term, and the less the fund to start with the longer the term, may lead very rationally to the supposition that when the husbanding process has reached a certain point the fund is of more value for other uses than for paying tuition.
> Add to this confusing condition a further contribution of school money by the Federal Government pouring into county treasuries, with State and local funds building up these balances in the subtreasuries, and tuition may suffer a still greater injury in the discrimination in favor of the other advantageous uses to which the vast sums may be put. But if Federal intervention, or rather the fear of it, shall force a reformation of our ramshackle school system, then hail the Blair bill.

One of the most beneficial features of the bill will be that the country will know what the trouble is in Texas, if there be any, and Texas will have information in return as to the manner in which schools are conducted elsewhere, and these evils will be largely remedied. I think we are liable to overlook some of the principal benefits that may come from the more general diffusion of actual knowledge as to the condition of the school system of the country, if this bill shall become a law.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that the people of Texas as a whole do what they can for the maintenance of their schools. I have no doubt they carry a more heavy burden than do the people of the North in proportion to their actual capacity for taxation, for, in a new community where everything is being created, where the roads and the bridges, and the public buildings, and all the various expenditures that fall on a community, are being primarily borne, and where money is scarce, however much of substantial original resources may abound, it is exceedingly difficult for such a people to find the ready money required in the progress of maintaining a common-school system. What I fear is that the people of Texas really need more of this aid than their Senators, in their strong devotion to their construction of the Constitution, appear to fully apprehend. At all events, it is not for me to decide.

I have here a newspaper account of an interview published in the Boston Globe last season. It is an interview with Professor Hogg, of Fort Worth, Tex., who is, as the Senators I know will say, a gentleman of as high standing as there is anywhere in that State, a native of Virginia, a highly educated and polished gentleman, a Confederate and an officer during the war, educated in one of the colleges in Virginia, who has been spending, I think, most of his life in the State of Texas. During the last season he came North, and I met him in Boston. I knew of his strong interest in the matter of Federal aid and had a conversation with him, and, as there had been a vast amount of miscellaneous talk all through the North in regard to the condition of the South, and the most astonishing and unaccountable dereliction on the part of the press in disabusing the errors and using as little of truth apparently as it possibly could on that subject (and that was true as much in New England and New York as in any other part of the country), I asked him if he would be interviewed by a Democratic paper and state what he knew from his standpoint of the actual circumstances of the South. Accordingly he was interviewed, and I will read what he said, and if either of the Senators from Texas has aught to say as to the character, or responsibility, or reliability and the opportunities for thorough information on the part of this gentleman I will be glad that they should make it known. He says:

I am a Democrat; I am a Prohibitionist, and the friends of prohibition in my section regard the recent Texas vote as a great victory for the cause.

Showing in this respect that the honorable Senator nearest me from that State [Mr. REAGAN] can well sympathize with what the gentleman has to say, and I am very glad to welcome him on behalf of the Prohibitionists of this country.

Yes, there was an 80,000 majority against us in the election, but that was only little over half of the usual majority given to the Democratic ticket. Texas is a State, it ought not to be forgotten, with a habit of piling up phenomenal majorities. The Democrats dividing gave the recent prohibition vote. The Republicans voted almost solidly against the amendment.

To the shame of the Republicans, I interpolate myself.

We were really beaten by the Germans, negroes, and Mexicans, who voted as a man for their beer, gin, and whisky. The bulk of the prohibition vote was thrown in north Texas. It is bound to come. By statute the pistol has been prohibited. The carrying it has been made a penal offense. It must go, and whisky, its strong ally, will go with it.

Referring to the matter in which Professor Hogg is most deeply interested, the reporter asked him a number of questions about the Texas schools, and the responses may be summed up in this way: "In the cities of Texas," said he, "the schools are as good as they are anywhere." How would they compare with Boston? Well, really, now, twice two are four all over this continent, and the branches usually taught in the public schools are as well taught in Texas as they are in Boston. Of course we have not the fine school buildings, nor the bricks and mortar that you have, but we have the same people with the same brains as your people, both as teachers and pupils. The trouble is in the country. Only some 17 per cent.—

I ask the Senators from Texas to note this:

Only some 17 per cent. of our pupils are in the city schools, while 83 per cent. are in the sparsely-settled country. It is true we have a large education fund, but most of it is in lands yet unsold. It will be, when converted into money, a very large fund, but what must the children of to-day do?

The cities tax themselves to educate the children. My city began in 1882 with a tax of 5 mills to the dollar, and continues it. Hence the Fort Worth schools have grown from 600 pupils and 17 teachers to a daily average attendance of 1,600 pupils and 43 teachers. I repeat, the city schools do well because they are well supplied by a very heavy tax. And one-fifth of the entire fund of Fort Worth goes to the colored pupils. We have not in north Texas, however, so many colored people. The cotton belt, or southeast, is the portion of the State occupied by the blacks. But whether in north or south Texas the fund is distributed strictly according to the ratio of the colored to the white pupils. Fort Worth pays the same to the teachers of the colored pupils as she does to the teachers of the white. The principal and assistants of the colored schools are all colored. The principal is a native Texan and a well-educated man. We also pay the women the same salary paid the men for the same service, whether as principals or assistants.

The nation must help us develop this fair and well-founded system. I know our Senators have voted against the proposition, but wherever our people understand the Blair Federal-aid bill they are for it, and if it could be discussed before the people generally they would be unanimous in its support. Persons engaged in educational matters—those acquainted with the bill and the needs of the schools—favor it. The superintendents of the cities and the public-school teachers all over the State, with the fewest exceptions, favor it.

I might say here that the Teachers' Association of Texas, in a large convention, has indorsed this bill.

If universal suffrage is based upon universal education, upon intelligence, upon the ability of the voter to read the name of his choice upon the selected ballot, there is a great, crying necessity for national relief. It must be given at once. Illiteracy is increasing at a fearful rate, even among the white citizens of Texas.

That is a proposition I was not myself prepared to hear, especially as we had heard here so much of the ability and the actual fact of Texas educating her people and needing no help.

Mr. REAGAN. The statement is simply not true.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know. He says "illiteracy is increasing at a fearful rate, even among the white citizens of Texas." He proceeds:

In 1870 there were only 17,505 illiterate white voters, but in 1880 there were 33,085. There you have the startling increase of illiteracy among the white voting Texans of 90 per cent. The colored illiterates numbered 47,235 voters in 1870, and 56,699 in 1880, an increase of 26 per cent.

But I am not willing to pass this large increase in illiterate voters in Texas without explaining how it is that my State should have gained in this downward movement so rapidly. Some of these voters are from old Virginia, some from the Carolinas, from Georgia, and not a few from Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana. This increase in illiteracy in the voting population has not been confined alone to the States mentioned. The fact is that, with the exception of little Delaware, the increase in illiterate voters in the South from 1870 to 1880 amounted to 187,671. In this "downward" race it is a little singular that the white and colored have kept so close together, but it shows that the education needed is not wholly for "the brother in black."

It may be justly asked, why should there be such an increase in the white illiteracy? It is simply because these voters are the sons of the fathers who laid down their lives, sacrificed their all, in the unhappy struggle for what they believed to be right. Their children, daughters as well as sons, were without school facilities. They really had no time to go to school, but, with their mothers at home, were struggling for something to eat.

The census of 1880 shows that there are in Kentucky, above the age of twenty-one, of white women who can not write 22.8 per cent.; and in North Carolina there are 33.4 per cent. of white women who can not write. If in the death of these fathers and mothers illiteracy should cease, we should have hope for the Republic; but upon investigation it will be found that illiteracy is not only increasing, but that it is an inheritance that multiplies with each succeeding year.

Under the provisions of the Blair bill, were it to become a law, Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Vermont, with a population of 12,724,322, would receive $3,099,990, or 24 cents per capita. Texas, with a population by the same census of only 1,591,749, could receive $2.41 per capita, or ten times as much as these great States. That shows our disadvantage.

OUR DISADVANTAGE.

Little Alabama would receive seventeen times as much as those States. California, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Oregon, with a population of 18,462,723, would receive $4,486,860, or 24 cents per capita. Georgia, with a population of 1,542,180, would receive $6,042,150, or nearly $4 per capita, nearly seventeen times as much as all these great States.

Why is this? Simply because Georgia has seventeen times as much illiteracy as all this vast territory, teeming with millions of happy people who received their Federal aid in grants of land from Virginia and the General Government for school purposes. Need more be said upon the "necessity" of this aid?

Our Southern States are positively doing all they can, and are doing more proportionately than the favored States of the North, more according to their means than the foremost States in this Union.

For instance, North Carolina paid school taxes in 1880 upon $160,000,000 taxable property. She realized $400,000, $1 to every $400. Massachusetts paid the same year upon $1,600,000,000, and the school tax amounted to $4,000,000, or $1 to every $400 of taxable property. That is, North Carolina pays for school purposes as much ad valorem as Massachusetts, with this terrible drawback—her population being 300,000 more than that of Massachusetts, and is scattered over seven times the territory of Massachusetts. Hence we find the schools in North Carolina are kept open only about three months each year, while in New England they are kept closed less than three months.

Now take two American cities: The assessed values of the city of Charleston in 1860 were $45,000,000; in 1880, $21,000,000, a reduction of more than half, with the obligation to educate double the number of children. Taxation in the city of Charleston in 1880 was 3½ mills, State, county, and city, in all amounting to $61,000 only for school purposes. Boston gives a total of 2½ mills for all her school enterprises, Charleston solely for primary instruction. That is, Charleston gives for her schools of lowest grades nearly half as much again as Boston. Add to this burden the still greater, namely, Charleston pays a total tax of 2½ cents, while that of Boston is only 1½.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to understand that statement. Does the Senator say that the tax in Charleston is 2½ per cent. on all the property of the citizens?

Mr. BLAIR. I will read the statement again:

Taxation in the city of Charleston in 1880 was 3½ mills.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator just read, as I understand, that the taxation in Charleston was 2½ per cent., while in Boston it was 1½ per cent.

Mr. BLAIR. I will read that paragraph again.

Mr. HOAR. Is that on all the property?

Mr. BLAIR. I understand it to be as the statement is. It is upon the taxable property of the city of Charleston.

Mr. HAMPTON. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him. For the information of the Senator from Massachusetts I would state that the school tax in Charleston is greater than the school tax in Boston.

Mr. HOAR. That I did not question; but the Senator from New Hampshire further stated that the taxation in Charleston was 2½ cents on the $100; that is the rate given in the statement before him. Does the Senator from South Carolina confirm that statement?

Mr. BUTLER. That is a mistake.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it must be.

Mr. BUTLER. The entire taxation of the city of Charleston for all purposes is about 2 per cent. That is very high.

Mr. HOAR. They do not include, then, in taxable property all the property of the city, because that tax would amount to an enormous proportion of the average income that any property yields in any city.

Mr. BUTLER. The system of taxation in Charleston, as well as all over the State of South Carolina, is ad valorem. Men pay exactly in proportion to what they own. My recollection now is that the entire tax of the city of Charleston, State, county, municipal, school, and for all purposes, is in the neighborhood of 2 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. Is that on all real and personal property?

Mr. BUTLER. On all property.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield for a motion to adjourn at this hour?

Mr. BLAIR. I have only about a third of a column more to read from this statement; I desire to complete it, and then I shall be ready to give way.

Education is not a matter of sentiment. The State of New York is worth in taxable property as much as all the Southern States. These expended on their schools in 1881 $13,359,784; in 1881 New York expended $9,936,662. The total taxable property in New York in 1880 was $2,651,940,000; the Southern States, omitting Missouri, $2,370,923,269, or New York is richer than the thirteen Southern States grouped in the census tables of 1880.

Now, to the practical question: Can the Southern States, with less than half the resources of 1860, educate double the number of children then knocking at the door?

If they can not, who should? I answer, the General Government. And for this position I appeal to the highest ethical authority, the duty to do it. It is a well-established principle in ethics that all rights are resolvable into duties. The right of citizenship carries with it the duty of citizenship. If the State exercises a right, she assumes a reciprocal duty. That right, therefore, conferred by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution in enfranchising over 6,000,000 of negroes, the highest and most responsible political privilege, demands of the United States, the power conferring this right, the preparation of these people to exercise this franchise. Upon this law of ethical philosophy and the effect of the franchise already conferred is based the duty of the Government to make, and at once, full and ample preparation for the education not only of the voter, the colored, but for all the enfranchised citizens of this free Republic, regardless of color or previous condition.

The results of the war enfranchising the colored man destroyed at the same time the means of educating the now illiterate white voter.

After the terrible revolution of 1781 the country, the whole country, was without money; and Virginia ceded "the great Northwest" to the general movement to raise revenues to relieve the country of the disasters of even a successful war. This territory, as then divided up, embraces the great States of Ohio, Illinois, and others rich in taxable values, and boasting of the finest school systems of our country, the direct results of which have been known as "the sixteen section" fund. That is, for the common schools of these rich and powerful States one thirty-sixth part of the domain was set apart for the education of all the children of these States. Should not Virginia, "the mother of States," demand from these daughters something in her old age to free her and hers from the dire scourge of illiteracy?

Again, of the proceeds of the public lands, $88,000,000, the Northern and Western States have received $80,000,000, or ten times as much as the South. In the distribution of land for the agricultural colleges the State of New York received over five times as much as Texas did, and realized twice as much per acre. Texas received 87 cents only per acre, California $5, and Minnesota $5.62 per acre.

The Blair bill is constitutional. "To provide not only for the general welfare," but to "secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity." Can liberty be preserved when the ballot is in the hands of a constantly increasing illiterate majority? If universal suffrage must continue, can we expect "the blessings of liberty" to be preserved by universal ignorance? Universal suffrage must rest upon universal education, or Thomas Jefferson's republic is a failure.

Senators are, of course, familiar with his writings, so I need not quote them.

For this distribution of money they tell us there is no precedent; but a precedent is not wanting. These expounders of our Constitution and readers of our country's history have forgotten the distribution of the surplus revenue in 1836.

All the States receiving their quota of this surplus of 1836 devoted it to educational purposes, and yet we hear there is no precedent for any such aid as the Blair bill proposes.

It was the foundation of the school fund of some of the States, undoubtedly, but not of all.

Still others talk about "centralization" of the Government extending so far as "to the selection of teachers and text-books." "To aid in the establishment and temporary support of the common schools" is the caption of the Blair bill.

It is not to establish any new system at all, nor to control in any shape the existing systems.

It is to this same Peabody fund that the schools of the cities of Texas are indebted for their present successful condition.

The Peabody fund is private aid, and if it is disgraceful to receive assistance from the National Government for the support of common schools, I should think our friends in the South would be glad to repudiate and obliterate from their own history the acceptance of this private fund or charity which this man says is the foundation of the great schools in the cities of Texas.

Mr. COKE. I beg to remark that that statement is very far from the truth. The Peabody fund is a very small portion of the school fund in our State, and goes to a very few cities of the State.

Mr. BLAIR. That is undoubtedly true at the present time, but the Peabody fund was made use of before the schools attained any great efficiency in any part of the South. That was the little leaven that leavened the whole lump. They may be rich and powerful now, but it was this private charity which began the great work of which Senators now boast. I continue to read the article:

Thirty-six of our United States Senators, the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, and the Attorney-General all say that the powers which Congress already possesses are sufficient for this appropriation.

It is often said that the opposition comes from the South and the Democratic party. If your people do not know who of the South favor this measure ask South Carolinians who Wade Hampton is; ask North Carolinians who Matt Ransom and Zebulon Vance are; ask Georgians who Alfred Colquitt and Joe Brown are; Mississippians who George and Walthall (and Lamar, who voted for its passage while a Senator) are; ask Alabamians who James L. Pugh is; ask Louisiana and Florida and Arkansas of what politics their Senators are.

This is a national question. It is an effort of patriotism to save our common country.

If universal suffrage must continue, universal education must be provided, and by a power able to do it—the General Government.

Mr. President, I now give way.

Mr. COKE. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that Professor Hogg avows himself in favor of the Blair bill and also as a Prohibitionist. I call attention to this fact because the Senator, a few minutes ago, read a letter from another gentleman in Texas who asked that his name be suppressed because he said it would subject him to social ostracism if his opinions on these subjects were known.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well. I would also mention the fact that the Senator's colleague is a Prohibitionist. I am only sorry he has not already attained to the position of an advocate of the Blair bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m., the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 19, 1888, a. 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 18, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONDITION OF THE SPEAKER'S HEALTH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the liberty of announcing to the House, in order to allay any apprehension or solicitude about the condition of our honored Speaker's health, that he is in process of rapid recovery; and the occasion which calls the present occupant to the chair will happily, I trust, soon pass away. [Applause.]

JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional list of judgments of the Court of Claims for which appropriations are required; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting a statement of expenditures in that department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of employés in that Department, and stating that they are usefully employed, and that the services of none of them can be dispensed with; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES FROM INDIANS, UTAH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior with accompanying correspondence, and recommending that the Quartermaster's Department be authorized to purchase supplies from the Indians in Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NANCY LEWIS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Nancy Lewis vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand the regular order.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 928) in relation to marriage between white men and Indian women—to the Committee on the Judiciary;

A bill (S. 322) to authorize the Southwestern Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Ouachita River, in Arkansas—to the Committee on Commerce;

A bill (S. 426) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservoirs—to the Committee on the Public Lands; and

A bill (S. 447) to amend the laws relating to the inspection of steam-vessels—to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROMEIS, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. MCCORMICK, until the 27th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOWDEN, for this day, on account of important business.

MARIETTA CENTENNIAL MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time and have printed in the RECORD a brief memorial from the board of centennial commissioners at Marietta, Ohio, in regard to the centennial celebration of the settlement of the Northwestern territory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio askes unanimous consent to present at this time and have printed in the RECORD the memorial the nature of which he has indicated. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Library. It is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that the Marietta Centennial Monument Association is a corporation, without profit, organized under the laws of the State of Ohio "for the purpose of erecting at Marietta, Ohio, a centennial monumental structure that will suitably commemorate the acquisition of the Northwest territory and its permanent settlement under the laws and direction of the United States, commencing at Marietta, Ohio, April 7, 1788, with power to receive and hold gifts and devises of real and personal estate; to purchase so much land as may be necessary for its purpose; to make contracts for erecting a monumental structure and to preserve the same, and generally to exercise all the powers legally and properly pertaining thereto."

This enterprise has received the cordial indorsement and support of the Ohio State Archæological and Historical Society, and through its influence the unanimous recommendation by the Ohio Legislature of its general purposes; and by a joint resolution of that body adopted March 31, 1886, the Congress of the United States has been called upon for pecuniary aid.

The events which it is designed to commemorate are not surpassed in importance by any others in American history. They were brought about by men of the highest character who served their country both in civil and military lines of public duty.

Posterity is indebted to the wisdom and patriotism of the old Continental Congress and to the valor and endurance of the Revolutionary Army for the acquisition and quiet possession of the great Northwest.

The undersigned respectfully request such pecuniary aid as will enable them to erect a monumental structure that will preserve, for the benefit of posterity, the memories and services of those who laid the enduring foundation of republican institutions in the central portion of this great Republic.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand the regular order.

PUBLIC TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I present a privileged report from the Committee on the Public Lands for present consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution referred to the committee on motion of Mr. S. V. WHITE, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House a statement in detail of the plan of legislation referred to on page 23 of his report to the President for 1887, and thought by him to be needed for the disposal of the public timber lands, so as to secure at the same time the preservation of the natural forest lands at the headwaters of navigable rivers, and put within the reach of settlers a legal means of providing themselves with timber for building their homes, fuel, and other domestic purposes.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred House resolution of December 19, 1887, requesting the Secretary of the Department of the Interior to communicate to the House "a statement in detail of the plan of legislation referred to on page 23 of his report to the President for 1887, and thought by him to be needed for the disposal of the public timber lands, so as to secure at the same time the preservation of the natural forest lands at the headwaters of navigable rivers," etc., having considered the same, respectfully report the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not suppose it is necessary to discuss this resolution, and I move the previous question on its passage.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand the regular order.

PRINTING OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read the resolution, referred to the committee on motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the President's message and the accompanying reports of the Pacific Railroad Commission be printed for the use of the House.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the resolution of the House to print 10,000 copies of the President's message and the accompanying reports of the Pacific Railway Commission for the use of the House, and direct me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this include the printing of both the majority and minority reports?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing one question. This is a simple resolution of the House, is it not?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. It ought to be a concurrent resolution, should it not? This printing, I presume, will cost more than $500; and there is a legal provision against the House ordering printing which will cost more than that sum. This should be a concurrent resolution; otherwise it can not be executed. I will show the statute to which I refer.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am familiar with the statute, but I do not think this printing will cost $500.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a large report. Was any estimate made? Does the gentleman have the documents there before him?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; but they have already been printed. This is only a reprint.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Public Printer can not execute the order under the law I suppose he will so inform the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is simply a reprint and will not cost $500.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. I desire that it shall be read and that I shall then have the privilege of making a few explanatory remarks.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury made to this body shows that, acting in accord with the views of the President, he has paid out of the revenues collected from imposts the sum of $2,852,015.88 in premiums to holders of Government bonds, assuming that in no other way under existing laws can the requirements of the sinking fund be met; and

Whereas by the terms of the refunding act passed July 14, 1870, as shown by the record of the final vote thereon, all of the bonds called 4 percents, of which there is now outstanding the sum of $736,561,950, are payable at the pleasure of the United States for thirty years from the date of their issue—a provision which, if understood and acted upon in accordance with its manifest wording and intention, makes possible not only the payment of the said bonds as fast as any surplus available for such purpose may accumulate in the Treasury, but also the refunding of the same at a rate of interest that would save to the tax-payers more than $200,000,000; and

Whereas the said refunding act has as it appears without due authority been so altered and published in the Statutes at Large, as to read "payable at the pleasure of the United States after thirty years" instead of "for thirty years" as voted, thus entirely subverting the manifest meaning of the provision of said act which provides for the redemption of the bonds named: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That a committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker whose duty it shall be to make a careful examination of all the facts relating to the passage, engrossment, and enrollment of the funding act, so called, and all acts in force bearing upon the question of the right of the Government to redeem its outstanding interest-bearing obligations, with a view to taking such steps as may be required to ascertain the true state of the law on that subject, and for that purpose the committee has power to send for persons and papers, examine all records and original documents, and to obtain true copies of the same, as well as to administer oaths; the committee to report to this House with such recommendations as may be deemed advisable in the premises.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. WILKINS. I am constrained to object, Mr. Speaker, and demand the regular order.

Mr. HOOKER. I object.

Mr. PLUMB. I only desire a few minutes to make some explanatory remarks.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask, then, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILKINS. I suggest the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Rules, the Chair thinks, would be the most appropriate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object to the resolution being entertained for any purpose.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The regular order is called for. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

DIGEST OF RULES.

Mr. RICHARDSON offered a resolution to print 2,000 copies of the Digest of Rules for the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, for the use of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, on January 4, House bill No. 1853, limiting the franking privilege and embracing other matters, was referred to the Committee on Printing. That was an improper reference, and I submit that the bill ought to go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can have that reference made through the Clerk. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of committees for reports in the morning hour.

GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, touching the resolution offered by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB], I desire to suggest to the Chair that it is in order to consider that resolution as a matter of privilege, because the resolution attacks the existence of an act of Congress; alleges that the act as published is different in effect from the act as passed; and that, in fact, the act as signed by the President never did pass. The resolution recites those facts, or alleged facts, and calls the attention of the House to them, and asks for the appointment of a committee to investigate the question as to the verity of the records of the House.

It occurs to me, then, that it is—if it is not, it ought to be—a question of the highest privilege for the consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB] refer to the present Congress or to a past Congress?

Mr. CANNON. As I gathered from the reading of the resolution, I judge that it refers to a past Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the resolution relates to a past Congress, and if so, surely it would not be a question of privilege in the present Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Even if it does relate to a past Congress, it strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that there is so much in the allegations set forth in the resolution that no gentleman can afford, from my standpoint, to object. I hope no one will object, and I apprehend that the objection that was made came from some gentleman who perhaps did not closely listen to the reading of the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I renew the objection, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the resolution is in order in any aspect of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled on the point. The Chair will now call the committees for reports in the morning hour.

THOBE VS. CARLISLE.

Mr. LYMAN submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Elections in the case of Thobe vs. Carlisle; which were ordered to be printed.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT, LOUISIANA.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1477) to subdivide the western judicial district of Louisiana; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT COB POINT BAR, MARYLAND.

Mr. RAYNER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1523) for the establishment of a light-house at Cob Point Bar, at the mouth of the Wicomico River, in the State of Maryland; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported with amendments the bill (H. R. 1338) to extend the leave of absence of employés in the Government Printing Office to thirty days per annum; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What becomes of the hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that if the bill which the gentleman from Missouri desires to reach is a general appropriation bill, the motion is now in order; not otherwise.

Mr. HATCH. It is a general appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not wish to antagonize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. I merely wanted to know what had become of the consideration hour.

Mr. HATCH. The bill which I desire to reach is in the nature of a general appropriation bill, as it embraces an appropriation to carry out the purposes of an act of Congress. I understand that my motion is in order after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the motion.

The motion of Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4881) making an appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experimental stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That to carry out the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural-experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States proceeding from the sales of public lands, and in full compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, $585,000.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to have the report read.

Mr. BURNES. Lest a precedent may be established which may be dangerous in the future, I feel it my duty to submit a question of order. I call attention to the fact that the application made in this bill has been reported to this House in the deficiency estimates as a deficiency, and I make the point that under the rules the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over all deficiencies.

Mr. HATCH. If my colleague will wait a moment until I make a statement he will be satisfied. I first ask that the report accompanying the bill may be read, and I ask members of the Committee of the Whole to pay attention to the reading, as the report embodies all the argument that it is necessary to make in connection with this bill.

The report of the Committee on Agriculture (by Mr. HATCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture, having in charge the bill (H. R. 4881) making an appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural-experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," most respectfully report, having had the same under consideration, that the act under which this appropriation is asked has been construed by the First Comptroller of the Treasury as not making the appropriation for the current fiscal year evidently intended thereby.

A special act of appropriation is therefore necessary to make operative and effective the said act of March 2, 1887.

Accordingly, the Secretary of the Treasury, in a communication to the House of Representatives dated December 22, 1887, relating to urgent deficiencies (H. R. Ex. Doc. No. 30, p. 7) makes an estimate for this purpose as follows:

"Agricultural-experiment stations: To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled 'An act to establish agricultural-experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto,' $585,000."

This communication is accompanied with copies of letters as follows (Ex. Doc. No. 30, p. 19):

"[Estimates for urgent deficiencies.]

"Appendix D.—In relation to the estimate for 'agricultural-experiment stations.' (See page 7.)

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., December 3, 1887.

"SIR: You may remember that there was some trouble about what was supposed to be an appropriation made by the last Congress for agricultural-experiment stations in the act of March 2, 1887. (See 24 Stat., 440.) It was contended by some that section 5 of said act made an appropriation of $15,000 a year to each one of said stations; but when the question was presented to me I decided that the act itself did not make an appropriation; that the fifth section only provided that Congress should, in the manner and to the amount therein specified, make appropriations from year to year. You may also remember that the agricultural convention, which met in this city in the month of September, waited upon you as well as myself, to confer as to the best method of effecting the purpose intended by the act; that said experiment stations were represented to have been established in many of the States, and that they were in need of money to meet obligations incurred under the belief that the act had made an appropriation. You will observe, also, that, under said fifth section, the first payment was stipulated to be made on the 1st of October; and in view of the fact that nine months of the present fiscal year are not provided for in any of the appropriation bills, I beg to suggest to you the propriety of calling the especial attention of Congress to the matter, in order that at an early day it may make an appropriation for said nine months in a special bill or by appending the same to a deficiency bill, which will, in all probability, be passed very early in the session.

"I am led to make these suggestions to you from the fact that within the last few days I have received a letter from the chairman of the committee appointed by the late agricultural convention to look after this matter, asking me to call your attention to the subject, that an appropriation may be obtained from Congress at the earliest practicable moment.

"Very respectfully,
"M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

"The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY."

---

"STATE COLLEGE, CENTRE COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA,
"December 8, 1887.

"SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry as to the number of States and Territories in which agricultural colleges or experiment stations have been so organized as to entitle them to the appropriation provided for by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1887, commonly known as the "Hatch act," I beg leave respectfully to say that at least one such college or station has been established and is in operation in each of the thirty-eight States and in the Territory of Dakota.

"It is possible that one or more of the Territories besides Dakota may have established such institutions; but no information of such fact has come to the notice of the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, and I have no reason to suppose it to exist.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"GEO. W. ATHERTON.

"The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY."

The sum named in the bill now reported, namely, $585,000, is thus in accordance with the estimate of the Treasury Department, and is to enable the payments to be made for the four quarters of the year ending June 30, 1888, as provided by the said act of March 2, 1887, and early consideration of this measure is asked for the following reasons:

The act of March 2, 1887, providing for the establishment and maintenance of at least one agricultural-experiment station in every State, was hailed throughout the country as opening a new era in the development and progress of American agriculture. Everywhere the act was regarded as immediately operative and carrying with it the necessary appropriation for the new work to begin on the 1st day of July, 1887. Institutions in various States, thus interpreting the law, made suitable arrangements, providing buildings, purchasing equipment and materials, and engaging the services of competent men. Agricultural students and investigators resigned lucrative positions to engage in the work of the new stations. Thus every preparation was making for active operations to begin as contemplated by the law, when the decision of the officers of the Treasury Department caused a general suspension, with much embarrassment, more or less absolute loss, and widespread disappointment.

In several States trustees of these colleges are prohibited by law from incurring any indebtedness, and the great work provided by the said act of March 2, 1887, stands in abeyance until a special appropriation for the same is made. In agricultural experiments time is of the utmost importance, and the whole growing season of the year 1888 will be lost to the work in some of the States unless action be taken by Congress before the end of the month of January.

The subject is, therefore, one of special urgency, and the public interests require its immediate consideration.

Mr. HATCH. In reply to the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. BURNES] I will state that at a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture a subcommittee was appointed to wait upon the Committee on Appropriations and ask that this appropriation might be included in the urgency deficiency bill which was reported by that committee to the House last week.

It was then suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the suggestion was sustained by the members of that committee, that this was not a deficiency, but was in the nature of an original appropriation. That ruling was sustained by the Speaker of this House upon a conference with him, and under his instructions I immediately called a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture, to whom I submitted the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting the recommendation for this appropriation, together with the letter of the First Comptroller and the decision of the Speaker; and under the direction of the Committee on Agriculture I prepared and reported this bill.

My colleague [Mr. BURNES] will observe that the Comptroller is careful enough to use in his letter these words: "In order that at an early day it [Congress] may make an appropriation for said nine months in a special bill or by appending the same to a deficiency bill." This, in accordance with the decision of the Comptroller, is a special bill to carry into effect the provisions of the act known as the "experimental station act."

Mr. BURNES rose.

Mr. HATCH. If my colleague desires to make any remarks, I yield to him such time as he may wish.

Mr. BURNES. I ask the Clerk to read the rule with reference to the assignment of subjects to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows: Subjects relating * * * to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely: for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; and for deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, with regard to the information communicated by my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HATCH], I desire to say he is entirely correct in his statement of the suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when he [Mr. HATCH] and other committee-men were before the Appropriations Committee. But I understood that to be an expression of the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I did not understand that any action was taken by the committee, or that any other members of the committee concurred in the suggestion of the chairman. On the contrary, there was considerable discussion with regard to the time when this item would be placed in the forthcoming urgent deficiency bill.

But I care nothing for that. It is not a question as to the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, or of my opinion, or the opinion of my distinguished colleague. It is a question relating to the rights of the House, and the duties and obligations of the Chair.

I will say before I conclude, Mr. Chairman, that I am heartily in favor of this appropriation, and make no sort of objection to it as a personal matter, but I deem it to be my duty to call the attention of the chairman and of the Committee of the Whole House to the facts and the law bearing on the proposition.

The Secretary of the Treasury on the 22d of December transmitted his estimates for urgent deficiencies to the House, as will be seen by reference to the printed document, and by order of the House these estimates were referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Now, in these estimates I find the precise appropriation contained in this bill. The House, therefore, has given jurisdiction of this subject to the Committee on Appropriations and it is legally before that committee. I think, sir, that it is not in the province of this Committee of the Whole to consider a proposition which by the House has been disposed of in a different direction. I submit this proposition with great reluctance, but I think it incumbent upon me to do so, as a precedent may be established which may result in injury hereafter.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, in reply to my colleague it is only necessary to reiterate the single statement made by me that this is an original appropriation; and that the entire and complete jurisdiction over the subject-matter of this bill and its appropriation is with the Committee on Agriculture, under the rules of the House. The gentleman will not undertake to say, and no member of the Committee on Appropriations will contend, that in the annual appropriation bill which will be reported to the House by the Committee on Agriculture they can not properly, under the rules of the House, report an appropriation to carry out the provisions of this act, just as we submit our appropriations from time to time to carry out the animal-industry act and other acts submitted under the jurisdiction of that committee. The only question is whether it is a deficiency or an original appropriation. If it had been a deficiency, the position of the gentleman would have been correct; and until that decision was made by the Speaker of the House the Committee on Agriculture did not assume to take jurisdiction of it, but appointed a subcommittee, of which the gentleman from Mississippi was one, to wait on the Committee on Appropriations and urge that it might be embraced in the urgent deficiency bill. For the first time the point of order has come from that committee, for no protest was made during the time the subcommittee was in the room of the Committee on Appropriations that it was a deficiency. They did not make any appropriation in that bill for it.

Mr. MORGAN. The subcommittee on Agriculture appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, and they ruled us out of that committee on a point of order, the very point presented here, that it was not a fit subject for a deficiency bill, and advised us to the course we are now pursuing.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the objection comes too late, for the House has referred it to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HATCH. I am obliged to the gentleman from Maine. I intended to suggest that as an additional reason why the objection was not well taken. I understand my colleague raises the point of order before the committee simply to put himself right on the record.

Now, in regard to the jurisdiction of the committee. The passage of the bill has been reported to the House and has been entered and referred by the Speaker of the House to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That is an answer to the proposition. But that it comes too late there is no question. The bill is under consideration by the Committee of the Whole, and certainly this committee has jurisdiction of it, whether the committee which reported it had or not.

Mr. BURNES. The question of jurisdiction is never waived. It is one altogether beyond the proposition. Here is the order of the House by which this bill has been referred to this committee. The Speaker takes no note of the contents of a bill, and the House takes no note of the contents of a bill; and it was referred as a matter of course to the Committee of the Whole House. But few knew whether it was an appropriation for the current year or for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889.

The fact that this appropriation is for the current year makes it a deficiency. That will not be questioned. I do not think there can be any doubt of a proposition so plain. The deficiency in the appropriation for the current year goes, under the rules, to the Committee on Appropriations. If this were an appropriation for the next fiscal year, it would be an original appropriation. I raise the point, therefore, on the ground that, as it is a deficiency, this committee has no jurisdiction whatever over this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the point raised comes too late, the committee having entered upon the consideration of the proposition. When the bill was referred to the committee was the time to reserve the point of order, but not having been reserved it is now too late to do so.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to state that several eminent and respectable gentlemen, representing the National Grange of the United States, called upon the committee and asked that certain amendments be included, as they were agreed to at the last meeting of the grange at Lansing, Mich.

I explained to the officer—the secretary of the National Grange Association—who came to me with a request to withhold action upon this bill, that under the rules of the House no new legislation could be placed upon an appropriation bill, and that the committee to which he referred evidently meant an amendment to the original act.

In order to remove any hesitancy that any member may feel in voting for this proposition now, because of letters or communications of a similar character received by him, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a number of telegrams bearing upon the subject from the grand master of the National Grange, from the overseer of the National Grange, who is, I believe, the highest officer in authority, and from masters of State granges, as well as from the members of the committee who were appointed to make the report to the National Grange that proposed the amendment they seek to put upon the original act, asking the prompt passage of this bill. Several members have come to me and asked me to have these communications read, because they have received letters or telegrams that would make it necessary for them to make some statement or explanation as to their support of this measure, which would consume far more time upon the floor than would be consumed in the reading of these telegrams. They will only consume a very few moments.

The Clerk read as follows:

(Received at House of Representatives 11.47, January 17, 1888.)

KINGSTON, R. I., January 17, 1888.

Please urge immediate appropriation for experiment stations.

J. G. PECKHAM,

AUGUSTA, ME., January 18, 1888.

The executive committee of the Maine State Grange in session, representing over 15,000 patrons, would respectfully and earnestly request that immediate action be taken for the passage of an unconditional appropriation for the experimental stations under the Hatch bill.

FREDERIC ROBIE, Master.

General W. H. HATCH,
House Representatives, Washington, D. C.

WORCESTER, MASS., January 17, 1888.

Massachusetts State Grange unanimously desire immediate availability of appropriation under Hatch act that experimental work may begin with spring month.

JAMES DRAPER,

HENRY E. ALVORD,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have had these telegrams read simply to sustain my statement that there was a mistake upon the part of this committee in regard to the time and place at which they were to offer the amendment, suggested in the National Grange, to the original act. It was not the purpose to attempt to put it upon an appropriation bill, which would make the amendment obnoxious to the point of order under the rules of the House; but that it should come in the ordinary way during the course of the session as an amendment to the original act.

I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in support of the bill and report which have been presented to the committee, that the general sense of the country was to the effect that the act of March, 1887, made an absolute appropriation, to be at once available for the purpose of establishing these experimental stations in connection with the agricultural colleges in the various States. Such, I say, was the general understanding of the country, and hence everybody was taken by surprise when the Secretary of the Treasury, coming to scan the language of the bill, found that it did not make the appropriation in that shape, and so held.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman from Mississippi will permit me, I think it was the First Comptroller who so decided.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman is correct. I should have said the First Comptroller.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Who is a complete autocrat. But settling it his own way does not by any means prove that the law was not right.

Mr. HOOKER. Evidently he did not give any consideration to that maxim of universal application in considering questions of law, and which should always apply, namely, what was the intention of the body that passed the law? Had he gone into that consideration he would have seen by the language of the act itself, and by the arguments made in support of its passage before Congress, that the purpose and object of the bill were to make the money appropriated for these experimental stations at once and wholly available. Having ruled as he did, we find the propriety of the Committee on Agriculture coming now and introducing, not a deficiency bill, because this is in no sense of the word such a bill, and can not be so termed, for that would imply a deficiency in reference to an appropriation already made; but they were constrained to pursue the course here pursued, of introducing a new bill making an appropriation in precise and accurate terms, so that the Comptroller of the Treasury will have no difficulty in construing this law, or ascertaining that it does make an appropriation, and makes that appropriation immediately and wholly available for the purpose contemplated by the bill.

It is unnecessary, I think, to say more in advocacy of the measure, and I would not have said so much or asked my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, to yield to me at all, but for the fact that a few days since I received from General Stephen D. Lee, the very intelligent and able superintendent of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of the State of Mississippi, a letter directing my attention to the provisions of this bill, and stating that the college over which he presides had made the necessary compliance with the law for the establishment of an agricultural-experiment station under the operation of that institution. And I have no doubt that what General Lee says in regard to that college may be said as to the agricultural colleges throughout all parts of the country.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is true, I think.

Mr. HATCH. I now yield two minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say that thirty-nine colleges of the States and Territories of this Union stand ready to-day to receive this money. Many of their representatives are here now in the city; and without taking the time of the committee to discuss the measure further, it is only necessary to say that if this appropriation is made it can be at once available within thirty days. If you delay it now, these colleges, which have filed their credentials, can do nothing for a long time to come.

Mr. STEELE. The agricultural college at Lafayette, Ind., stands not only ready, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, but anxious that this appropriation shall pass.

Mr. MORGAN. Thirty-nine institutions throughout the country are in the same condition, having filed their credentials, and only wait this appropriation.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACDONALD] to have a letter read.

Mr. MACDONALD. I send to the desk to be read a copy of a letter which has been received by every member of the Minnesota delegation, addressed by the professor of agriculture of the State university to the president of the board of regents of the university. I will only say that we all agree with the gentlemen who have spoken on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

AGRICULTURAL-EXPERIMENT STATION,
UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA,
St. Anthony Park, Minn., January 11, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the following facts, and to request that you will take such action in the premises as you may think advisable:

You are aware that what is commonly known as "the Hatch bill," passed at the last session of Congress, establishing agricultural-experiment stations in the several States, failed to become operative for the reason that the appropriation specifically provided for was not made.

The Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the First Comptroller, has included in his communication to Congress, making estimates for "urgent deficiencies," an item covering this appropriation, upon the ground that "it was evidently the intention of Congress to have the money paid the current fiscal year, and that several institutions had acted upon that interpretation, and had incurred expenses in good faith under the provisions of that law."

This "estimate of urgent deficiencies" was ordered to be printed December 22, 1887, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and this subject is now before that body for their action.

In order to secure for our State the benefits of a measure which has received the most hearty approval of all friends of progressive agriculture, it is very important that the attention of our delegation in Congress should be called to this matter and their assistance earnestly invited. It is very important that the bill be watched, and that this item be held in its place until passed.

This appropriation will enable the board of regents to perfect the organization of our station as authorized by our Legislature, and as already entered upon, so far as funds at their disposal will permit, while its failure will postpone for another year lines of work most urgently demanded by the farmers of Minnesota.

Yours, respectfully,

EDWARD D. PORTER,
Professor of Agriculture and Director of Station.

Hon. H. H. SIBLEY,
President of the Board of Regents of the University of Minnesota.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask the Clerk to read the communication on the back of the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. PAUL, January 13, 1888.

Respectfully forwarded to Hon. J. L. MACDONALD, M. C., with the earnest request that he will give the measure referred to, which is of so much importance to this State, his personal attention and support.

HENRY H. SIBLEY,
President Board of Regents.

Mr. HATCH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. WASHINGTON. I merely want to say a few words to the House on this measure. I ask the House to consider for a moment that the farmers of this Union, those men who pay the taxes and are the hewers of wood and drawers of water for the community, deserve some consideration.

I represent a large agricultural constituency. I come from a State where we are now turning the soil and beginning to plant our spring crops.

This is not a new appropriation. It is not a deficiency in the true sense of the word. It is simply asking authority from this House to the officers of the Treasury to pay out the money already appropriated, and to do it now, so that in due season we may begin our work in the Southern States at the planting time, the seeding time, which comes but once a year. If not done now, as has been said by the gentleman from Mississippi, it may as well go over another twelve months, so far as we are concerned. I hope there will be no further opposition to the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4881, had instructed him to report it back to the House without amendment, and with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILKINS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for one hour for the consideration of bills.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT MELBOURNE.

Mr. BELMONT. I call up for action at this time a joint resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs; the joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the British Government has extended to the Government of the United States an invitation to participate in the international exhibition which is to be held at Melbourne, beginning on the 1st day of August, 1888, to celebrate the centenary of the founding of New South Wales: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That said invitation is accepted, and that there be, and there hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to effect the purpose of this resolution, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State for the purpose of such representation at said exhibition.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to transmit to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditures which may have been incurred under the provisions of this resolution, together with any reports which may be made by the representatives of this country at said exhibition.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MORROW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States (Ex. Doc. No. 28) relating to the international exhibition to be held at Melbourne, beginning on the 1st day of August, 1888, to celebrate the centenary of the founding of New South Wales, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The importance of the proposed exhibition and the claim it has for our aid in the liberal display of American industries are indicated in the following note of the Secretary of State, referred to in the message of the President:

"To the PRESIDENT:

"I submit herewith a copy of a note to this Department from Sir Lionel West, Her Britannic Majesty's minister at this capital, extending an invitation to this Government to participate in the international exhibition which is to be held at Melbourne, 1888, to celebrate the centenary of the founding of New South Wales, the first Australian colony.

"As our social and commercial relations are daily becoming more intimate with the kindred people inhabiting Australia, it would seem to be very appropriate that this country should officially take part in an exhibition which is intended to commemorate such an important event as the founding of the first of those Australian commonwealths which are now so great and prosperous. Moreover, as Australia was extensively represented in our centennial exhibition held at Philadelphia in 1876, it is very proper that we should reciprocate by accepting the invitation to take part in the similar exhibition to be held at Melbourne. I therefore respectfully recommend that the accompanying papers be communicated to Congress, with the suggestion that the invitation be accepted, and that the sum of $50,000 be appropriated to defray the expenses of a commission to represent the United States at the exhibition.

"This Department is advised that many American manufacturers have already made application for space in the Melbourne exhibition, in expectation of the appointment of a commission to represent this country there. As it appears from Sir Lionel West's note of the 21st ultimo that the time for making applications for space for exhibitors will expire on the last day of the present month, it will be necessary for Congress to take very prompt action in order to prevent serious injury to American interests in the premises.

"Respectfully submitted.

"T. F. BAYARD.

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
"Washington, December 19, 1887."

Concurring in the views expressed by the Secretary of State, and believing that it is highly important that the growing commercial and social relations between this country and Australia should be encouraged in every proper way, the committee recommend the acceptance of the invitation so kindly tendered; and for the purpose of participating in the exhibition in an appropriate and effective manner the committee recommend an appropriation of $50,000 to defray the expenses attending a proper official representation.

For this purpose the joint resolution herewith reported is recommended for passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that this joint resolution is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask consent that the joint resolution may be considered in the House.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the joint resolution which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales.

The CHAIRMAN. The joint resolution has been read in the House. If there be no objection, its first reading in committee will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. BELMONT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. MORROW. I hope this resolution will pass without opposition. It is proposed by the people of Australasia to celebrate this year the centenary of the founding of New South Wales, an event which derives its importance from the fact that it was the initial movement of the English people in the occupation of that part of the globe. The island-continent of Australia has an area of about 3,000,000 square miles, or about the area of the United States, not including Alaska. New Zealand, which with Australia constitutes what is known as Australasia, has an area of about 104,000 square miles.

These two great islands in the South Pacific are rich and wonderful in resources, and give promise of a great future in the commercial affairs of the world. The population of Australasia now exceeds three millions of people, engaged in prosperous and growing industries, with a commerce extending to all parts of the globe, inviting enterprising people to the exchange of products and manufactures. In 1880 an industrial exposition was held at Melbourne, to which other countries were invited. It was less general in its character, and as an international affair less important, than the proposed exhibition of the present year, but it attracted attention in the commercial world and did much to develop a commerce in the Pacific.

The United States participated in that exposition, and Congress appropriated $20,000 for the expense of an official representation at Melbourne. The money was well expended, for it was the means of greatly extending our commerce in that direction. For the year 1880 our exports to Australia amounted in round numbers to $4,700,000. Immediately succeeding the exposition they rose rapidly until 1886, when they amounted to more than $11,000,000. As this is a matter of considerable interest to the business people of this country, I beg leave to call the attention of the committee to an extract from the report of Mr. Pickering, who represented the United States at the Melbourne exhibition of 1880. He says:

As a nation the United States has done remarkably well, receiving, in proportion to the number of exhibitors, a larger number of awards than at any previous exhibition. I am pleased to be able to announce that, as a rule, our exhibitors have sold more goods and received more orders in proportion to the amount exhibited than the exhibitors of any other nation, a very large proportion of the exhibits from the United States being of a class of goods well adapted to the wants of the people of Australia.

The truthfulness of this report has been more than established by the character and extent of our commerce since that time, and on this point I beg leave to call attention to the following interesting statistics:

Value of merchandise imported into and exported from the United States from British possessions in Australasia.

It will be observed that the exports and imports for the year 1886 show a balance of trade in our favor amounting to $7,274,941. Certainly such a showing as this will justify us in accepting the invitation of the British Government to participate in the coming exhibition, and in making the appropriation of $50,000 provided for in the resolution, to make a creditable official appearance on the occasion.

While on this subject it may be well for us to look at the character of the imports and exports for the past year. They show that our manufacturing industries are finding a market in this distant country, and it only requires a little enterprise to enlarge our commerce with Australasia to almost an unlimited extent. I ask leave to incorporate in my remarks the following report from the Bureau of Statistics:

WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, January 16, 1888.

The commercial importance of Australia is shown by the report of its aggregate trade, from which it appears that in the year 1884 (the last report at hand) its imports were valued at $311,045,158, and its exports at $264,834,910, making a total of $575,880,068. There can be no question, it seems to me, as to the value of intimate social and commercial relations with a people engaged in so much of the world's best traffic. In a letter from Mr. Ford, of the State Department, I find the following pertinent suggestion:

> Nowhere, save in South America, is there such a wide field for commercial enterprise offered to American manufacturers as in Australia. The pursuits of the people are mainly agricultural, and as such require machinery, in the manufacture of which we excel.

I am presenting these facts because I desire that the members of this House shall understand and appreciate the importance of our affairs on the Pacific, not merely on account of the present matter, but because of their bearing on other subjects that will come up for consideration in course of legislation.

I desire to say, further, that the coming exhibition at Melbourne is not merely a colonial display; it is an international affair, and will receive the patronage of the leading nations, and the interest taken in our action is indicated in the following report of James M. Morgan, consul-general at Melbourne, to the State Department. He says:

> Great interest is manifested in the great international exhibition to be held in this city in 1888, being the centennial of the colonization of Australia, and many inquiries are made as to the probable interest which can be awakened in America upon the subject.
> The remarkable growth and prosperity of this city will be appreciated when the accompanying statistics are read.
>
> * * * * * * *
> The city of Melbourne and suburbs contain 313,000 people, and during the past year there have been erected in the city proper and its suburbs 5,533 buildings.

A number of our merchants in different parts of the country have already engaged space at the Exhibition building for the display of our manufactures and products, and I am assured that they are prepared to make a representation that will be a credit to the country and a pledge of our friendship in the enterprise that shall develop the vast possibilities in that quarter of the new world.

There is another interesting fact pertaining to our relations with Australasia. There has been much discussion as to the measures that should be taken to increase our merchant-marine service. There are strong objections urged in some quarters against anything in the shape of subsidies. I am not going to discuss that question now, but I want to call your attention to the fact that the Government of New Zealand is to-day paying a line of American steamers, running from San Francisco to Auckland and Sydney, an annual subsidy of $150,000. In the face of this liberality in the aid of our merchant-marine service, we can not well decline this kind invitation. There is, in fact, every inducement for us to take advantage of this occasion and make such a liberal display of our manufactures and products as will still further advance our position as an enterprising people and entitle us to a fair share of the world's business in that direction.

Mr. BELMONT. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, my colleague on the committee [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the joint resolution which has been called up by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs will be adopted, and that the invitation of the British Government to the United States to participate in the international exposition to be held at Melbourne next summer will be accepted. This question has had mature consideration by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the committee unanimously recommend the adoption of the joint resolution. Australia is a vast island continent. It comprises about 3,000,000 square miles of territory, and has over five millions of population. It is one of the richest countries in the world, and our social and commercial relations with that country are daily improving. When this Republic held its centennial exposition in 1876, Australia was largely represented. Various manufacturers of the United States have already asked for space at the exposition which is to be held at Melbourne in August next, and it is but in keeping with our custom to authorize our Government to send commissioners there, and to make a small appropriation of money for the purpose of having our country properly represented on that occasion. The exposition proposed to be held commences on the first of next August, and is to be what they call a centennial exposition in commemoration of the organization of their first province, New South Wales. There are five leading provinces in Australia—New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, and Western Australia—and the committee believe that it will be of advantage to our country to encourage our people to exhibit specimens of our arts, our products, our minerals, and our manufactures at that great exposition.

In 1862 the United States sent commissioners to the London Exposition, and many remember that even at that time our country took many medals and stood very high in the competition among nations. In 1873 there was held at Vienna an international exposition, and the Congress of the United States appropriated $200,000 to pay the expenses of commissioners and to secure proper representation at that exposition. In 1878 the Paris Universal Exposition was held, and the Congress then appropriated $150,000 in order that our country might be properly represented there. The joint resolution under consideration asks for only $50,000, and I believe that we ought to be properly represented at this Australian exposition in accordance with the desire of our people generally, which is in favor of keeping our country abreast of all other nations, in favor of showing how we have advanced in arts, in manufactures, in agriculture, and in all the elements of national progress. I believe it will not be long before we shall have in this country a grand centennial exposition to commemorate the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, and these very countries that are now asking us to send delegates to help them with their exposition will be called on by us to participate in ours.

It may be but a short time until we shall call upon all the civilized countries of the world to come here to help us to celebrate in 1892 the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, and witness the success of free government and the triumph of peace and prosperity in our great Republic. This appropriation, therefore, is in the proper line. As Australia helped us in 1876, so she will probably be called upon to participate with us again in 1892, and as all the civilized countries will be invited and be present with us on that grand occasion, it seems to me entirely proper that we should now make this small appropriation of $50,000 asked for by the Secretary of State to enable our country to be properly represented at the Melbourne exposition next August.

Mr. BELMONT rose, but yielded to Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like to remind the House, because it may not come to the memory of all those around me, that Philadelphia was the pioneer city of these expositions in this country, and that only a few months ago we had present there representative men from all parts of the country, who came to participate in the celebration of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States by the convention which sat in Philadelphia. In justice to the proposition now before us, I want to say from positive observation that no country on the face of the earth sent more intelligent commissioners or more people to this country during that centennial exhibition than did New South Wales and that portion of the world.

It is not necessary for me to point out how these celebrations, wherever they may be held, advance the interests of commerce and the general business of civilized life. The great centennial exposition held in Philadelphia from the 10th of May to the 10th of November, 1876, attracted millions of people, including citizens of all nationalities; and we there saw the progress of commerce, agriculture, and the various arts and sciences displayed in such a way as perhaps may never again occur in this country.

The people whom I have the honor in part to represent will rejoice at the vote of the members from the city of Philadelphia, and from the State of Pennsylvania, for this proposition, believing that by just such means the progress of the world is promoted; and we thus learn from each other what in our short and busy lives can not be learned from books in regard to the industrial pursuits that conduce to the happiness and pleasure of mankind.

Mr. Chairman, I like to call attention to what has been done by the people of Philadelphia, and I rise more especially to recall to the minds of members here the success with which that city and its people carried on the Centennial Exposition of 1876, and how, with equal success, they carried on a few months ago, to the delight of hundreds of thousands of visitors, the centennial celebration of the adoption of the Constitution by the Convention in 1787.

Mr. BELMONT. As this measure has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and appears to meet the general approval of members of the House, I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

Mr. CRAIN. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise can not be put so long as any gentleman desires to offer any amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the words "that said invitation is accepted" in the first section; and strike out the second section.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I think, in view of the statements which have been made by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL], the United States ought to accept this invitation which has been extended by the British Government to have this country participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne, to celebrate the founding of New South Wales. I am satisfied there are some gentlemen on this floor who do not know the geography of this world sufficiently to determine the exact location of New South Wales. While I had a general knowledge of the fact that it was part of Australia, and was under the government of the British Empire, I am not ashamed to confess that that was the limit of my knowledge with respect to the situation of New South Wales. Hence, for my own information, as well as for the information of other gentlemen who may desire to vote intelligently on this important question, I have sent to the library for an atlas which contains a map of Australia, and which shows exactly where New South Wales is located, my object being to learn from an inspection of this map and from the commentaries accompanying it, the importance, the grandeur, and the magnitude, in territorial extent at least, of the province of New South Wales. I trust that I shall not be taking up the time of the House unduly in support of my amendment (which limits the action of this House to an acceptance of the invitation, while it cuts out the appropriation) if I read from this authority—Colton's General Atlas with Descriptions—a statement in regard to New South Wales.

I am opposed to an appropriation for this purpose, because I belong to the party which believes in "economy, retrenchment, and reform," and I do not believe in measures which are introduced for the purpose of making appropriations the result of which necessarily will be to keep up the iniquitous burdens and the odious inequalities of the infamous tariff system under which the people of the United States now suffer. I think it will be honor and distinction enough for any gentleman, whether he be a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs or a private citizen, to be selected by the President of the United States to represent the grandest country on God's earth at this great international exhibition at Melbourne, New South Wales.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRAIN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. VOORHEES obtained the floor, and said: I desire to yield my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Now, New South Wales is described in this atlas as "stretching along the Pacific from Point Danger"——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend a moment. Under the rule regulating the five-minute debate the Chair is obliged to recognize now some gentleman who desires to oppose the amendment, if any gentleman wishes to be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. CRAIN. My present amendment is to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair under the rules must recognize some gentleman who desires to oppose the amendment. If that rule were not enforced, when the Committee of the Whole is proceeding under the five-minute rule the two sides of a question might not be fairly heard.

A MEMBER. Nobody is opposed to this proposition.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. VOORHEES] has yielded to me.

Mr. VOORHEES. If it be necessary in order that I may yield my time to the gentleman from Texas, I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. I am again obliged to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any gentleman desiring to oppose the amendment, the Chair must recognize him. [A pause.] If not, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] to occupy the time of the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. CRAIN. Let me proceed to read:

NEW SOUTH WALES.

New South Wales stretches along the Pacific from Point Danger—

That is the point we are approaching if we adopt this resolution, which appropriates $50,000 of the toiling millions for the purpose here indicated. [Laughter.]

—(latitude 28° 06') to Cape Howe (latitude 37° 32') and west to the one hundred and forty-first meridian. On the north it is bounded by Queensland, on the west by South Australia, and on the south by Victoria. Extent north and south, from 316 to 631 miles, and east and west, from 557 to 728 miles.

Coasts, surveys, etc.—The coast line presents in general bold, perpendicular cliffs of sandstone in horizontal strata. Occasionally the cliffs are interrupted by low, sandy beaches, some of which stretch for a considerable distance inland. Indentations of the shore are numerous and remarkable for the excellence of the harbors they form. The most conspicuous of these are Port Macquarie, Port Hunter, Broken Bay, Botany Bay, Jervis Bay, Sussex Haven, etc. Most of these contain flourishing seaports, and are the seats of population and wealth.

It might be a better thing for this country, Mr. Chairman, if we were to send quite a number of the people accused and convicted of crime to Botany Bay than to send this commission to represent this country at Melbourne. [Laughter.]

The surface of the interior is much diversified, and presents in its general features a succession of hills and valleys, mountains and plains.

A most remarkable country.

A mountain range, varying in height from 3,000 to 6,000 feet, extends north and south nearly parallel with the coast, and at a distance of 30 to 50 miles inland. The intervening space between the mountains and the sea is partly broken by spurs and ramifications, but descends from the west with more or less rapidity, and has a generally undulating surface, intersected by water-courses—in some places well wooded, and in others covered with a dense brushwood.

Now, a word in regard to the industries of New South Wales—and I commend this to the special consideration of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and also to those gentlemen on both sides of the House who are in favor of cutting off the tariff on wool—because the tariff question, as you will observe, underlies this whole proposition. [Laughter.] If, therefore, you vote for this proposition, you vote to keep up the tariff on wool. [Laughter.]

Agriculture and grazing are the chief industrial pursuits. The principal crops are wheat, maize, barley, oats, rye, millet, potatoes, tobacco, hay, etc.

If you repeal the internal-revenue laws taxing tobacco, you will ex necessitate rei, I suppose, repeal the tax on imported tobacco. And if you open the eyes of this people to the immensity of this country, to the largeness of its population, and to the extent to which tobacco is used in this country—to so large an extent indeed that some people regard it as a necessity instead of a luxury, like the people in North Carolina and Virginia who are clamoring for the repeal of the tax on tobacco—we will find this country then overwhelmed with large importations of tobacco from New South Wales. [Laughter.]

The vine is cultivated to a considerable extent and much attention is paid to the rearing of sheep and cattle.

I call the attention of the chairman of the Agricultural Committee to this important fact.

Manufactures consist almost entirely of articles of common use. Some woolen cloths are made, but the greater part of the enormous quantity of wool produced is exported raw.

It is for us to consider that fact—you friends of protection and you friends of revenue reform—that immense quantities of raw wool are exported from New South Wales, and if you vote to take the tariff off wool just stop and consider what will be the effect on this country when the manufacturers discover the almost inexhaustible amounts of wool produced in New South Wales. Yet gentlemen on this side of the House who profess to be revenue reformers are willing to vote with those who profess to be protectionists that the outrageous tariff system shall continue in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The question recurred on Mr. CRAIN'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 77.

Mr. CRAIN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. CRAIN and Mr. BELMONT as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 118.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCADOO. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 5 of section 1 by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting "five."
Also, amend line 8 of section 1 by striking out the word "such."
Amend line 9 of the same section by adding, after the word "exhibition," the words "by a commissioner appointed by said Secretary."

Mr. MCADOO. Let the section be read as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 1. That said invitation is accepted, and that there be, and there hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to effect the purpose of this resolution, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State for the purpose of representation at said exhibition by a commissioner appointed by said Secretary.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, there does not seem to be any amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey which does not look to the acceptance of this invitation. The purpose of the amendment seems to be merely to change the amount fixed in the original resolution, and under which the acceptance of the invitation shall be carried out.

I understand that the gentleman from New Jersey thinks $5,000 will be sufficient for that purpose. Our past experience in regard to matters of this kind teaches us that such an amount would be entirely inadequate.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York permit the Chair to state that the gentleman from New Jersey is entitled to the floor?

Mr. BELMONT. I understood the gentleman had yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York hereafter if he wishes to be heard.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I had not yielded the floor, and hope this will not be taken out of the time to which I am entitled.

I, sir, am as much in favor of extending our American commerce by all legitimate means as the Committee on Foreign Affairs or any member of that committee, but I do not believe that it will be broadened solely by the expenditure of large sums of money in sending an expensive commission to represent this country in foreign lands under British control.

Our great commercial rival, Great Britain, has not built up her own foreign commerce by any such system as that. The British merchant having once gained entrance by intrigue, pretense, or ruthless might, has studied the market to which he sends his goods; and the only way in which American commerce can be extended and our merchants can reap any advantage in the only foreign market open to us in South America, the Pacific islands, the West Indies, in China and Japan, is by private enterprise, by revival of American shipping, and the existing political friendship and affinity between those countries and our own, by American merchants in their private capacity, with enterprise and determination, going to those countries, or sending out our able and venturesome young men to study the wants and the habits of the people, their commercial needs and advantages, and determining in that manner the best channels into which our commerce can flow.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MCADOO. I would cheerfully yield, but as I have but five minutes, I would prefer to continue without interruption.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interpose at this time objection to the acceptance of this invitation of the British Government, although I have my own opinion as to its unselfishness and generosity. It is a long distance from San Francisco to the point where this exhibition is proposed to be held, and a very long distance indeed from the Atlantic seaboard to Melbourne, and $50,000, the sum proposed to be appropriated, is a ridiculously small amount, if we are to make a proper representation of the advance of America in manufactures, agriculture, the sciences and useful arts at this exhibition in the way of paying freightage for the exhibits furnished by our citizens.

If we are to expend any sum at all, and if the advance of our country in manufacturing and in the arts is to be properly represented at Melbourne, it would require $250,000 at least; and therefore it occurs to me that the expenditure of $50,000 is just so much money wasted—too much for nothing and too little for anything. You will only get for the expenditure of this $50,000, exactly what you would get from the expenditure of $5,000, as proposed in my amendment. You will be represented by a commissioner selected by the Secretary of State, a man, it is to be presumed, of discernment and capability; and the only result of his visit to the metropolis of the great Australasian archipelago will be the report he will make on his return as to what he saw, learned, and concluded.

I venture to assert that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs himself can not say to this House that by expending $50,000 America will be fairly represented in that exhibition. It is 3,000 miles, in round numbers, from New York to San Francisco, and it is, I judge, between four and five thousand from San Francisco to Melbourne. The cost of carriage of even a very modest exhibition of American manufactures or products of any kind from our seaboard States, or any part of the United States, to this distant city would cost, as I have said, far more than the $50,000 appropriated.

Now, sir, there is another feature of this resolution on which I wish to dwell for a moment. I doubt if we will ever successfully compete, at least not for the present, with British manufacturers in British colonies like New Zealand. I have always, for myself, believed that our legitimate foreign market was on the continent of North and South America; that from the extreme Arctic circle to that unknown country, the Terra del Fuego of the south, was the legitimate and attainable market for American goods, outside of our own splendid home market, in which America can hopefully look for primacy and for indisputable commercial supremacy.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 71.

Mr. MCADOO. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BELMONT. How much time remains of the hour?

The CHAIRMAN. But two minutes remain.

The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. MCADOO and Mr. BELMONT were appointed tellers.

The committee divided; but before the tellers reported the hour for the consideration of bills expired.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for the consideration of bills of this kind has expired, and the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne, to celebrate the founding of New South Wales, had come to no resolution thereon.

A. E. REDSTONE.

Mr. CRISP. I call up for consideration a privileged report, the report of the Committee on Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of A. E. Redstone, claiming to have been elected a member of this House from the Fifth district of California.

The report (by Mr. CRISP) was read, as follows:

In the Fifth district of California, at the election for Congress on the first Tuesday in November, 1886, there were four candidates: C. N. Felton, F. J. Sullivan, A. E. Redstone, and Mr. Henderson. The aggregate vote polled was some 33,000; of this number memorialist received 470. Memorialist served no notice of contest, took no evidence, nor in any manner complied with the statute in relation to contested elections.

Your committee have examined the papers filed by Mr. Redstone, which papers consist of said memorial and a statement signed by some fifteen citizens of California, and find therefrom that Mr. Redstone's claim is that neither Mr. Felton, the sitting member from the Fifth district of California, nor Mr. Sullivan, the contestant for said seat, received any legal votes, and that therefore he, Redstone, is entitled to the seat. In the opinion of your committee there is nothing in said papers which justifies this claim or renders it necessary or proper to further investigate the case, and therefore the adoption of the following resolution is recommended:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the papers filed by and in behalf of A. E. Redstone.

Mr. CRISP. The report explains itself. If no member of the House desires to ask any questions, I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL-BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. WILKINS. I desire to call up the unfinished business, which is the consideration of the bill H. R. 1733.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill to provide for the issuance of circulating notes to national banking associations.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. Is it proper now to raise the question of consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I raise that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa raises the question of consideration at this time. The question is, Is the House ready to consider the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like permission of the House to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether we might not have an opportunity for debate and amendment.

Mr. WILKINS. The gentleman from Kansas asks me if he can not have my permission for debate and amendment of the bill. I have been quite willing all the time that there should be the fullest debate on this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Then let us go at it now.

Mr. WILKINS. But the gentleman on the other side, my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], says that he will make no arrangement to allow us to come to a final vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. We are not talking now about a final vote, but about debate and amendment. As I understood last evening, the gentleman from Ohio was willing to consent there should be an opportunity for debate and amendment.

Mr. WILKINS. I am willing to agree to that, if gentlemen controlling this matter on the other side will agree that on some future day, or to-day at a particular hour, the previous question may be considered as ordered, so that we shall have ample time for debate and ample time for amendment and a full discussion of this matter.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And it will be understood that the previous question shall not be ordered until after amendments are offered?

Mr. WILKINS. Let it be understood that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at 4 o'clock on Thursday, or on Friday, if you please.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Why not go now into the debate and see what the bill is, and let the other matter take care of itself?

Mr. WILKINS. I am willing to agree to that, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] says he will not agree to that and will avail himself of all parliamentary tactics against the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman from Iowa is here to speak for himself. I made no such declaration. I said I was willing to have a season of debate, but did not wish the gentleman from Ohio or anybody else supporting the bill to misunderstand me. I said I am willing to have debate, but after debate I expect to proceed exactly as I have proceeded before. That is all I have said. I do not want to be misunderstood. I am opposed to the passage of this bill.

Mr. WILKINS. I have no desire to misrepresent the gentleman from Iowa. I quote his remark from the RECORD:

I have no objection to a season of debate on the bill when it comes up again, but I notify the gentleman from Ohio and the House now that I shall try to defeat this bill. If not able to do so otherwise, I shall try to accomplish that end by applying properly the parliamentary rules of this House.

Which means the dilatory motions we have been enjoying for the last three or four days.

Mr. WEAVER. The words the gentleman has quoted exactly state my position now.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make one remark. This bill is in the House and its friends can move the previous question on it at any time. Therefore I suggest, let the opponents of the bill be heard, and proceed now to discuss it; and at some future time the friends of the bill can move the previous question and bring it to a direct vote.

Mr. WEAVER. They have the right to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the previous question has been moved and the yeas and nays have been ordered upon that question. The pending question is, Shall the bill be now considered?

Mr. SPRINGER. This being a new consideration of the bill, it comes over as unfinished business, and the previous question is in operation on it, as I understand.

Mr. WEAVER. The previous question has been called on the engrossment and third reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the yeas and nays have been ordered on that.

Mr. SPRINGER. It can not be amended at all while the demand for the previous question is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentlemen in charge of the bill will allow the amendments to be offered. The opponents of the bill can not offer amendments in its present condition, and they may have some pretext for delay until they have an opportunity to offer amendments. I do not think there will be unnecessary delay after fair opportunity has been had for offering amendments and considering the bill. If after that a majority of the House desire to pass the bill, they should have the right to do so.

Mr. WILKINS. If the gentlemen who are on the floor in opposition to the bill will make that statement I will accept it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What right has the gentleman to question our fairness in opposing this bill?

Mr. WILKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] that he has been fair all the time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I propose to be, but I propose also to have debate upon this bill.

Mr. WEAVER. What objection can there be to allowing the debate to proceed without any agreement whatever, except an agreement that we shall have debate and amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent in the present position of the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I understand that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be regarded as open to debate and amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered shall be considered as set aside.

A MEMBER. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the only motion which the Chair can now put. Is there objection?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I think that under such an arrangement as that speeches should be limited to some definite time. Let them be limited to fifteen minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. There isn't a man in this House that can talk longer than that, if he confines himself to what he knows of the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman judges others by himself.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most important matters brought before this Congress, and I think we ought to have a reasonable time for debate.

Mr. WEAVER. Let the debate proceed, and when the House gets tired, it can put an end to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be set aside?

Mr. WILKINS. Unless there is some limit to the debate, some hour fixed when the yeas and nays shall be considered as ordered, I must object.

Mr. WEAVER. We will not agree to a time. This is a bill involving very serious consequences, really involving the right of the banks to issue money from zero up to six hundred million dollars, and I am not willing at this stage to agree to limit the debate. Why not let the debate upon this bill go on for a reasonable length of time? The House can put an end to the debate whenever it wants to. I shall not consent to any such limitation as the gentleman proposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. The friends of this bill can at any time in the future put it in the very position in which it is now; that is to say, they can move the previous question upon it and order the yeas and nays. Therefore, they will lose nothing by setting aside the order already made for the yeas and nays and letting the debate proceed.

Mr. WILKINS. We shall go on and consume two or three days, and then find ourselves in the same condition that we are in now.

Mr. SPRINGER. We shall have the light thrown upon the bill by the discussion, though.

Mr. WEAVER. Two or three days is not too much time to devote to this measure. The bill has been brought in here in a great hurry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state the question. The proposition is that the order for the yeas and nays already made shall be set aside by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. WILKINS. Unless there is some limitation as to time I shall object.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the question of consideration. Will the House now consider the bill?

The question was taken; and the Chair declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 8.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to act as tellers.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that we had better have the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILKINS. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 55, not voting 117; as follows:

YEAS—151.

So the House decided to consider the bill.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The roll-call having been concluded,

Mr. MANSUR said: My name was read among the names of those voting in the affirmative. I did not vote on this question. If I had voted, I should have voted in the negative.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. BLAND, is still confined to his house on account of illness. If present he would vote "no" on this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will announce the pairs.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice on all political questions:

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GAINES.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. E. B. TAYLOR.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. WHITE, of New York.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. BACON with Mr. J. D. TAYLOR.

Mr. CATCHINGS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, with Mr. BOWDEN.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. ROMEIS.

The following pairs were also announced:

Mr. MCCORMICK with Mr. PENINGTON on all political questions until the 28th instant.

Mr. FORD with Mr. CUTCHEON, for this day, on the bill of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. LAWLER, on this subject.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. STONE, of Missouri, on this question.

Mr. TAULBEE with Mr. SHIVELY, on this vote.

Mr. BLISS with Mr. BRUMM, on this question.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. FITCH.

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. BAKER, of New York.

Mr. BIGGS with Mr. FELTON.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. WISE with Mr. HIRES.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House at this time two executive communications, as it is important that they be printed and referred without delay.

CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, called for by resolution of the House adopted January 11, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates from the Secretary of the Navy to be considered in connection with the urgency deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of consideration having been decided in the affirmative, the unfinished business, being the bill of the Committee on Banking and Currency, is now before the House for consideration.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question) said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 6, noes 91.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted, tellers are ordered; and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS].

Mr. OATES. I will inquire whether, under the rules, a quorum is necessary on a question of adjournment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a motion to fix the day to which the House will adjourn; and for the decision of that question a quorum is necessary. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. HIESTAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 2, nays 219, not voting 102; as follows:

YEAS—2.

Campbell, T. J. Mansur.

During the roll-call,

Mr. PAYSON said: I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of the day:

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. DE LANO.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn till Friday next.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it not be better to adjourn than to waste time as we are doing?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Allow me to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it not be better to allow discussion and amendment of this bill than to attempt to force it through in this way?

Mr. LONG. I make the point of order that to-morrow at 3 o'clock has been set apart by special assignment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to be heard on that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House can adjourn over notwithstanding that assignment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Of course it can.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 37.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. WILKINS.

Mr. SOWDEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth not voting in favor thereof.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is disagreed to, there being 12 in the affirmative and 37 in the negative.

And then, on motion of Mr. WILKINS (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 19, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 28, 1887, calling for certain information in reference to the listing and patenting of swamp and overflowed lands to the several States, a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and other documents relating to the subject; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of John E. Evans and 21 others, citizens of Salt Lake, Utah, praying that all goods produced in whole or in part by convicts shall be plainly marked "convict labor;" which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a resolution adopted by the Produce Exchange of Toledo, Ohio, favoring the adoption by the Government of a postal telegraph system; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of A. B. Gibson, of Havana, Ohio, praying that his name be placed on record as major in the One hundred and sixty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers as having been relieved by reason of disability May 12, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of George Gross, M. D., of Washington, D. C., praying for the creation and temporary support of a botanic hospital and home in Washington, D. C., for the sick, in connection with a free school for the medical education of women; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Andrew Ingraham and others, members of the faculty of the Swain Free School of New Bedford, Mass., praying for the enactment of an international copyright law; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CHACE presented a petition of the Friends' Temperance Union of New York, officially signed, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional amendment to prohibit the alcoholic liquor traffic throughout the national domain; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HARRIS presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Chattanooga, Tenn., favoring the raising of necessary revenues for the support of the Government by a tariff upon imports so adjusted as to prevent unequal burdens and encourage the development of our material resources, and at the same time afford just compensation to labor; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present the petition of John McClary Perkins, of 61 Court street, Boston, Mass. He asks that the patent laws of the United States may be so amended that patents shall be granted substantially as they were before the law of July 4, 1836, the first patent law, of 1790, authorizing the grant of letters patent to any person who applied in proper form and paid the required Government fees. In 1835 the Secretary of State informed the public that patents were issued in the order of time that proper documents were received at the Patent Office. In 1836 Congress radically changed the law regulating the grant of patents by providing that they should not be issued until the Commissioner of Patents should be satisfied that the subject-matter was really patentable. The object in thus changing the law was to obviate inconveniences resulting from the fact that because drawings and specifications in those early days were not published some patents came to be many times duplicated. Under the present practice, however, with the publication and sale at a merely nominal price of drawings and specifications immediately upon the issue of every patent, inventors can easily ascertain whether or not it will be profitable for them to obtain patents and to undertake to enforce such patents by suits in the court; and the reason of the change made in 1836 no longer applies.

Under the present system the memorialist states that the features of a judicial tribunal have been engrafted upon the Patent Office until now its machinery rivals in elaborateness that of the Federal courts, and yet after all the proceedings have been had in the Patent Office and a patent is issued nothing has been settled. The whole question must be fought over again in the courts the same as before the law of 1836.

The memorialist claims that the practice prevailing before 1836 of granting patents to all applicants is substantially the English system and that of all other patent-granting countries. The memorialist proposes as his remedy for existing evils to abolish the requirement of a Patent-Office examination before the grant of a patent, and to give to every inventor his patent on his filing a correct application therefor; and, if disputes arise between different inventors as to their rights, to let the controversies be settled by the courts alone, exactly as they in fact must be and are now settled. He states that the annual report of Judge Mason, Commissioner of Patents in 1855, presents very clearly the reasons why this change should be made; that Commissioner Foote, in his report for 1868, reinforces Judge Mason's recommendation, and that the ablest Commissioners of Patents have repeatedly pointed out the great injustice of the present system.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN presented a petition of citizens of Boulder, Colo., praying for the erection of a public building at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of G. Haynes and 89 other citizens of the Fourth Congressional district of Michigan, praying for the prohibition of the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. QUAY presented additional papers in explanation of the bill (S. 1364) to declare the sense of an act entitled "An act to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for moneys advanced Government for war purposes;" which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore I abstain from voting.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—29.

So the motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 276) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 290) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 544) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain which separates the islands of North Hero and South Hero, in the county of Grand Isle, in the State of Vermont, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1069) for the relief of L. A. Noyes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report adversely the bill (S. 633) to amend article 3 of chapter 354 of the United States Statutes at Large, passed at the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress, which is a bill providing for certain regulations at sea—regulations touching the lights. The last session of the Forty-eighth Congress adopted the revised international regulations for the prevention of collisions at sea. However desirable it might be to have the provisions of this bill, it would create great confusion to enact it into law, and therefore the committee instruct me to report that the bill ought not to pass, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report adversely the bill (S. 236) to amend section 4420 of the Revised Statutes so that vessels under 5 tons burden, and used for private purposes and not carrying passengers for hire, shall not be subject to license. Perhaps at some time, when inspection fees were very high and paid, there might have been some reason for exempting these small steam-boats. To-day there is no reason whatever for the exemption, and the committee is very decidedly of the opinion that it would be very unfortunate to enact into law any such provision as that asked for in this bill, and therefore they report it adversely. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CALL. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. The bill is reported adversely by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged and the bill indefinitely postponed, if no objection be interposed.

Mr. BOWEN. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 428) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment upon the claim of the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians, to report it with amendments.

I ask the Chair whether it is the custom of the Senate to grant leave to file a written report after a bill has been reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Written reports are always received at any time prior to action on a bill.

Mr. BOWEN. Then I give notice that I shall file a written report later.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1213) to punish robbery, burglary, and larceny in the Indian Territory, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

COMPILATION OF REVENUE AND APPROPRIATION ACTS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to which was referred a resolution in relation to a chronological history of revenue and general appropriation bills, to report back a substitute resolution with a favorable recommendation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution referred to the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLISON, January 9, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to compile, for the use of the Senate, from the Journals of the two Houses, the Annals of Congress, the Register of Debates in Congress, and the Congressional Globe and RECORD, a complete chronological history of revenue and general appropriation bills from the First to the Forty-ninth Congresses, inclusive, and for this purpose shall be authorized to employ an additional clerk, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund such compensation as shall be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute resolution reported by the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the substitute proposed by the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed, under the direction of the Committees on Finance and Appropriations of the Senate, to compile for the use of the Senate, from all available sources, a complete chronological history of revenue and general appropriation bills from the First to the Forty-ninth Congresses, inclusive; and for this purpose shall be authorized to employ an additional clerk, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund such compensation as shall be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This resolution imposing a charge upon the contingent fund will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, under the rule.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1547) granting a pension to Mary Ann Dougherty; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 1548) for the relief of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 1549) for the erection of a public building at Hudson, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1550) for the relief of Charles A. Danolds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE introduced a bill (S. 1551) to provide for the construction of a public building in the city of Grand Haven, State of Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1552) for an increase of pension to Oscar K. Rogers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 1553) to provide for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a public building at Oakland, Cal.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1554) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Sacramento, Cal.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 1555) granting a pension to Charles W. Gore; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1556) granting a pension to Martin N. Kellogg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 1557) for the relief of William Coakley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1558) for the relief of William G. Galloway; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 1559) to quiet title to certain land in the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I ask leave to make a report at this time a little out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the report if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments.

This is the old deficiency bill which failed to become a law at the last session of Congress. I shall, at the close of the morning business to-day, ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take it up for consideration, and try to have it passed in the course of the next hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it amended in various ways?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it ought to be printed, so that we can see it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the bill may be printed with the amendments.

Mr. HALE. The bill as received from the House of Representatives is in full print, and the amendments submitted by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate are but few in number, all written out, and will be readily appreciated and understood by every Senator when they are read. Of course, the Senator can insist upon their being printed. If he does so, the bill will go over as a matter of course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it ought to be printed. Appropriation bills ought not to go through without our seeing the amendments in print.

Mr. HALE. Then I give notice that, with the leave of the Senate, I shall call up the bill early to-morrow, after the morning business.

Several SENATORS. We have agreed to adjourn over.

Mr. HALE. Then I shall call it up on Monday, the next day of the session of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, it was Ordered, That the petition of N. K. Gould be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the Senate a statement in detail of the plan of legislation referred to on page 23 of his report to the President for 1887, and thought by him to be needed for the disposal of the public timber lands, so as to secure at the same time "the preservation of the natural forest lands at the headwaters of navigable rivers, and put within the reach of settlers a legal means of providing themselves with timber for building their homes, fuel, and other domestic purposes."

POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. SAWYER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report such arguments, statements, and evidence as may be heard by said committee on the subject of postal telegraph, and also to have printed such portions of the same as the committee may deem necessary.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that a resolution which comes over from yesterday may be taken up, and, if there is no objection to its present consideration, that it be acted on now. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to lay before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska coming over from a former day.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. MANDERSON January 17, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to make investigation and report to the Senate what steps have been taken by the Omaha and Council Bluffs Railway and Bridge Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and if he shall find the construction of said bridge has been commenced, to investigate whether said structure is in accord with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1887, and plans and specifications heretofore approved by the Secretary of War, and whether said bridge is being constructed as a combined railway and wagon bridge, or a wagon-bridge only.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. I should like to inquire whether it was the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska that has just been adopted. I did not catch the whole of it.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is directing the Secretary of War to investigate as to the construction of this bridge, and to see whether it is being constructed in compliance with the law and on the plan prescribed by him.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon. I was not sure as to its terms. If it is only what the Senator says, I have no objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. While the galleries are being cleared I desire to offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not receive business while the order of the Senate is being executed.
